A New Year's Resolution:—The Thanhouser TWO-a-Week EVERY Week!

THE THANHOUSER

"GREATEST JANUARY"

CHECK 'EM AS YOU GET 'EM—"GREATEST JANUARY" AT A GLANCE

☐ JAN. 16 (Tuesday)

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE," Robert Louis Stevenson's Most Powerful Story.

☐ JAN. 19 (Friday)

"A NIAGARA HONEYMOON," First of the Niagara Falls Scenic Gems.

☐ JAN. 26 (Friday)

"EAST LYNNE," (two reels) Greatest Filminization of the World's Best Known Drama.

☐ JAN. 30 (Tuesday)

"AS IT WAS IN THE BEGINNING," Another Wonderful Make - You - Think Picture.

RELEASED TUESDAY, JAN. 9

"Greatest January's" Cutey Reel

"Just a Bad Kid"

was she, brimful of mischief and the joy of being young. Her frolics will really delight your audience—what audience doesn't like to watch the antics of a healthy, happy, lively child? And your audience will have naught but sympathy for the child when they see the sad end that threatens to her pranks. Especially since the child is the cunning "Thanhouser Kid." This is an exceptional "cutey" picture. Get it.

RELEASED FRIDAY, JAN. 12

"Greatest January's" Mystery Sensation

The Twelfth Juror

is a spectacular mystery story that will keep you guessing and puzzling until you reach the great jury room scene, near the end. There the Twelfth Juror explains everything to your own and the jury's satisfaction and dispels all your doubts and fears. His simple enough story GRIPS you as it grips his fellow jurors—and it sets an innocent man free. It is the most startling, tricky, "twisting" plot we have ever had to do with.

EXTRA! Three and Eight Sheet Posters for "DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" and "EAST LYNNE"

You can secure from your exchange three and eight-sheet posters for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and "East Lynne." The supply of these posters is limited and it is requested that you give your exchange NOW an idea of how many you will require.

The Photographic Excellence of the Following—named Essanay Photoplays Has Never Been Equalled and Will Seldom be Surpassed

RELEASED TUESDAY, JAN. 2nd

The Mail Order Wife

(Length, approx. 1,000 feet.)

A photographic masterpiece, unique in its delightful plot, and excellently acted.

RELEASED THURSDAY, JAN. 4th

The Valley of Regrets

(Length, approx. 1,000 feet.)

The story of a woman's life, wrecked through a husband's neglect. A drama as poignant and pathetic as the world-famous East Lynne. Another photographic gem.

RELEASED FRIDAY, JAN. 5th

This is a howling good comedy which will have your audience in hysterics. Do not fail to book it. It will do you good to "hear that fat man laugh."

RELEASED SATURDAY, JAN. 6th

A remarkable Western drama with a remarkable child actress. This little girl's cleverness will win much applause. The story is a crackerjack.

Essanay Western photoplays are in a class by themselves. They are superior, in all features, to all other Western photoplays made by any other firm, anywhere.

Sunday Comedy

Now makes possible a well-balanced program for the seventh day of the week and affords clean and wholesome subjects particularly suited for Sunday audiences.

FIRST RELEASE Sun., Jan. 14

A NATURAL Domestic tale, witty, snappy, effervescent with gaiety, yet pure in theme as December's Snows.

Jealous Julia

With GUSSIE HUNT, late of the Vitagraph Co., in the leading role

Jealous Julia proves conclusively that time and money coupled with able direction and capable talent may produce pictures of more than passing merit. Novel settings, unique effects, acting of a high order and rare photography, beautifully treated in tints and tones, go to make a clever story, worth while.

A Set of Real Photos Free

or

THE CHILD OF FATE

From Thomas' Famous Opera

Released Sunday, Jan. the 28th

A classical "photopera," produced for the first time with American players, on American soil, and worked out along lines that would be most appreciated by American audiences.

The picture moves with the rhythmic action and inspiring harmony of the opera. Indeed, the production has been so arranged that all the important pieces from the opera may accompany the exhibition.

Just a line about "CHRISTMAS PRESENTS." This release has been postponed from Sunday, December 31st, to Sunday, January 7th. Send in your orders if you haven't done so. The picture is an all-year-'round winner.

ECONOMICAL BROWN

Released Wednesday, January 10th

Economical Brown is a man who spends his money in the lavish entertainment of friends on the outside, but tightens up as soon as he reaches the threshold of his own home. He preaches constantly to his wife on the principles of economy, but she listens to him without patience. She soon teaches him that it is better economy to be extravagant at home and economical on the outside.

BLACK SHEEP

Released Friday, January 12th

A never-do-well son of a poor inventor pursues and blackmails his sister, who has married a wealthy man. This woman is ashamed of her brother, so she pays him not to claim relationship. Not satisfied with the little he gets, he breaks into his sister's own home and is about to burglarize the place when detectives, who have shadowed him for a former offense, interfere. The black sheep tries to make a get-a-way, but is shot dead in the attempt.

Modern Electrical Construction

By Henry C. Horstmann and Victor H. Tousley

A perfect guide for the beginning electrician, giving him all the theory needed in practical work in addition to full practical instructions. For the journeyman electrician it is no less valuable, because it elaborates and explains safety rules in vogue throughout the United States.

The National Electric Code, or Chicago rules governing electrical construction in all its phases, are given in full, and will be found to be an indispensable guide for the moving picture operator and also for the electrical worker. Numerous illustrations are interspersed throughout this section, showing correct methods of wiring and electric contruction.

"The Winning of La Mesa"

(Western Drama. Release, Jan. 8. Approx. Length, 1000 ft.) A young minister's reformation of Pretty Peggy, and an entire mining town. Bristling with whole-hearted Western Adventure, scintillating with the quick wit of early West, this picture well illustrates the effect of environment versus instinct.

"The Locket"

(Western Drama. Release, Jan. 11. Approx. Length, 1000 ft.) Showing that gamble lust—soul-destroying, enervating, that bends the strongest will and makes its victims derelicts. A Drama that will clinch and hold to the very last picture.

"The Relentless Law"

"Justice of The Sage"

1911, So Long!

Yet it wasn't so long! Every seven days we had a new week, and the first Thursday of each week we had a new Rex, which gave the exhibitors a week-end that was a strong one. 1911 passed—but Rex did more than that! 1911 is a dead one, and we will not associate with it any longer. 1912 is up-to-date, so for about twelve months we will release in 1912.

For You

we wish all the prosperity, happiness and contentment it is possible for the just-arriving young year to yield. May your heart be happy and your spirit light!

We wish you success!

S-u-c-c-e-s-s is one way of spelling it. R-e-x is another!

For our first release in young 1912 we have a theme as old as the years, but as new as January. It's a good start, and you'll start at its realism.

"The Parting of the Ways"

A VILLAGE ROMANCE

A cute little story of how John Cummins, a rich society man, wins out in his wooing of a pretty little country girl, who is being sparked by Si, the clerk of the general store. Cummins believes that all is fair in love and war, and Si soon sees that he has little chance. In a fit of anger the clerk one day drops a bag of potatoes on Cummins' foot; this gives the society man an excuse to lay up for a few days at Flo's house, and the little girl waits upon him beautifully. This close association settles the matter, and Cummins wins the pretty little villager.

Length about 1000 feet

The Surgeon's Heroism

This picture is a very dramatic one and contains what may be termed five or six powerful situations. Still it is a love story supported by accident, incident and a pretty strong tinge of jealousy. However, all ends happily and a wedding is in the cards.

Length about 1000 feet

A Noble Enemy

A very dramatic love story in which two U. S. naval officers contest for the hand of a beautiful society girl. Clara Morgan favors Lieutenant Gray, and the rival is Lieutenant Ward. The latter has discovered that a treacherous Japanese has tampered with the gun in Gray's turret, but has kept the knowledge secret. Gray has, however, saved Ward from drowning and Ward is confined to his cabin. Miss Morgan and some friends visit the battleship and request Gray to fire the gun just for their amusement. Ward hears of the peril to Gray and others and, leaving his berth, rushes in just in time to avert a tragedy.

Split Reel. Length about 1000 feet

A POOR EXCUSE THAT WORKED

This is not a "Taming of the Shrew" story, but the fooling of one, so beautifully that she is tamed for good and all. Harry Allston's wife was inconsistent, but the little episode shown in the photoplay made her good. Thank goodness. This is a short reel with a long lesson.

THE TRAMP AND THE BEAR

Two gentlemen of the road, while passing a furrier store, noticed a stuffed bear. They decided it would be a good scheme to get a little change, so they borrow the bear, unbeknown to the owner, and by one getting into the bear they will fool the public. They, however, meet their Waterloo and receive a severe beating for the amusement they have had.

Terry McGovern had most of his fights practically won in the first round because he always got away to a good start.

And the start is half the scrap—just the same in the motion picture business as in the prize ring. A bad start and you're up against a handicap all the way—a good start and everything favors your success!

The difference between a good start and a bad start in the motion picture business depends chiefly on the machine you buy. It is poor economy to buy a cheap machine. Get

Facts and Comments

THE European censors of motion pictures seem to have gone mad. In Sweden the other day a picture was interdicted for the most curious and incredible of reasons. The picture bears the title "The Great Moment," and makes mother love the central theme of the story. At the peril of her own life a mother saves her child from death. The censor of Stockholm, a lady, barred the picture because it appeared from the story that the child was not begotten in lawful wedlock. It is difficult to be parliamentary and, in the case of a lady censor, to preserve the rules of gallantry in the face of such stupendous foolishness. A woman's love for her own offspring is one of the primal instincts of nature, and exists and astonishes the world quite irrespective of the fact whether there was a marriage or not. Indeed it very often happens that in the case of a woman "who stooped to folly and found too late that men betray" the love wasted on a worthless male creature finds its recompense in a deeper affection for the child. To have the censors make a decision of this kind in the country which, within recent years, held the record for illegitimate births, would be laughable if it were not so painfully hypocritical.

IN looking at quite a number of films produced recently by foreign, especially English, makers, it would seem that the actors have developed their art strictly on the Chinese plan. For the benefit of those gentle readers who have never been to a Chinese theatre we want to say that a Chinese actor faces instant dismissal if he should in an unguarded moment try to be natural. He wears a stereotyped smile in what are presumably the comic parts and an equally stereotyped frown in the tragic scenes. The artists whom we saw in the theatre on Doyers Street never varied their exprssion the minutest fraction of an inch. We could have borne the frowns when the yellow Thespians were killing an emperor or a mandarin, but their smile was too much for us, and we fled. It was upon seeing a funny English reel the next day that we were reminded of the Chinese style of acting. There are some American makers who employ actors and actresses of the celestial type of acting, but they are the exceptions rather than the rule. The continued failure of British productions in this country is to be attributed in some degree at least to this "wooden" way of acting.

THERE are to-day but very few large theatres in this country which have not, at some time or other, opened their doors to the motion picture. The great feature films of the clean and wholesome kind have opened scores of great theatres within the last six months and, aside from the question of financial profit, these features have done and are doing missionary work on behalf of the motion picture among the best elements of the population. They have made converts to the art and the pleasures of the cinematograph by thousands and tens of thousands. It is the quality of these converts which counts. Theatregoers who had looked askance at the motion picture as an invention for the special benefit of unwashed boys and pronounced "lowbrows," date their change of heart from the moment of witnessing some great feature film in the big theatres. It is said that, in some portions of the country, patrons of the motion pictures come to their favorite entertainment in automobiles and carriages. The number of such patrons will increase, we sincerely believe, as the years go on.

THAT eminent body of statesmen known as the New York Board of Aldermen seems to find itself unable to agree on the ordinances for regulating moving picture exhibitions, proposed by Mayor Gaynor. It is much to be deplored, that the ordinance is likely to become an issue of aldermanic politics. From recent discussions in the board it would appear that at least one of the city fathers is financially interested in the moving picture business. When the distinguished body was addressed by a citizen on the question of censorship and the suggestion was made that a censor should possess some literary knowledge, the aldermanic wrath rose high at what was considered an implied reflection on the notoriously non-literary character of the municipal Solons. While our belief in the vitality of the motion pictures makes decided optimists of us, we cannot help "viewing with alarm" the absorbing interest evinced by the Board of Aldermen in the motion picture situation. Mayor Gaynor's proposed ordinance is characterized by that same keen practical sense, for which the Mayor is so justly admired. We do not contend that it is perfect, but it has numerous commendable features and is a step in the right direction. We sincerely hope that it will pass.

In this connection THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD feels bound to emphasize its position in favor of uniform State legislation instead of a mass of local regulations, differing in each village, town and city. Pennsylvania and Massachusetts and some other States have this desired uniformity of law to-day and it should be the aim of exhibitors everywhere to place the control of the business in the hands of the State rather than parts of the State. The benefit of such legislation is twofold—it prevents "graft" and it takes the business out of politics. Experience furnishes ample proof of these advantages. Before the State undertook to control excise matters in New York, the excise question was a dominant issue in every campaign and corruption ran riot. Since the enactment of the State license law the excise question has passed out of politics and "graft" has been reduced to a minimum.

THE action of Fire Commissioner Johnson in interfering, on grounds of public safety, with the free exhibition of pictures in some public schools in the Borough of Brooklyn was, we believe, prompted by laudable motives and not intended to stop the exhibitions. In the meantime the popularity of these exhibitions ought to convey a great lesson to manufacturers. With small effort at least a dozen or more manufacturers could organize a special department of educational films with regular release days. The system, without which all educational films have but a small value, could be supplied by expert pedagogues, who, we feel assured, would be glad to lend a helping hand.

Wake Up! This is 1912!

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHEN a pastoral is being thrown on the screen it may be realism for Bridget and the grocery boy to hear the drummer ring cowbells a la New ar's Eve, or a small bunch of unwashed shockheads y be thrilled by the imitated clatter of hoofs when a bster Square actor in sombrero and spinach trousers ses a Carlisle Indian in war-paint over the Jersey adows, but a lot of people are as weary of the prim- e orchestra that shakes a sand box for rippling streams biffs a base drum in the solar plexus whenever a nedian falls over a pin, as they are of the reckless penditure of film stock made on plays only suited to nitive minds. Are we a lot of weaklings? The noble man, who used to sell land that he never bought or d for, drink up the proceeds and then murder the chaser in cold blood, is becoming immortalized, while pioneer who cleared the way for us to enjoy a coun- worth while is accorded the appreciation usually given hose who lay down their lives for their fellowmen—he moving pictures.

Ve are not a nation of cattle herders, and our civiliza- n is not that of the stage-coach holdup. Except in ated communities and emigrant dumping-grounds our ple are progressive, mentally active, music-loving and k to appreciate whatever is beautiful in the arts. We pass other nations in quality of photography as in our iodicals, in the manufacture of pianos, in the attend- e at colleges, in whatever directly contributes to gen- enlightenment, hence my prophetic spirit may not e been soaring in the clouds when it foretold "some- g new" as a logical development of the present photo- y.

here have been some interesting offshoots from the n line in the way of news films recording events of time, and some presentations of historical, scientific educational value, but the playwright, in following main road, has to deal with human life and its prob- s. He must focus his attention upon present existence its future possibilities. He may peer into the veil ar as his imagination can be projected, but there is e use of his trying to make over old clothes to suit ern fashions. If he expects to entertain an American ic it is up to him to forget as quickly as possible old ries and prejudices. The drama must keep pace with ual enlightenment even if it does not stimulate curi- y as to what is coming, instead of lagging back and ng over dead issues in a vain effort to find a few ers of thought.

rt in any form is merely a means of expressing what are or hope to be. We can raise our eyes to the al without apprehension about leaving this sphere re our feet are so solidly planted. The drama, ther of the stage or of the screen, can aspire to the est ideals when deep human interest is kept well in d, when it sounds a note that awakens throbbing re- se in those who are hoping, struggling, succeeding ailing in our midst. There are themes of infinite ety at hand. The social battle for justice to those do the world's work, the adjustment of compensa- to labor, the right of common people to liberty and pursuit of happiness, the betterment of humanity ugh the prevention of crime rather than through its ection, the prevention of disease rather than its cure, prevention of infant mortality, and the prevention of ishness wherever theatrical trusts will permit, the conflict between material tendency and spiritual clarification, all these furnish subjects of widespread interest which the dramatist may handle with or without gloves as the case may require. Instead of poking around among the dead ashes of the past, the playwright had much better blow live coals into glowing flame that shall warm our hearts and brighten our way. His central idea must be modern, irrespective of the development. Whatever the setting—it may be ancient quite as well as modern—the thought to be stimulated must be in accord with the spirit of the times.

A distinct mark of progress is coming in the recognition of playwrights who have established a quality of performance, and this may be followed by an encouraging advance in compensation for their work. When that happens we will begin to see genuine plays on the screen, photodramas that will draw millions into the little theaters who would not be seen in them to-day. If a thousand-foot reel play costs a thousand dollars to produce in the positive, or a three-thousand-foot-reel play three thousand in the positive, it looks like a waste of time and material not to buy original plays worth ten per cent. of that amount for the best of business reasons. Every poor play is a fraud on the public and creates one or more enemies to moving pictures in general, whereas every fine play honorably conceived and paid for brings in new friends and attaches the old ones. It is a paltry economy and a false one to put out a feeble imitation of what was done in bygone years, even if it happened to suit our ancestors, and it is folly to imagine that people have not advanced since that time or do not recognize the imposition.

There is nothing the matter with the American audience, and anyone who belittles it simply publishes his own incapacity. Those who are ready and willing to make a generous outlay for the sake of fine starting point—a photodrama well worth the time, taste, attention and outlay necessary to turn out a production of merit—must form it in accordance with their own best conceptions of what is fitting, instead of listening to the advice of individuals of narrow viewpoint, and will eventually realize, as do the publishers, that all is not genius that scribbles. Seasoned publishers know that one novel by an experienced writer is worth dozens by amateurs as a business proposition. The successful author, like the competent dramatist, is generously recompensed and widely advertised, whereas the photoplaywright is accorded scant recognition and paid less in proportion to quality than any other element contributing to the success of the business. The plain truth, however unsavory it may be, is that the weak spot in production is the lack of photodramas really worth seeing. Any falling off in patronage at the theaters is largely due to the fact that the average of production is below the average intelligence of the audience.

I note with pleasure marked improvements in photography—mechanical details are in process of continual development—greater taste is being shown in the settings and costumes, the various companies of actors are gaining rather than losing in strength, and the direction of plays is better than it has ever been. Weak spots are the lack of suitable music at a large number of exhibitions, lack of managerial common sense in allowing musicians to interrupt rather than accompany the screen presentations, the exchange arrangement that seems to aim at hurting rather than helping the exhibitor, and lack of selective system in the distribution of releases; but these are minor issues when it is considered that a product of merit will serve the purpose of entertaining an audience in spite of intervening defects. The main idea is to keep present audiences pleased and add the support of millions who cannot stomach the stuff long deemed good enough for those who pay a low price of admission, and every line I have written has that object in view.

I have never claimed that the photoplaywright needs to have anything like the ability of a dramatist writing for stage production. He is one man in a million. Steele Mackaye says he must have "mechanical instinct, poetic fancy, sensitive sympathies, passionate fervor and vivid imagination, thoroughness in preparation, industry in elaboration, conscience in revision, courage in excision, and, dominating all this, that breadth of mind which breeds humility, and that depth of heart whose understanding love goes out in charity to all mankind." This is more or less true of the minor playwright, and he is subjected to conditions of directorial interference and faulty presentation that would kill many a stage play before it ran long enough to get a fair hearing. The photodramatist has to do without the emotional appeal of the voice, which makes action, gesture and facial expression that would appear to be ridiculous distortion on the screen quite natural and appropriate on the stage. Unless the accompanying music be composed or arranged especially for his product and creditably performed, his drama is rarely seen to advantage. He is forced, therefore, to utilize the profoundest emotions of the human heart and play on them through visual appeal, and even then by virtue of the situation he presents rather than the acting. He has to encounter other difficulties in the introduction of characters of close relationship, disposed of in few words by actors on the stage, and has to bring out character by what is opposed to it, by what it clashes against. He has to be an impressionist in art, flinging splashes of intense individuality upon the canvas to get the audience in close touch with the people of his swiftly-told story before he can put the situation up to them, otherwise no one in front cares enough about the personality of those in action to feel any interest in what they do. Then there must be an interwoven idea. Nothing is so disillusionizing to an audience, so dissatisfying, as a lot of preparation with no result, a handsome dinner service with nothing to eat. It seems to me that the successful photodramatist gets an exceptional schooling for presenting pictures on the stage because he is obliged to create plays that come as near as any to writing themselves.

This new art of moving pictures is virtually that of pictural drama. It is an offshoot of an art born in the time of Aristotle and brought into existence by Thespis from a form of choral union when Greek singing societies entertained vast audiences in the open. The opera is really older than the drama, the two approaching and merging in the grandest form of musical composition presented to-day. In exactly the same way we may look for an approaching and merging of the spoken story in action and the voiceless one projected upon a screen. Beautiful scenic effects on the actual stage will be backgrounds photographed from nature in varied color with all the prismatic hues shown in nodding flowers, sparkling water and waving trees, and realistic effects will be obtained with deep scenes showing silent action in the distance, while that in the foreground is going on with vocalization. But as long as it is possible to replace the voice with wordless music, the highest attainable presentation of motion pictures will be that already foretold as "photopera," and such dramas will be of sufficient length to occupy the time now used in an ordinary moving picture performance.

The grand photodrama will be one worth repeating over and over again wherever conditions warrant repet tion, and seven releases a week of meritorious production in amplified dimension will give the minor theaters i small towns a change of bill that will keep the box offic busy.

As soon as the present reckless hodge-podge become inadequate it will be well to reason out why people pa enormous prices to attend grand opera. They go to th supreme entertainment because they love music and th splendid stage spectacle, so that playwrights of the stag will be brought to a realization that language is inadequate without the visual stimulus and those of the scree that wordless dramas must be of sufficient magnitude t justify the especial arrangement of supporting music fo emotional effect. I would not be at all surprised to see a three forces, speech, music and the photographic art, a work in combination before the year is over, both in chea and costly forms of theatrical diversion.

After a careful study of the present systems of pr duction, rental and exhibition, as well as the trend show in plays using more than one-thousand-foot reels, the na ural conclusion is that there will be an advance in digni and magnitude of performance in small theaters and o artistic beauty in the big ones, with a composite improv ment that will result in larger profits for all but tho who are now responsible for empty seats in all classes o public entertainment. No intelligent manager, no comp tent dramatist, no experienced producer, is unaware o the important fact that the story in action is not enoug in itself to hold attention but must be supplemented b pictures that fill and delight the eye. The question o nice balance between the two is one of fine selective tas and combined effort on the part of all interested. Th public is growing more discriminating every day, i clined to subject methods as well as results to keen scr tiny, and theatrical men interested in the commercial r turns are beginning to recognize the necessity of i telligent response to large-minded demand. The ma agers in closest touch with those across the apr of the stage have eliminated the artificial lines th formerly existed between audience and actor in fin comprehension that "the people" are themselves and ou selves instead of two distinct divisions of society. Th are of us and we of them. With all its infinite variety manifestation, the human heart is much the same t world over, is tender in its rarely-sounded depths a reachable by the faithful presentation of any beauti truth. So with all of us sharing work in anything do that is well worth the while. It is up to the playwright incarnate whatever is dawning in common thoug through symbols convertible into picture, action or ot means of general communication, but he is only one several factors gradually harmonized during the evoluti of a play. So many and varied are the contributions a finished production on the stage or screen that playl will naturally yield to larger presentations of higher va even if they do not submerge the imagination of as the number of people expected to stamp it with

Dante's Inferno (Helios)

By W. Stephen Bush.

This work is a base and clumsy imitation of the magficent product of the Milano Films Company. All the eat and striking features of the original Milano creaon are omitted entirely. With two exceptions every ene has been "borrowed" from the Milano Films Comny and invariably spoiled in the "borrowing." There is pretense of art; the thing is evidently a very hurried fort to give a very cheap edition of the marvelous iginal. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD cannot prevent is imitation from seeking a market, but it would be dly lacking in artistic conscience and be derelict in its ty to its readers if it failed to put upon this product e stamp of its most emphatic condemnation.

From the first this inferiority is plain to even the unught eye. Nothing could be finer than the opening enes of the Milano production; no effort has been ared to live up to the letter as well as the spirit of ante. Nothing could be cheaper than the opening enes in this Helios make. The title boldly promises us e sight of the wild beasts that bar the path of the poet ward the sunlit summit, but there is no performance on e screen. This petty swindle well characerizes the irit of the whole production.

One cannot see without profound admiration for poet nd film-maker the splendid and impressive way in which e descent of Beatrice from Heaven and her interview ith Virgil are presented in the Milano film; but there is othing but pity for the poet and censure for the filmaker for the almost laughable manner of the imitation. he cheapest manufacturer in this country would recoil om such an attempt.

The early scenes in the Milano film, just as in the oem, lead up to the most impressive part, the City of Dis, e Inner or Deeper Hell. The imitation leaves out the ity of Dis entirely, not a trace in the Helios make of the urney through the Stygian lake, the tower on the shores Dis, the signals of lights from circle to circle, the comg of the rescuing angel, the opening of the gates, the ppearance of the Erinyes on the ramparts, the den of the rpents, "the college of the mourning hypocrites," though the latter, too, is falsely promised on the screen. would far exceed the limits of this article to point out e other omissions.

The sins of omission, however, are as nothing comared with the sins of commission in the Helios affair. It shocking to the average spectator to see an actor laugh hen he is supposed to present a tragic part. It is a ecies of disrespect to the public, which the latter is quick resent. In the Helios make at some of the most tragic arts the supposed sufferers laugh heartily. Perhaps they w something funny or thought what a joke on the ublic this film would be; that may explain, but does not xcuse. The fate of Caiphas, the high priest, who conemned Jesus to death, is portrayed with sublime power the Milano film and borders on the absurd and uninelligible in the inferior production. I cannot stop at every ene, but with one exception every scene is mangled; the ea taken from the superior creation and the execution ntrusted to cheap and incompetent hands.

The Helios make, it is said, contained more scenes than re now left. It appears to have been reduced in size fter it came to this country. How far this reducing procss has assisted in spoiling it still further it is impossible say. Before we are willing to believe that the "scisoring" has been necessary, we should like to have had ome evidence that it was done by competent hands. No ch evidence was submitted.

Gross Injustice to Film Producers

ARTICLE I.

THE recent order of the Appellate Division of the first department in this State, restoring a jury verdict of $12,500 in favor of Binns, plaintiff, against the Vitagraph Company of America, defendant, should be of deep interest to every person connected with the manufacturing branch of the motion picture industry. In view of the importance of this decision and as a basis for the ideas and suggestions outlined in this article, we subjoin a brief resumé of the facts in the case above named as they appear from the judicial records.

The plaintiff, Jack Binns, had won considerable fame through saving the steamer "Republic" by persevering at his post as an operator of the wireless telegraph. The Vitagraph Company shortly after Binn's display of heroism, released a film, called, if we remember rightly, "Saved by Wireless." The picture was based on the action of Binns and no attempt was made to conceal that fact. Prior to the enactment of a special statute, passed by the legislature of this State in 1909, Binns would have had no legal grievance against the Vitagraph Company. In order to thoroughly understand the situation it is necessary to quote the law of 1909 verbatim. This law consists of two clauses, which read as follows:

> § 1. A person, firm or corporation, that uses for advertising purposes or for the purposes of trade, the name, portrait or picture of any living person without having first obtained the written consent of such person, or if a minor, of his or her parent or guardian, is guilty of a misdemeanor.
> § 2. Any person, whose name, portrait or picture is used within this State for advertising purposes or for the purposes of trade without the written consent first obtained as above provided, may maintain an equitable action in the Supreme Court of this State against the person, firm or corporation so using his name, portrait or picture to prevent and restrain the use thereof; and may also sue and recover damages for any injuries sustained by reason of such use, and if the defendant shall have knowingly used such person's name, portrait or picture in such manner as is forbidden or declared to be unlawful by the last section, the jury, in its discretion, may award exemplary damages.

Under this law Binns instituted his action and the jury "in its discretion" awarded the exemplary damages of twelve thousand and five hundred dollars.

Never was there a more senseless perversion of law and never was there a more flagrant injustice.

In the first place the defendant cannot fairly be charged with having used the plaintiff's name and picture for "advertising purposes" or for the purposes of trade. In the second place it is utterly absurd to speak of a "right of privacy" in connection with an event of so eminently public a character as the service rendered to humanity by the plaintiff. The newspapers and magazines exhausted their vocabularies and their pictorial art in glorifying the deed of Binns. For the time being Binns was a public character and every agency used to disseminate information had an absolute constitutional right to publish his name and his picture. The "law of privacy," as it is called, was passed to protect individuals against having their names and faces made trademarks for the sale of merchandise. In the case of a well-connected, refined young woman, whose picture was used by a firm of flour merchants to help the sale of their product, the Court of Appeals decided adversely to her claim for damages, commenting on a lack of positive law to enforce her rights of privacy. Similar offenses had been committed against the privacy of individuals by advertisers, whose enthusiasm outran by several miles their sense of decency and justice. To say that a moving picture representation of Binns was a greater invasion of his privacy than the printing of his picture in the press is a howling absurdity. As our juries are noted for their howling absurdities, we were not surprised to see them render a verdict of exemplary damages against the defendant. The fame of Binns was then on every lip and the masses of the people had ideas in regard to the profits of moving pictures, rarely found beyond the walls of a retreat for the feeble minded.

Happily the outraged sense of justice found an eloquent voice in the person of Justice of the Supreme Court, Samuel Greenbaum, who in reducing the ridiculous award of $12,500 to $2,500, said some very true and pertinent things. As showing the disposition of a genuinely judicial mind toward the motion picture much of his opinion is worth quoting here, aside from its bearing on the direct question at issue. Says Justice Greenbaum:

". . . it seems to me that, while he (plaintiff) had an undoubted right to determine for himself and to what extent and in what way he would utilize his fame and reputation for gain, the fact, that he did not object to the advertising of his name in the business enterprise of an exhibition based upon the same heroic adventure as that which formed the subject of the moving picture exhibited by defendant must be considered in determining to what extent, if any, he suffered mental distress by the acts of the defendant. To my mind the jury . . . was either swayed by passion or prejudice or was perhaps affected by the quite natural admiration one has for the heroic act of the plaintiff. . . . In one of the papers it was asserted, that the defendant realized upwards of $300,000 from the moving pictures in question, when, as a matter of fact, there was not a scintilla of evidence upon the subject of the profit or money receipts of the defendant. . . . In view of the fact, that it appeared upon the trial, that plaintiff did not object to the wide publicity his name and picture received by reason of his heroic act, that he was not averse to the pecuniary advantage that his name and reputation gave him and that the representation of his achievements in the moving pictures of the defendant was not calculated to belittle the act of the plaintiff, but to glorif" him and his heroic deed in somewhat the same manner as the newspapers and magazines did in publishing accounts of the thrilling scenes connected with the heroism of the plaintiff, I cannot find, that the plaintiff was seriously hurt in mind by the acts of the defendant. It did not appear that any one had indicated, that the moving pictures in question had lowered him in the estimation of others."

The reasoning of Justice Greenbaum is as sound as it is plain and simple and must, it would seem to us, appeal to every person, gifted with average intelligence and an ordinary sense of fairness and justice. Upon grounds, mainly, of a technical nature, the Appellate Division has reversed the order of Justice Greenbaum and restored the verdict of the jury in its original form. On these grounds and on the necessity of legislative relief for the film makers, irrespective of the final decision in the Court of Appeals, we propose to speak at some length in our second article on this extremely important subject.

DALLAS UNIONS ASK FOR SUNDAY SHOWS.

The labor men of Dalls, Tex., are coming out strong in favor of the theaters and motion picture shows being allowed to run on Sundays. At their meetings they are passing resolutions that attack the attempt to enforce the Sunday law in that respect. Two unions passed such resolutions recently at their meetings condemning the action of the county officials in discriminating against the theaters and moving picture shows in enforcing the antiquated Sunday closing law, and setting forth the injustice of depriving the workingman of his constitutional rights by closing harmless and inexpensive amusements to him on his only day of leisure.

LEON ARDOUIN SAILS TO EUROPE.

Leon Ardouin, manager of the Lux, Los Angeles, studio, came to the New York office of the Moving Picture World on Saturday, December 23, with the news that he was just about to sail for France, where he will spend a few weeks in the interest of the Lux Company. Mr. Heinould is filling the vacancy left by Mr. Ardouin. Mail addressed to Mr. Ardouin care of the Moving Picture World will be promptly forwarded to him.

The Outlook in Indianapolis.

Interesting Review of the Motion Picture Situation in the Hoosier Capital.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

WITH a population of 233,000, Indianapolis has 5 moving picture theaters. The theaters are small, the great majority having accommodations for only 200 or 300 people.

In a beautiful up-to-date city like Indianpoalis, I expected to find a much better type of picture theater, and far better projection than can be claimed at present. There is one gratifying fact, however, to record and that is, an almost complete absence of cheap vaudeville in picture theaters. Indeed, there are only four theaters in the city, one Licensed and three Independent, using cheap vaudeville and pictures.

The cheering news was also learned that Dickson & Talbot—formerly owners of the Park Theater, and at present running the Orpheum, which gives the only 10-cent picture show in the city—will shortly begin work on a magnificent new picture theater in the business section. The site of the new house is valued at $350,000, and it is proposed to spend $75,000 on the building. Messrs. Dickson & Talbot are two of the most substantial citizens in Indianapolis and own extensive real estate and business interests.

It would be ungracious to omit mention of the Vesta Theater, owned by J. H. Harrell, and located in the residence district. This house, which is conceded to be the most attractive in the city at present, will seat 500 people. Manager Harrell prides himself on the quality of his service and books every feature and special subject released by the Licensed manufacturers. Only 5 cents admission is charged.

The Idle Hour, another theater in the residence section, has also a seating capacity of 500. It was running Independent service until a short time ago, when it was purchased by H. M. Dickson, who was arranging for Licensed service during my stay in the city.

There is no doubt that the small capacity of the picture houses in Indianapolis has worked to the disadvantage of exhibitors, as many people who favor pictures are disinclined to subject themselves to the discomforts of a store theater, poorly ventilated. Besides, as already referred to, there are many of them in close competition, which means careful figuring to make ends meet and show a small profit.

I would most respectfully, and in the most friendly spirit, remind the exhibitors of Indianapolis that the present standard of projected pictures is low. The chief fault lies in the screens used. I viewed pictures on glass screens and aluminum screens, where the finer photographic effects were wholly lost. Perspective, half tones, sky effects and definition were ruined by the fierce brilliancy. I even heard some exhibitors talk with pride of "a nice bright picture," and some of them did not draw the distinction between a "mirror" screen and a "glass" screen. In the latter the rays of light enter the ground surface of a glass plate, and pass through it to the eyes of the spectator, the operator's booth being placed behind the screen, in the rear of the house. Such a screen is even worse than the aluminum smear, and both rob the pictures of high technical merit and artistic worth.

The best pictures seen by me while in the city were at the Orpheum, owned by Dickson & Talbot. Here there was a large mirror screen, 20 feet by 18. Pathe's great feature, "Cain and Abel," was being run and a steady, soft, well defined picture was shown.

Indianapolis Exchanges.

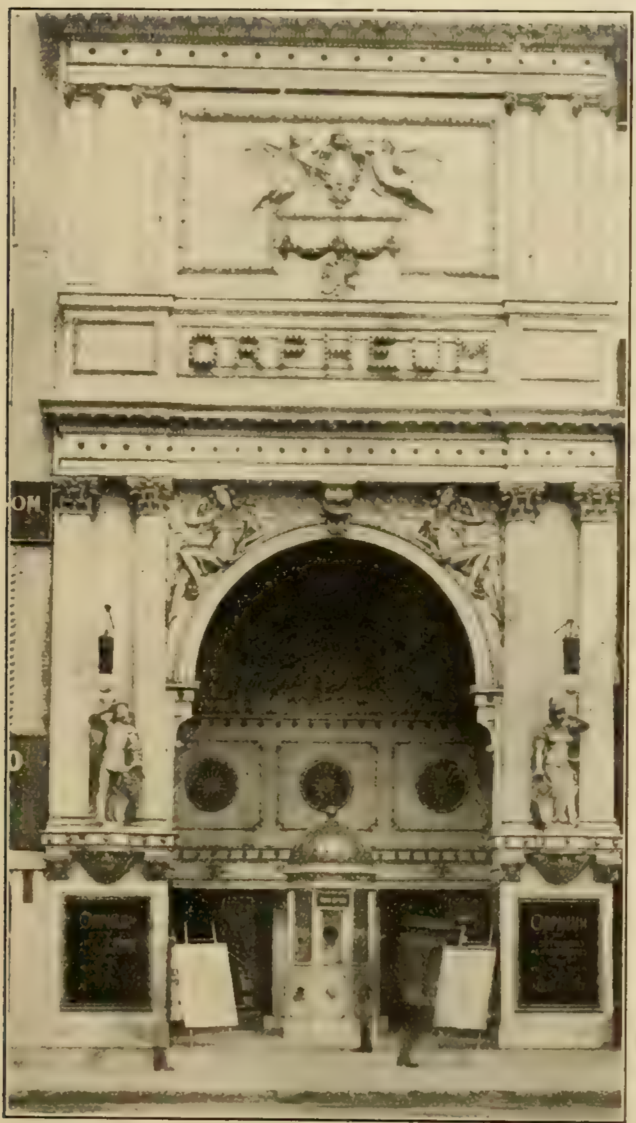
Robert Lieber, manager of the Indianapolis branch of the General Film Co., with his proverbial courtesy, aided me every way in his power to cover the city. Mr. Lieber assured me that the general business of the Licensed product was satisfactory and that he is taking on new business steadily. "Never in my experience have I found the general class of subjects of such high standard and quality as at present," said Mr. Lieber. The office force of this branch is highly efficient, H. Brient, Floyd Brown and Louis Baum being in charge of the principal departments. Thirty-three Indianapolis houses are furnished service by Mr. Lieber. The offices are at 24 W. Washington Street.

The Central Film Service Co., at 119 N. Illinois Street, attends to the wants of Independent exhibitors. The stockholders and officers of the company are J. H. Spellmire, president; B. V. Barton, treasurer, and Chas. Olson, secretary. A. F. Beck is the energetic manager of the exchange. Mr. Beck informed me that business was big, but that theaters were suffering somewhat from the approaching holiday season. The prospects, however, looked very good for Christmas and New Year's Day, in his opinion.

The Central Film Service Co. has branches in Cincinnati, Ohio, and Davenport, Iowa. Mr. Beck stated that this exchange is the largest purchaser of Independent films outside of New York City.

The Orpheum Theater.

The Orpheum, already referred to in this article, is at 44 E. Washington Street. The house was built specially for moving pictures by Dickson & Talbot. It has a neat and imposing front, designed and built by the Decorators' Supply Co., of Chicago, as shown by the accompanying illustration. The capacity is 337. As has been stated, a mirror screen is used, the throw being 98 feet. K. R. Stickley, the operator, and an assistant have charge of the projecting room, which is well conducted. Superintendent Al Metzler keeps a watchful eye out in front as well as in the theater. The comfort of patrons is attended to carefully and good ventilation is preserved.



Orpheum Theater.

A fine Licensed service is used, consisting of three reels daily, with four changes a week. One spotlight and one illustrated song are used and three good voices—a tenor, baritone and basso—are heard, the chorus being taken up by all three. A pipe organ, which cost $3,000 is played by a special organist with fine effect.

Mr. Dickson informed me that it took nearly six months to educate his patrons to attend during afternoons. By persistence and by offering them good instrumental and vocal music, with a first class picture program, the Orpheum is now showing to the best people in the city. Mr. Dickson told me very emphatically that he would not show cheap vaudeville with pictures under any circumstances.

Dickson & Talbot's new house, when completed, will offer a strictly straight program of pictures with strong musical features. Its advent will accomplish much in educating the people of the Indiana metropolis as to the real value of high class moving pictures.

The Bijou Theater.

The Bijou, at 130 E. Washington Street, is owned by C. W. Cook and Walter Bowlby, the latter attending to the management. It is the oldest picture theater in Indianapolis. It seats 348 people.

Straight Licensed pictures and illustrated songs form the program. Three reels—first run for the city—are shown daily, with four changes a week. The hours are from 10 A. M. till 11 P. M., except on Saturday, from 9 A. M. till 11 P. M., and on Sunday from 1 P. M. till 11 P. M.

The seats possess a fine gradient, which permits a good view of the screen from any one.

The Bijou is handicapped by using one of the glass screens already referred to. Roy Perry, who has been an operator for over five years, is in charge of the booth. The latter is placed 35 feet behind the screen. An admission of five cents is charged.

Illinois Theater.

James H. Gavin is owner and manager of the Illinois, another Licensed house, situated at 113 N. Illinois Street. Mr. Gavin is an old baseball favorite and has wide acquaintance throughout the country. He was manager of the Indianapolis baseball club for 1907-09 and has been connected with the American League clubs of New York and Boston, being at one time secretary and treasurer of the Boston club and business manager of the New York club. He is familiarly known as "Joe" Gavin in baseball circles. He cast his lot with moving pictures in 1910, and is pretty well satisfied with his success.

The Illinois has a good location and seats 230 people. Two reels of pictures are used, changes being made daily. Only spotlight songs are used, the singer, Miss Nellie Cook, being an old favorite. The organist, Mrs. Stowra Green, is to be complimented for her talented playing.

Here again the pictures are too bright. A silver leaf screen is used, and the brilliant lights on the side walls contribute their share of damage to good projection. In several houses I was told that the police give orders that these brilliant lights must be used. I have no doubt that this is so, and would recommend the "indirect" lighting system—light reflected from the ceiling that will absolutely flood the house without injuring the picture. The pictures in the Illinois, while steady, lack sharpness and the finer photographic details.

Casino Theater.

The Casino, a cozy little house seating 168 people, is located at 42 W. Washington Street. The owner is Mrs. C. L. Sutherland, and the manager Sam Grimes. It is another 5-cent house.

The service consists of two reels daily, with changes on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday. Illustrated and spot songs are used. The orchestra is composed of a pianist and drummer. A glass screen is also used in this house, much to the detriment of the pictures. Brilliant lights in opaque shades are fixed on the side walls. Manager Grimes stated that he was doing a fine business.

Crystal Theater.

The Crystal is an Independent house owned by Barton & Olson. It is located at 119 N. Illinois Street and seats 250 people. The service consists of three reels, which are changed daily. Illustrated and spotlight songs are used. An orchestra of six pieces is also used at this house, but little effort is being made in this, or, indeed, in any other theater in Indianapolis, to play the pictures. I was told, however, that a new orchestra would be engaged on Thursday, December 14, that would be capable of furnishing the requisite music during the showing of the pictures.

Thomas Moss, the operator, has one assistant. He is a capable man and keeps his booth in excellent shape. He uses two Powers No. 6 machines. The booth is of cement and thoroughly fireproof. There is also a fireproof box in the booth for the safekeeping of reels not in use. The Crystal uses an aluminum screen. Here there was a fairly steady picture, well defined. I could not help noticing that the side wall lights were brilliant, set in hoods that reflected the strong light downward in the eyes of all those immediately in the vicinity. These lights should be set in opaque or green globes, if the police rules permit.

The Lyric.

The Lyric, an Independent house, also owned by Barton & Olson, with a capacity of 200, is located at 135 N. Illinois Street. Three reels are used, with a daily change; also illustrated songs and instrumental solos. There is an orchestra of five pieces. Two "barkers" are used in front of this house during the day. What a travesty on pictures! One would think he was going to a cheap carnival show at a country fair. An aluminum screen is also used at this house, and also bright lights on the side walls, without being shaded. This is another case where the police enforce the rule.

The operator, H. E. Shaw, and the relief man conduct the booth in a satisfactory manner. I met Carl Duncan, a singer, who has been employed by Mr. Barton for twelve years. Mr. Duncan was looking after the interests of the house, out in front, when I saw him. He reported fair business.

The Manhattan.

F. J. Rembusch owns the Manhattan Theater, an Independent house, at 136 W. Washington Street. The manager is H. H. Koch. The house seats 300 people. Three reels, changed daily, form the service. There is an orchestra of two pieces, except on Saturdays and Sundays, when it is increased to six pieces. Illustrated songs are used.

Here there is another glass screen with slightly better projection than observed by me in other houses using the same kind of screen. The Manhattan has a very pleasant and comfortable interior. The side lights are set in green opal shades, and French plate mirrors are inset in marble frames along the side walls. The house impressed me by its neatness and by its good ventilation. Manager Koch informed me that business was very satisfactory and that it had picked up considerably during the three months that Mr. Rembusch has owned the house.

An Acknowledgment.

I wish to express my indebtedness to Frank Zepp, special traveling representative of one of the leading Indianapolis film exchanges, for his kindness in taking me the rounds among the theaters and other places of news interest during my brief stay in the Hoosier metropolis. It saved me a great deal of time and, besides, gained for me introductions to quite a number of people whom I otherwise would have missed. Mr. Zepp has had a wide and varied experience in the film business, being familiar both with the rental and exhibiting departments. I stepped in to see his old theater, the Vaudette, on S. Illinois Street, opened about six years ago, and the second oldest picture house in the city. There Mr. Zepp cleaned up over $15,000 the first year, offering one reel at a nickel a throw. And this veritable hole in the wall holds about 100 people! It is still cozy and well ventilated at that, and is doing a fair business. Mr. Zepp ran it three years, but the building of larger and more comfortable theaters attracted its patrons elsewhere.

GEM THEATER, JEFFERSON CITY, MO.

We print herewith a reproduction of a photograph of the Gem Theater, High and Monroe streets, Jefferson City, Mo., of which Mr. A. E. Longenecker is the proprietor and manager. Our correspondent informs us that the theater is one of the best moving picture houses in central Missouri. It has a steel operating booth, measuring 7 x 9 x 7 feet high. Two machines with Gundlach lenses are employed, namely a Power's No. 6 and an Edison B, and a Mercury Arc Rectifier, manufactured by the General Electric Company. The place opened last August and has been doing capacity business since that time.

Bofinger and Field, managers of the Majestic Theater, Enid, Okla., have closed a three year lease on the entire building now occupied by the theater on South Grand Avenue, and announcement has been made that many extensive improvements will be made immediately.

Kleine to Release Cines Pictures.

To Take the Place of the Gaumont Product—First Release on January 20.

GEORGE KLEINE'S contract with the Gaumont Company having expired, his last release of Gaumont films will be made January 16, arrangements which have been pending with the Cines Company for some time having been consummated in a long-time contract between that company and George Kleine. There will be two (2) weekly releases of Cines films in place of the Gaumont under Mr. Kleine's license from the Motion Picture Patents Company; one every Tuesday and Saturday. The Urban-Eclipse reel will continue as heretofore every Wednesday.

The Cines Company has been extremely desirous of releasing its films as part of the Licensed product, and has never been affiliated with the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company. Mr. Kleine made the following statement Tuesday, December 26, when asked for the facts:

"Before closing a final contract with the Cines Company, I looked carefully into the merits of their product, with special reference to suitability for the American market, and concluded that no other European maker, excepting possibly Pathe, showed such efficiency as the Cines people. The demands of the London market are essentially the same as those in the United States, and in looking over the programs of the London theaters I found that the Cines product was represented in nearly every one of them.

"The Cines Company has a very large plant, with many producers, and a large staff of high-class performers, and I believe their organization to be most advanced and progressive.

"The output of the Cines Company averages five (5) reels weekly from which our two (2) weekly releases will be selected. Of the many advance productions that I saw in their studio in Rome, fully 90 per cent. were subjects of such a nature as to make great successes in our market.

"Our first Cines release will be made January 20, 1912. The subject is 'Brutus,' the film being an adaptation from Shakespeare's 'Julius Caesar.' I am willing to stake the reputation of the Cines product upon this subject, which is very beautifully staged and superbly acted. It includes the death of Caesar, Mark Antony's speech, the flight of Brutus and his fellow conspirators from Rome, the appearance of Caesar's ghost to Brutus, his death upon the battle field, and the Battle of Philippi.

"I am particularly pleased with many of the Cines comedies, 500 to 600 feet in length. They are of a refined character, without vulgarity, and they show genuine humor such as is appreciated by American audiences.

"The staff responsible for the Cines product is of the highest intelligence, ambitious, capable, and very wide awake.

"There are ready a number of films which were especially made with a view to the American market, and arrangements have been made by which there will be a continual output of subjects which will not only embody ideas that are attractive to our people, but which are staged with all the magnificence, the striking light effects and the perfect photography of the best European studio."

BIOGRAPH EN ROUTE TO CALIFORNIA.

On Thursday morning, December 28, 1911, the Biograph company of players to the number of sixty persons, under the direction of Producer Griffith, left New York via the D. L. & W. and Sante Fe railways for Los Angeles, Cal., where the regular winter campaign of picture making will be taken up. In the party, which filled two special overland coaches, was Mr. Lew Dougherty, the popular publicity man of the Biograph Company, and his wife and baby. Mr. Dougherty accompanies the players as scenario editor, and is looking forward to a very pleasant sojourn with his family in the land of perpetual sunshine.

QUINCY, ILL., HOUSES IN CHURCH FAVOR.

The Lyric Theater, 225 South 5th Street, Quincy, Ill., has recently been the recipient of favorable editorial mention in "The Western Catholic," a church paper of some magnitude. The Lyric is a house seating 400 and is under the able management of Mr. H. T. Loper, who is also the pripietor.

The Vaudette, also of Quincy, comes in for words of praise, both as to the conduct of the house and in recognition of its manager, Mr. W. W. Watts, as a benefit to the community. The Vaudette seats 500 and gives a high class entertainment.

The "Acting" Member of Essanay

"SHERIFF" G. M. ANDERSON FIRST TO MAKE WESTERN PICTURES, TELLS HOW HE GOT HIS START —SAYS FILM OF THE FUTURE WILL BE A BIG PRODUCTION—ENGAGES NEW LEADING WOMAN.

MR. G. M. ANDERSON, "acting" member of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, was in New York recently to attend his first meeting of the Motion Picture Patents Company and to pick from the choice collection of Broadway candidates a new leading lady for his company of Wild West photoplayers. Mr. Anderson was successful in his quest, as we shall observe later; he enjoyed his brief association with the big moguls of the Licensed picture interests and, on Sunday, Dec. 24, began his return trip to the wilds of San Rafael, Cal., where he holds the honorary position of Sheriff.

While in New York City, Mr. Anderson was, with much difficulty, rounded up by a representative of the Moving Picture World and "hog-tied" at a lunch table where the branding irons were properly applied. We discovered that he was "bridle-wise" and would stand without being staked out, so we proceeded to put him over the jumps.

Mr. Anderson's rise in the picture business has been little short of spectacular. A man of smaller mentality might have become very much inflated by such success as has come to him, but it is to his credit that prosperity has not disturbed the equilibrium of this Anderson, so he has not forgotten his beginnings.

"My first picture work was done for 'Pop' Rock," he said, drifting into a reminiscent vein. "It was about the time when injunctions were flying about and the film makers were a bit shy. I had an idea of a picture on Raffles and gave the plan to 'Pop' with a request that I be allowed to make the picture. He told me to go and see Smith and Blackton. Eventually the picture was made. Sometime after that I tried to make a deal with Harry Davis, but his plans did not appeal to me and I went to see George Kleine. I outlined my proposition to Mr. Kleine and suggested that we form a company to manufacture pictures. He couldn't see it, as he had a big importing business, and sent me to Mr. Selig. I had a hard time getting Selig interested, but finally made a deal with him on a royalty basis. With this to start on I took two women who could act and went to Montana to make 'hold-up' stuff—the regular melodramatic Western picture. These were the first of the Western pictures. After working this lead for a while I decided to try to interest George Spoor, in which venture I succeeded. The rest of the story you know.

"I have made Western pictures because I know that they are the kind that get the 'hand' all over the country. I have a definite idea of the kind of picture I want to make and write most of the scenarios myself. We do not pretend, of course, that we portray life in the West as it is at present, but we put life and romance into our subjects and they are characterized by the excellence of the work we do."

We suggested to Mr. Anderson that his experience in the business must have led him to form some opinion of the trend of the picture development beyond the making of Western subjects. His reply was gratifying:

"Film-making will develop along the line of big productions. The film of the future will cost $25,000 to produce. It will comprehend an evening's entertainment and will tell the whole story where we now give only an occasional scene.

Miss Vedah Bertram.

It is certain to be with the picture as it has been with the drama: the moment there is the least retrograde movement the public will begin to lose interest, and when that happens there will be an awful slump in the picture business. So it will be necessary for pictures to improve steadily.

"We hear a great deal about the poor business of the legitimate theatrical producers. They have no one but themselves to blame. It was their practice of putting on the road inferior companies to play New York successes until the public refused to stand for the deception. The old theater-goers will never come back to them, and they will have to wait for an entirely new generation of patrons before they recover the business lost. The same thing will happen to the picture producers if they do not continue to advance in the production of pictures. In amusements, business once lost does not come back."

Mr. Anderson spoke interestingly of his work in pictures and of the risks taken by the players, especially in the "chase" pictures. "In the deseperate riding and driving," he said, "it is a wonder that someone is not injured in every picture we take. When Miss Fisher was thrown from the coach I had visions of a $25,000 suit for damages, but, by the rarest chance, she was only slightly injured. We have learned to ride, though, and that is the one thing that helps most to make our pictures popular in the West. One thing the Western man knows is riding horses and, if you do not get on right, or if you grab the horn of the saddle, you are at once disqualified as a rider in their opinion. The Eastern people do not know about those things and do not notice the mistakes of the rider in the film, but every little thing counts in the West.

Mr. Anderson intimated that he had come on to New York more especially to secure a new leading lady for his company, and declared that he had found the one he was looking for. A little later we had the pleasure of meeting her—Miss Vedah Bertram, a graduate of Wellesley College. A glance at her picture as reproduced herewith should satisfy the most critical expert. Her expression is most pleasing and her manner is equally charming. If she comes out in the films one-half as pretty as she really is, she is certain to become a great favorite with the admirers of the Essanay Western pictures.

Miss Bertram is looking forward to some good work when she reaches California and believes that she is going to like the work, for this will be her first time in pictures. Mr. Anderson expressed himself to be well pleased with his good fortune in finding so pleasing a personality as Miss Bertram's and was confident that she would make good.

Upon leaving New York Mr. Anderson said that it was his intention to stop off for a week in Chicago and then to return to San Rafael and his work at once.

SCHOOLTEACHER BECOMES PICTURE CONVERT.

How Imagination Was Stimulated in the Pupils of One Chicago School.

Imagination is being kindled in the Chicago child and good books are for that reason more appreciated, according to one Chicago public school teacher. Motion pictures are given the credit.

It seems a far cry from the "nickelodeon" to the dramas and Shakespeare, according to this pedagogue, but the two go hand in hand, the one cultivating a taste for the other.

"When I first started teaching English," said she, "I found it almost impossible to interest my pupils in books that really are worth while. For a long time I thought it was ignorance on their part, but I soon found that many of those pupils who did not seem to care for books were in reality a great deal brighter than I ever had been, were quick to learn and had more retentive memories than I.

"Then I evolved the theory which I still hold—that only persons with good imaginations enjoy reading books. I talked to many of my pupils who did not enjoy reading and in practically every case I found the difficulty the same—they regarded a book merely as so many printed pages; there was no 'human interest,' as the phrase is. Before the moving pictures were as popular as they are at present I tried the scheme of working in reading in my classes in connection with history. I tried picking out historical novels for auxiliary reading and before I gave them to my class I gave a brief review of the historical facts touched upon. This gave fairly satisfactory results, for instead of being lay figures, the character in the books gradually came to be old friends to the readers.

"When the moving picture shows came into popularity, however, it was interesting to note the change. As I remember, we had been studying Shakespeare's 'Macbeth' and as usual the classes were making a dreary grind of the work. Then one morning my first class surprised me by manifesting real interest in the play. My astonishment increased as each succeeding class manifested ever growing interest. Finally I asked one of the pupils what had caused the sudden interest, and was informed that the Shakespearean drama was the subject of one of the reels at a nearby moving picture house the preceding night and the majority of my pupils had taken advantage of the opportunity to get acquainted with the play.

"After that I was a motion picture convert."—Chicago Daily News.

CANADIAN FILM MAN DROPS IN.

Mr. P. Kauffman, of the Canadian Film Exchange, Toronto, Can., was a caller at the office of the M. P. World last week. He reports business to be good in the provinces and said that great improvements were being made in the picture theaters. Western Canada, he said, was taking the lead in the matter of fine houses and that good pictures and good projection was the rule.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

FROM such widely divergent points as Gorton, England, and Little Rock, Ark., come miniature magazines, not so small, at that, offered to photoplay patrons.

The English publication is sent by E. H. Montagu, the Selig European agent, and he has thoughtfully marked the list to show that he is keeping the "Diamond S" product to the fore, as might be expected of "Monty." He writes:

> I am enclosing you herewith program of an English Moving Picture house which may interest you, as I think it has a new scheme of advertising. You will notice on the first white page the Weekly Competition, which seems a clever one, inasmuch as it makes everybody read the descriptions of all the films. The proprietor who sent me this sells his program at 1 d., and tells me he has a circulation of 14,500 weekly.

The publication is a twelve-page sheet, eight pages in white with a green cover. The white pages are wholly given over to the announcement of the films for one week, covering three changes of bills. The stories of the films as given in the bulletins are used and are illustrated where cuts may be had. As this is but the fifth issue only two-thirds of the advertising space on the four cover pages is taken, but this is merely a matter of hustle. In England all programs are charged for, two to twelve cents being demanded, and the audiences are used to paying for what is free over here, but many photoplay fans on this side of the water would be glad to pay two cents for such a publication.

A New Style Contest.

The contest to which allusion is made is fully covered in this quotation from the sheet:

> If you carefully read through this issue, the Reader will find a letter inserted in a word that does not belong to it.
> These letters, picked out, form three words, the name of a picture we are showing shortly.
> The first ten correct solutions sent in to the Manager will receive two best tickets free.

The idea is capable of being varied to suit conditions and does not differ greatly from the Mission theater contest recently described, save that it centers interest in next week's bill.

A little more attention to display would very greatly improve the appearance of the paper and a smartening of the few catchlines would also help.

The American Version.

The Photogram is published by the Gem Amusement Co., and edited by Saul S. Harris, the secretary of the company, who explains:

> Under separate cover, I am sending you a copy of "Photogram," a 16-page booklet telling the stories of the pictures to be shown at our two theaters, The Gem and The Royal. Being the only houses in this town showing the Licensed pictures, we can pick our programs and are in position to tell the stories of the pictures we will show. These booklets are delivered to our patrons free. Our next issue will contain more scenes from the pictures and in that way will be a much more complete booklet.

There are two small Lubin cuts, two Kalems and a number of the Vitagraph thumbnail cuts, but the bulk of the illustrations are Edison cuts.

The Photogram is a sixteen-page sheet, 7½ x 10½ printed on heavy book paper on which the cuts show up to as good advantage as in the original Edison Kinetogram. The front page offers cuts of the two theaters, both inviting structures, and a line cut that might profitably be replaced by advertising, since it does not bear upon the pictures. In an effort to make it look like a "regular" magazine. Mr. Harris seems to bear too lightly on the house advertising. If advertising is not wanted on the front kill the cut and use the space for an editorial or miscellaneous matter. The cut is out of place.

Kill White Space Where Possible.

That third of the page given over to the two cuts of the houses is too bare, and the cuts are not properly proportioned, one being two lines smaller than the other. The cuts should be made the same size and if possible framed in some special design. If it is not possible to have a line drawing made, the sparing use of "ornaments" will break the blank spaces. If this is done the names of the theaters can fall below the cuts, where they belong. The composition and make-up are amateurish, even for so young a paper and Mr. Harris should get in consultation with the printing foreman to improve the looks. At present it has too much the appearance of "job work," and does not create a wholly favorable impression.

Two things are to be avoided in a job of this sort, white space and conventional arrangement. The title, the theater cuts, the long line cut and the "box" at the bottom all form straight lines across he paper with nothing up and down to break the monotony. A special drawing in line to take in the entire front with mortise spaces for the two cuts and some type matter would prove a good investment.

"Interior Make-Up."

In the inside pages the same faults are apparent. On page three, for example, there is too much white. Boxing in the cut with a frame of six point rule would have thrown up the cut and have given character to that portion of the page while a twelve point border of some sort would have bettered the appearance of the bottom. On page four the first title is displayed in eighteen point, but the title of the second sory is set in the line in ten point light capitals. Bold face caps should have been used, the slug being cut in if job type has to be employed. Page seven is very badly made up. The stories should have been run down one column and then down the second. Instead one line of the second story is used in the first column and then turned into the second, the third being run in two columns under the other with only a light rule instead of a heavy cut-off and with an uneven break. This form of make-up is inexcusable even in a job office in a country town. The make-up on page twelve is in proper form and should have been followed on the Lubin page. On page ten there is a story with no other heading than a cut, and on the same page two headings are in light instead of heavy faced type.

This is only the third issue of the sheet and doubtless these points will be caught and remedied in later editions. They are alluded to here only to help Mr. Harris in straightening out the kinks.

Talk to Your Patrons.

The publication is distributed free and in the course of time it will come to have the full value of a periodical. It should be able to pull several pages of advertising and this in turn, permit enlargement to thirty-two pages.

Later on more space should be used for chats with the reader, for the great value of an issue of this sort is that it gets into the home and stays there. No publication of this sort performs its full service until it is made the medium between manager and patron and carries in each issue at least a page of personal talk. The editor's note on page eleven starts well, but it should be amplified and made more chatty and confidential.

Don't be content with general statements; be specific. There is lots to be said about a photoplay theater. Say it and say it interestingly. Somehow the photoplay theater is more intimate than the dramatic combination house. It is there day in and day out. Only the pictures change and even here the same people are employed. Get up a few galleys of gossip and comment from this paper, the Photoplay Philosopher in the Motion Picture Story Magazine, Spectator's Comment in the Dramatic Mirror and elsewhere. Have plenty of this on hand to stop the gaps, use it freely and make the paper perform its full service.

Mr. Harris has made a promising start. We shall watch his progress with interest.

Another Sixteen Pager.

From Oklahoma City comes the sixteen page Motion Picture Bulletin, in some ways one of the best yet to come to this desk. It is printed in photo brown on white paper, which gives unusual value to some of the Dante Inferno cuts used in the issue to hand, and even in six point type the space is all demanded for descriptions of the Inferno, Colleen Bawn and Foul Play, with allusions to other coming features. The publication is in the interest of the Hulsey theaters, of which there are four in that town, and it seems to be doing effective work.

The third page is the editorial page, giving some news, some comment and meeting the question of the ten-cent house by explaining that the ten cent house has to charge more because it gives more, an argument that cannot be traversed. Mr. Hulsey differs from Mr. Harris in that he appears to have found the Kalem company as enterprising as the Edison when it comes to getting cuts.

There's a newspaper man somewhere on the staff, for the stuff is well displayed, the make-up has the professional look and things look "right" generally. We hope that Mr. Hulsey will send other editions. In the meantime he should get after the outside advertising. A sheet in this style with an edition of 6,000 should carry more than two pages of outside stuff.

An Inviting Invitation.

A private correspondent sends a copy of the invitation sent out for the opening of the Orpheum Theater, St. Joseph, Mo., one of the new houses of the Saxe Brothers. It is a model in every way, except that it is in old English instead of a plainer face.

It is on heavy card with an embossed name and the invitation itself printed from a copper plate instead of type. The name of the theater is done in gold, but the remainder in black and everything about the card sounds the keynote of elegance that is carried into the theater itself, from all accounts. The cross of the "T" in theater serves as the dash under the Orpheum, the two words being angled at about forty degrees to form a device instead of straight lines, and this design, also in gold, appears on the flap of the envelope together with the address. It is sent sealed and with a two cent stamp, which doubles the cost of postage, but more than doubles the effect. It is all a part of an appeal to the best patronage and effective because so carefully planned.

Ringing the Bell.

Royal W. Daynes, manager of the Mission Theater, Salt Lake City, writes that he has adopted the suggestion of this department as to trade marks and that in future the Mission bell will be put wherever it can be placed. It is painted on the screen, is being placed on all new slides, is used to head the advertising and on all printing. Pretty soon even the Lubin Liberty Bell will suggest the Mission to the patrons. It's a good idea and the more thoroughly done the better it is. For slide making and similar purposes it might be well to have several sizes of rubber stamps made, which can be done from the electros.

For the advertising the bell and the word Mission are done in white on a black block, which makes the device stand out. White on black is always conspicuous if the lines of white are not too fine, but if made too small a film of ink will form and present a wholly black surface. This error has been avoided in the Mission work, as might have been expected, though Manager Daynes confesses to being new to the business. He has to tell it, for his work shows the care of a veteran.

That Spoon Contest.

Mr. Daynes also sends a coupon for the spoon contest recently described. It will be noted that an equal number of each letter is given out at each performance, which is guarantee that some essential letter is not held out. A good feature is the offer to supply a set of spoons for any seven coupons and a cash payment. We reproduce the coupon:

> SILVER TEASPOONS.
> How to Get Them Free.
> With each 10 cent paid admission you will get one of these lettered coupons. A full set, spelling the name, MISSION, will entitle you to a set of six silver-plated Teaspoons, "Narcissus" design, made by Wm. A. Rogers Mfg. Co. Seven miscellaneous coupons (any letters) and 35 cents in cash will be accepted in lieu of the full set. Present your complete set of coupons at box office and receive your spoons.
> An equal number of each letter will be given out at each performance.
> Void unless countersigned.
> MISSION.
> (Rubber Stamped.)

Any coupon or voting contest is loaded unless you play absolutely fair. Don't try it unless you're prepared to do precisely what you say you will. It's not good showmanship to "trick it a little." That's all right for the circus grafter who is miles away next day, but the best way is to play fair and stay in one spot until you can go to a better.

Another way to work the coupon scheme if you have from four to six letters in the name of your theater is to give out one letter for each day. If your house is the Star, for example, give coupons the first four days and the set and a Friday ticket get the spoons. With the Bijou you've got the five days covered and the Unique covers Saturday, too. Don't make the set in one week and stop. Spread it out. It is a good steady feature and the spoons are cheap enough to make it worth while. If you can't give six, give three or even one.

Get That C. G. P. C.

In some effective advertising matter Mr. Dayne makes the same mistake that scores of other exhibitors are making in announcing "C. G. P. C. O." That last C does not stand for company, but for cinematograph, the full title being "Compagnie Generale Phonographique et Cinematographique." That's lots more imposing. Why not get full value?

From the South.

From Atlanta comes the third "birthday" announcement of the Vaudette there, a quarter page advertisement well displayed and well worded for the greater part though "Ours has been the greatest success of any motion picture theater in the world" is a rather broad statement. Better phrased is this paragraph:

> Our pictures are the very best obtainable, and are produced by Licensed studios only. Our singers are the best that money will secure. Our musicians are artists of unquestionable ability. Our operators are the highest paid of any in the South, and our attendants are people of refinement, while the theater itself is one of the most beautiful in the world, especially designed for comfort, containing five hundred seats thirty-seven inches apart, allowing ample room for passing through a section of seats without disturbing anyone. The acoustic properties are perfect, and an air of quiet elegance pervades the house, even when every seat is occupied, and the lobby filled with eager pleasure seekers. It is because of these facts that

In view of the hot competition in Atlanta at present it is perhaps to be expected that phrases will grow florid, but it is better to make claims less sweeping than world-wide even in a jubilee announcement. The little statement reads well because it argues that even with due allowance for exaggeration there is a solid foundation of fact, but the best line in the advertisement is next the last and simply announces "No vaudeville." There are at least 3,000,000 persons in the United States who each week are kept out of photoplay theaters by the sort of vaudeville that is run. There must be a quarter million in Greater New York alone.

Another good line runs:

> Notwithstanding our efforts, however, without the generous patronage the people have accorded us, our enterprise would have failed, and we feel that we owe a debt of gratitude, deep indeed, to all persons who, by their presence in our theater have contributed so vitally to our success, and particularly to those regular patrons who have from our opening day been regular attendants. We feel a personal interest in each and every one of them, and wish for them a full measure of happiness during the coming year.

Make a man think he's helped you and he'll be eager to help some more. Do you ever thank your patrons? You should.

Here's Chaney Again.

And now comes Manager Chaney, of the Hillsboro (Ohio) Orpheum, with some snappy reading notices that we are going to quote as good examples of what we mean by writing catchy paragraphs, but first we are going to quote an unsolicited comment from the editor of the Hillsboro Dispatch on Colleen Bawn:

> Motion picture manufacturers are to be commended for such pictures as "Colleen Bawn," seen at the Orpheum last week. The sending of large numbers of actors to foreign countries in order that all historic features be reproduced accurately, represents a large expense and many expressions of appreciation for such films must encourage these firms to follow this policy of devoting time and money to subjects of real worth.

Why not get your own newspaper people into the house when you run those Made-in-Ireland Kalems, and when they come tell them about the new Holy Land trip. Those Kalems advertise more than themselves or the Kalem Company; they advertise the entire picture business. Now for the readers:

A race between a hand-car and an automobile looks like a "cinch" for the latter, but this was not true in "Love's Victory," for the hand-car was the winner and love won out in spite of parental objection. This thrilling race can be seen at the Orpheum Wednesday night. Just one night only.

If you miss seeing "A Day at West Point Military Academy" at the Orpheum to-night, you are going to miss the best number on the entire program. It is one of the greatest military pictures ever shown.

"Nobody loves a fat man" is an expression you often hear, but it is not true as you will agree with us when you see "Bunny" in "Kitty and the Cowboys" at the Orpheum to-night and Wednesday night. He is some cowboy sure.

That's all for this time, but we've some stuff from a man in Exeter, N. H., who seems to sit up nights to hustle, that we are going to use next week.

FUTURE IMP RELEASES.

A Strong New Year's Program Outlined By Carl Laemmle—a Western Company Formed.

The pictures to be released by the Imp Films Company with the new year are exceptionally strong in many respects.

The Imp drama nowadays is universally conceded to touch high-water mark in excellence of story, powerful acting and good photography. Typical of this class of work may be mentioned "In the Northern Woods," a very strong drama, set to a Canadian background. The scenes in this drama are singularly fine representations of winter life in a logging camp. The treachery of a half-breed supplies the main motive of the story.

Two industrial pictures that will command attention are one, illustrating cotton growing in South Carolina, and the building of the greatest dam in the world. The works at this dam, which is across the Mississippi, equal in magnitude those in progress at Panama, and the Imp Company have secured a striking series of views of the gigantic engineering operations in progress.

Besides being exceptionally strong in the dramatic and industrial ends, the Imp Company is just now devoting great attention to 500 feet humorous comedies. These have a laugh in every foot, and are proving exceptionally popular.

Thus the Imp Films Company is well equipped at all points of picture production, and it may be safe to prophesy that their pictures will advance in popularity in leaps and bounds in 1912.

Several important additions have been made to the staff of directors, actors, and photographers, with a view of maintaining the pre-eminent position which the Imp Company have obtained in the world's market.

The Imp Scenario Contest, for which hundreds of scenarios have been received from all parts of the world, will close on December 31. The names of the winners in this competition will be announced in the trade papers in due course.

The Western Imp Company will depart for California at the end of December, with the purpose of making a series of romantic photoplays against the background of the magnificent scenery for which California is noted throughout the world.

ATTENTION, MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF MICHIGAN.

A special meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors of the State of Michigan, will be held in Lansing, Mich., on Jan. 8, 1912, at 2 P. M. The headquarters will be the Wentworth Hotel. All moving picture exhibitors of Michigan are invited to attend this meeting, as matters of the utmost importance concerning their affairs will be taken up. We have every reason to believe that this will be the largest gathering of moving picture exhibitors ever held in this or any other State.

Every exhibitor is invited to attend.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

HARRY A. SPOOR, European representative of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, was seen last week in the city offices of that company on the day of his arrival in Chicago. Mr. Spoor, accompanied by his wife, arrived in New York on the Crown Princess Cecilia on midnight, Thursday, December 21, after an extremely rough voyage. Mr. and Mrs. Spoor will remain for about three weeks, visiting relatives and friends.

I had an interesting conversation with Mr. Spoor on the condition of the film business abroad, and as he has made headquarters in London for over two and a half years, it can be expected that he is thoroughly conversant with conditions in the United Kingdom and continental Europe.

In the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the demand is for the pick of the world's films, with the greatest call on the American product, Mr. Spoor declared. This call is based strictly on the ground of merit alone, as films are selected by exhibitors or their representatives.

Mr. Spoor asserted that the English product is steadily improving and that English manufacturers are getting their share of the market. It will be only a short time until their product will be on a par with that of any other film manufacturers. The English manufacturers at present are getting out fine marine subjects of a melodramatic character, also romantic gypsy subjects and good dramatic and industrial pictures, the last named, especially, selling well. The quality of these English pictures has improved wonderfully, Mr. Spoor states.

American cowboy subjects and Western dramas still maintain the lead in the United Kingdom, and one scarcely fails to find pictures of one or the other on every program. Essanay, of course, takes the lead in popularity.

G. M. Anderson, secretary of the Essanay Company and Western producer, is popular throughout England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. In Ireland he is familiarly called "Andy" by picture fans. Costello, of the Vitagraph stock company, is another big favorite among those who favor the silent drama.

The Selig series of animal pictures made a tremendous success and holds the record for the number of prints sold.

In France there is a growing market for all makes of films, owing to the rise of new theaters which are not making long-time contracts with any individual manufacturers. In Germany the American product is very popular—chiefly cowboy pictures and Western. The same rule obtains in Scandinavia and Denmark. In Spain and Italy there is a tendency towards American modern and Western dramas, and cowboy pictures are also well received. The day of the bloodthirsty melodrama has passed in Italy, and progress and improvement are noticeable in the film business throughout continental Europe.

Three and five reel subjects are now the most popular pictures in Germany, and they are being produced in such numbers that hirers can depend on getting them regularly. In Great Britain and Ireland the many-reel subjects are also being received favorably.

Speaking of moving picture theaters, Mr. Spoor informed me that exhibitors in the United Kingdom passed through a crisis last summer, when for three months business was practically at a standstill. The weather was so fine that everybody rushed to the country or seaside, and picture theaters were empty. Now things have recovered and the exhibition business is again in a healthy state. Competition between theaters is very keen in Great Britain and Ireland, and this naturally tends to an improvement in the standard and quality of the programs. High class, well managed moving picture theaters are to be found all over the British Isles.

Questioned concerning the Associated Kinematograph Manufacturers and Renters' Association, Mr. Spoor informed me that the combination is wholly in the interests of future business and for the uplift of the picture. Some exhibitors as yet have not comprehended the purpose of the association, and fear that it may be used adversely to their interests in controlling rental prices; but when they realize that it is merely a court to which appeal can be made when the interests of the manufacturers, the renter or the exhibitor require it, they will become its ardent supporters.

It will be understood, of course, that the renters have their association and the manufacturers theirs, and that the combination of the two organizations forms the court of appeal.

The association is thoroughly representative of the trade. Any grievance, whether from the hirer (exhibitor), the renter or the manufacturer, can be settled in this court. The association was formed about two months ago and will be in full operation January 1, 1912.

In concluding Mr. Spoor gave another boost to the Essanay product. "It is maintaining a leading position to-day on the market," said Mr. Spoor. "As the market increases, so I find the demand for the Essanay product increases."

Mr. Spoor also told me that the Essanay trade mark never fails to gain applause, all over the United Kingdom, when it appears on the title.

The Hulsey Theaters.

L. G. Bissinger, manager of the Olympic, Cozy, Orpheum, Star, Princess and Broadway theaters, in Oklahoma City, made a call at the World office last week. The six theaters mentioned are known as the Hulsey theaters. High class motion pictures are run in all of them and cheap vaudeville finds no place on the programs. The same owners have four theaters in Galveston and one in Houston, Tex.

Licensed pictures are run in all the houses except two, which use Independent service. Two first-runs are used in each house and daily changes are made . Mr. Bissinger takes the entire weekly output purchased by the Oklahoma branch of the General Film Company, and then has not enough to go around. He reported excellent business.

Carefully selected lady orchestras furnish the music in each house, and illustrated songs are sung during the interludes.

"The Theater Reporter" is the name of a semi-monthly publication that is used to advertise the Hulsey houses in Oklahoma. It is a neatly printed, 20-page booklet, containing stories of the films, with illustrations, and is undoubtedly of great value to patrons.

Manager Bissinger stated that 100 copies of the Motion Picture Story Magazine are sold in the Hulsey theaters every month.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Mr. George Kleine returned to the city Friday morning, December 22, after an absence of nearly seven weeks, during which he visited London, Paris and Rome. He was accompanied by Mrs. Kleine and baby Helen, who had gone on to New York to meet him.

V. U. Young, manager of the Orpheum Theater, Gary, Ind., writes that he expects to open a new picture theater in that city about February 15, 1912. The plans have been drawn by H. S. Alschuler, of Chicago. Licensed pictures will be used and manager Von Ronkel, of the General Film Company's branch at 429 S. Wabash Avenue., will furnish the service. The admission price for the new house will be ten cents. The programs will consist of three reels and a song. A spot light singer will be used, and expense will not be spared to secure a talented voice. Mr. Young has left it to the citizens of Gary to select a name for his house and two prizes are offered by him for the best answers to questions regarding the management of his house, as they appear in an advertisement published in the local papers.

The World staff had a pleasant call by W. P. Ready, manager and part owner of the new Princess theater, Nashville, Tenn. When completed the Princess will be the largest picture theater in the South. It will seat comfortably 1,500 people. It is built on property valued at $150,000, and the cost of the structure will be $60,000. A description of this house, with illustrations, will appear later on in the columns of the World.

HERE ON BUSINESS.

A visitor last week to the Moving Picture World was Mr. Frank E. Gorman, assistant manager of the Boston Film Rental Company, 665 Washington Street, Boston, Mass. Mr. Gorman says that business with him is all that could be expected and his visit to this city was on purely buiness grounds.

PAUL MELIES GOES TO CALIFORNIA.

Paul Melies, son of Gaston Melies and for some time manager of the manufacturing and sales department of the Melies Company, has gone to California for a brief rest. "Monsieur Paul" has not been in the best of health for some time and he thought a trip to the land of sunshine would be the proper thing. He will join his father, Gaston Melies, and the Melies company of players at Santa Barbara.

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

One Place at a Time.

HERE is a man, evidently a newspaper man, at that, who asks the familiar question as to the duplication of scripts. He writes:

> Here is a question I would like to see you take up in the Moving Picture World. In view of the unusually long time that some companies take in considering scenarios, isn't the author justified in making two copies of his story and submitting them to different firms at the same time, the same as he would a house or any other comodity, and accept the best offer.

There are a lot of authors who will echo a heartfelt Amen! to that proposition, but they are not the trained writers. They look only upon the surface of the question and find reason upon their side, but looking more deeply into the matter there is but one conclusion to be reached.

An author never is justified in submitting the same script to more than one firm at one time.

Read it once more.

An author never is justified in submitting the same script to more than one firm at one time.

If you don't like the way a firm transacts its business, don't do business with it, but if you do try to do business, be businesslike. If you know that the Blank Company takes from six to eight weeks to pass on a script and you are not content to wait that long, send it somewhere else. You are not compelled to submit any matter to the Blank Company, but if you do, you are required to conform to their methods.

If you want quick action send it to companies that make quick decisions. The trouble is that the companies giving quick decisions are those most apt to send it back. They are the companies using the work of their own staffs of editorial writers and they are good places to keep away from; not that the companies are dishonest, but that there is no use wasting postage and getting a nice clean manuscript mussed up.

Let's go into the average editorial office with a script. Suppose that you go in the envelope instead of the typewritten pages.

You're likely to hang around a couple of days before some typist takes you out of your covering and sends off a postal announcing your arrival. Perhaps she makes an entry, covering that fact, in some sort of a record book, and perhaps she doesn't. At any rate she passes you on to a reader or the editor himself.

If you go to the reader perhaps this person is competent to see the story from the synopsis and perhaps not. If you do not get the synopsis over you go back, but if you have a chance of acceptance you go on to the editor.

Here the weeding process is repeated and if you still stick the chances are that you are passed on to a producer. The producer is the man who makes the picture. He's busy making pictures so he has no time to read you. You are tossed into a desk and you lie there until the producer gets to the editor with the remark that you are pretty rotten, but maybe he can make something out of you.

Perhaps then they have one of those foolish things called a conference. They all talk you over and tell what they would do with you if you were theirs, and then they ask the boss about you. The boss is even busier than the producer, but he gets around to you after a time not because he has any more time, but because your producer has no more scripts. He simply has to read you, so he does. Back you go to the editor—if the director remembers, and the editor sends you a check when he gets a chance. You sign your name in all the places indicated by an "x," swear to it before a notary, swear at it because of the trouble you're put to—and you get your check.

This isn't a very businesslike way of doing business, but its the way it's done in most studios, and you have the consolation of knowing that the longer you stick the better your chance of hanging on gets to be. In some few studios the payment is even held up until the story has been made and approved in the film, but most companies pay on the delayed acceptance.

If you don't like waiting that long and make inquiry, you are liable to lose your chance. The editor or director looks pained, you go into the envelope with a rejection slip and pretty soon you are back home, a little mussed, not as clean as you were, and very, very tired.

Some companies will give favorable action within a month, but most companies require longer time, and if you're not a good waiter you'd better give it up.

Suppose that you send out three or four copies. The quick action studio snaps them up and you're compelled to recall the others. After a time the quick action market dries up. You keep on going to the others, but you're known now. You're the fellow that's always writing for his scripts before a decision is made. Even the record clerk knows you and what might be a good market is closed to you forever.

Selling a scenario or any other manuscript is not like selling a house. You do not give the keys of the house to half a dozen people and tell them that they are at liberty to go ahead and move in whenever they get ready, trusting to luck that not more than one family will move in. You show the house to all who wish to see, but if you give one possible tenant an option, you hold off the others until the option expires.

The submission of a manuscript to a company is an implied option on that story for such reasonable length of time as the company may require in which to make a decision. To give options to two or more concerns is a business indecency.

The only thing to do is to find out which company will do best by you and give them first chance. If Brown keeps a script only six weeks, give him the script before Smith gets it, but if Smith, who gets around to a decision in ten weeks, will pay $35 against Brown's $25, why not give him the first chance? It means another month, but it also means another ten. If both Smith and Brown refuse it, let Jones keep it as long as he likes. He's your last chance. A little experience will give you the proper "dope" and after that you can act accordingly.

There is only one way to beat slow action and that is to build up a "string." Short story writers who are dependent on their pens for a livelihood have a string of from thirty to sixty stories constantly going the rounds. For more than five years the writer had a string of from forty to sixty stories in one office alone. It was hack work under contract, but even with a contract it was necessary to keep up the string to keep up the checks. With twenty to thirty scripts always out, you won't mind the ordinary delay once you are started, but you'll soon have more than sixty on hand at home if you send out carbon copies.

Fiction writers experience the same troublesome delays, but they are apt to be experienced and the wider their experience the less they complain. If they get action inside of a month they feel they are favored of the gods and some magazines require three and four months. The stories go first to the quick-action, pay-on-acceptance places and wind up in the places that pay as soon after acceptance as you can force the editor to disgorge.

Locate the best concerns to deal with and deal with them first. Go on down the line until you have made a sale or until there are no more places to try. Then rewrite and try again. The first office will have forgotten it by then.

More than one promising writer has spoiled his chances by being in too much of a hurry for action, but if there is anything that will damn a writer quicker than the carbon copy it's the abominable practice of sending out several carbons with the statement that the best bid takes the rights. It is the unforgiveable sin.

Keeping Track of Scripts.

Do you keep a record of the scripts you send out? It's useful in many ways and a simple matter.

Get one of those fifty cent card files. This includes a pack of cards and a lettered index. Reverse the index and on the back of the tabs write the names of the companies. Get a ten cent rubber dating stamp and an ink pad.

Now when you write a story, type the title of the script at the top of the card and on each of the blue lines type in the names of a company to which you intend to send the script in the order in which they should be tried. Date to the right of the first line and send out your story. Put the card in the compartment marked with the name of the company to which it is sent. If it comes back date the return and send it off to the next on the list, using the dater again. Now put the card into the compartment for the second company. Keep it up until you make a sale or run out of stamps.

When a story is accepted enter that fact on the card and put it in the front of the cards entering the date the receipt is returned. When the check comes file the card at the back of the box. Number your cards in consecutive order and when you make a sale enter on the card of that company the fact that you sold story number eleven or seventy-three as the case may be. File the paid cards in proper order and the gaps will show the failures, the cards will show the average length of time each company takes to pass a script and the company card will show how they treat you. If you want to query a script or a receipt you have the date it was sent, and you know at a glance what companies have scripts and how many each has by looking in the box.

How Many Words?

Nothing seems to bother the scenario novice more than the question of words and lengths.

Short stories and long are sold by the thousand words and the writer has trouble in understanding a business in which a story is sold by the thousand feet without regard to the number of words.

One troubled correspondent writes that a company advises him to keep the script as short as possible and then returns a story with the statement that the action is not described in sufficient detail, while the company's sheet of hints to scenario writers state that the bare idea may be submitted, which seems at variance with the statement that the action should be properly written in.

There is no hard and fast rule to be set down as to the number of words to be used to a scene. Fifty feet may require ten words and ten feet fifty, and the direction that the action should be clearly but briefly described seems to carry no hint. Yet this means exactly what it says. Tell in as few words as possible all the necessary action and make sure that the written action and the leaders will tell the story. If you can do it with clearness in ten words, use ten words, if you need two hundred take two hundred, but if you've written a fifty-foot scene you will be paid for fifty feet in either case.

The debatable question is how many words really are necessary and how much of the action should be written. Opinions may widely differ, but practice will enable even the novice to gain brevity and clearness at the same time.

The essential action is that which carries forward the plot. If you write that "John crosses to the table and plays with the paper knife while Helen upbraids him for his perfidy," you've written both essential and non-essential action. If Helen does not upbraid John the story cannot advance, but the story would advance just the same if John did not play with a paper knife. All that you need to tell is that Helen upbraids him and it's better to do that without telling about what John does with the paper knife. Just write it "Helen upbraids John" and let it go at that.

But suppose that some apparently non-essential is really required. Suppose that while John is playing with the paper knife he comes upon a scrap of paper which shows that in reality it is Helen's brother who is to blame. Now the action with the cutter becomes essential because it leads up to the finding of the paper, and you write it in.

Comedy scenes, where the comedy action is more important than the comedy idea, require that the action shall be more fully explained, and this means that more words will be needed, but even here it is not necessary to go into every detail, and you'll be surprised to see how easy it is to get over complete action of a scene in half a dozen snappy lines.

At the start it is a good plan to write in the action in full that your thoughts may not be checked by the need for condensation. Then go over the script and cut out all that you can without hurting the story and cut down what you cannot cut out.

If you can't plan a scenario write just the bare plot and sell it for a plot—which is what the scenario sheet means, but you'll not be paid as much for a scenario, so write a scenario if you can, but write just a scenario and not a novelette.

Making the Most of It.

There is something more in writing a photoplay than merely writing in the essential action. You may have a complete story and yet have not half the story you could make out of the same theme.

This doesn't mean that you can make a two-reel subject out of a one-reel plot, but that you can make that one-reel subject twice as good by putting in the little touches that make the difference between a good script and a star story. A sonata is written on a simple theme, a few bars of melody. The artistry lies in treating that theme so that the best possible use is made of it. It's the same with a story.

You see a young man strike down an old woman in the street. The act is revolting and you are glad that some husky truck driver climbs down from his vehicle and gives the young fellow the beating he deserves. There you have the elements of a story, simple, dramatic and satisfying.

But suppose that you knew that the boy was the old woman's son, that she slaved over the tubs that he might be the "gentleman" that was her dream for him in his baby days. Suppose that you knew he struck her down because she had only the pittance to offer that her labor brought and he sought to drive her to theft to make up the sum he needed.

It's all a part of the first story, but now are you not doubly glad that he received at least a part of his just deserts? Isn't your heart wrung with pity for the poor old woman and filled with loathing and contempt for the son? You've taken a simple theme and with a few touches you've made it a better and more gripping story. Next time that hoodooed script comes back see if you cannot add to it the humanizing touch that will lift the curse from it. It's the trouble with half the returns, only half the story is there.

Folded Envelopes.

It's pretty poor economy to get a pack of cheap envelopes and use the same size for both going and return covers. Envelopes—even good envelopes—are cheap and an investment of thirty cents for two packs of stout manila envelopes is more profitable than your own labor or the hiring of a stenographer to copy the carbon of the lost or damaged script.

Where but one size is used the return envelope is either folded twice across the short length or—worse still—one edge and one side are folded over to make a fit. Most envelopes are made from short fibre stock and are given weight and finish through the application of clay. When the envelope is folded the clay cracks, the fibres are strained and the chances that another script will be lost are exceedingly good.

With a white envelope the danger is doubled, since the chemicals used to bleach the pulp weaken the fibre. It is for this reason that experienced writers almost invariably use manila. If you send less than ten sheets the ten and eleven inch sizes are best, and a scenario has no business being even ten pages long. Fold twice across and you have a package that will fit nicely in the inner envelope, which in turn will travel well in the outer covering and get the script to the editor in good shape. If the script is bulky the seven by ten is permissible with but one fold in the sheet, but the danger of creasing is greater. To use an envelope large enough to contain an 8½ x 11 sheet without folding is to copy the story after each return. Don't do it. It doesn't impress the editor.

Copyright Productions.

Some writers are disposed to view with alarm the evident tendency on the part of some studios to employ the copyrighted works of well-known authors. It is contended that this will hurt the market for original photoplays and eventually drive the scenario author from the field.

It is going to take up a part of the production, but on the whole it will have a beneficial effect. The Edison Company found that the names of men like O. Henry, Richard Harding Davis and others on the film title carried weight, and it is pointed out that the Edison Company is the first to give the lesser lights the same advertisement. The established author broke the way for the minor writers and perhaps it will be found that when the companies get used to paying more than $25 to $35 for copyright rights the compensation for original work will be more generous.

The $100 script is not far off, but it must be worth the hundred, and the writers who start now to get ready for that happy day will be best prepared when it comes.

"Use No Hooks."

Here's another letter from a correspondent, and it does not concern either of the studios previously mentioned:

> "——— sent back my script this morning. It has been read all right, and I hope they will set up a wash basin and towel outfit at ———. I'd be willing to subscribe the basin myself in self-defense. He said he had tried it on three directors, but it looks as though the whole company had had a hand in or rather on it."

This sort of thing is little less than dishonest. A request for manuscript implies that reasonable care will be taken of it, but after kicking about the studio a couple of months it is shipped back to the author with never an offer to pay for clean copying. If all studios sent back stuff in the same shape it might be argued that the soiling of a script was unavoidable, but some companies send back script looking as neat as though they had just been turned out, though it is plain that the script has been read. It is not the editor's fault, as a rule, but he is helpless since he has to turn over to the directors the original script and the average director knows little about manuscript matters. It is time that their education was begun.

INQUIRIES

J. JONES.—You fail to qualify with your name and address as evidence of good faith, but you're excused this time. Certainly it is "permissible" for the writer to place a value on his manuscript. It's your manuscript, and you've the right to say what you are willing to sell it for. But, on the other hand, the purchaser has the same right to pay what he thinks is proper, or not buy at all. It is the usual practise to let the company make the valuation and then if you think you have been underpaid, write politely and ask them if that is the regular rate. If it is, send your work elsewhere. (2) A writer may reserve the fiction rights on a story, but in doing so he is apt to spoil a sale and it is seldom that this course is to be advised. If you can make a good story of a photoplay plot, write the story first, and reserve the picture rights. (3) If the story is purchased by a company and the story is subsequently made into fiction form, the payment goes to the author who works your story over. You are not entitled to additional payment, as most companies purchase all rights. (4) There is no "regular price" for scripts. Payments may run all the way from $15 to $50, according to the company and the value of the particular script.

WEEKLY READER.—You cannot get with a company unless you are experienced, and you cannot gain experience without first having been with a company. There are about 4,000 experienced dramatic players looking for positions with the picture companies. You can figure your chance as being good if they all die, but not otherwise. Better abandon the idea now instead of a couple of years from now. You'll save both time and worry.

R. E. H.—As a general thing the companies prefer not to mention the locations where their pictures were made, as they may want to go back there before some other company finds the place. For this reason these questions are not answered. Your third question was answered a couple of weeks ago. It was while "Broncho Billy's Christmas Dinner" was being made that Miss Edna Fisher was injured. No Pathe player has been seriously hurt of late. They are used to tumbles in Western pictures. The reply concerning Mr. Costello was in regard to his occasional appearance at some photoplay theater as a guest on "Costello Night." An inquirer asked if he "hired out," and it was explained that he did not accept payment for these appearances.

MRS. A. S.—Questions of relationship are barred, but there is no relationship betyeen Miss Lawrence and Miss Leonard. Miss Lawrence appeared in "The Test," but Miss Ethel Elder was the leading woman in "The Petticoat Sheriff."

GEORGE T.—The studio at South Beach, Staten Island, has been occupied by a number of concerns at various times, the Belmar Company being the latest occupant, if we are not mistaken. We regret that we cannot supply the address.

JONES—this time from Cincinnati.—Miss Gladys Fields severed her connection with the Essanay Company some time ago, giving place to Miss Edna Fisher. We have no record of her present connection. If Miss Fields is with a picture company, will she please so advise this department. There are others than Jones who want to know.

L. G., Jr.—Herbert Bosworth is with the Selig Company, and he is putting up some capital acting. He is scheduled in many of the recent releases.

H. C. T.—Miss Dot Farley was the opposite to Mr. Kerrigan in "Daddy's Redemption." The company does not know her present whereabouts. (2) This question is out of order, but we do not believe that your surmise is correct. Our belief is based on more intimate information than yours. (3) William Shay and Lucille Young are the players in the Imp's "Battle of the Wills" in addition to King Baggot. (4) We do not believe that Miss Pickford was a dramatic player, but are not positive.

A. J. S.—Miss Mignon Anderson was the Dora in the Thanhouser David Copperfield series. She was the leading woman of "Master of Millions."

B. M. M.—Ask us something easy. There are quite a number of probable reasons why the companies do not film the casts, one being the length of film required, which detracts from the length of picture, since the latter must come within the 1,000-foot standard. In the Rex Company's "A Breach of Faith," Miss Lois Weber was the heroine and Miss Naughton the adventuress.

BEBE.—Yale Boss is not a dwarf, but a small boy, who has been kept singularly free from mannerisms while acquiring dramatic training. He does not work for other than the Edison Company.

C. K. W.—Keep your "bonnet" and the ham sandwich. You'll have to dig up for yourself.

K. K. L.—The printed titles and "leaders" are made in various ways, but they are never printed on the film. One company photographs painted cards and handles the negative the same as negative of scenes, another makes lantern slides and uses these as fixed negatives, the slides being made by photographing a printed card. A third company makes direct photographs of the card leader. If "how are they made" means who makes them, the author suggests what should be used and the editor usually has to condense the suggestions.

BEN J. C.—If you want to do arrangements of standard works of literature, it would be wise to query the likely companies to see if they are interested. Most companies prefer to arrange their own scripts, or at least indicate just how they want the arrangement made.

GEM.—Robert Conness was away from the Edison studio for some time, but he is back again and will probably be seen in some of the January releases. Nowadays the players interchange between stage and picture work.

T. S. G.—We happen to know that a picture version of the play you mention is now being done. Announcement will probably be made before you can unload your script. Save your stamps.

S. F. J.—The number of prints made from any negative is a jealously guarded trade secret, and the figures are not made known.

..B. Z.—Mae Hotely, Elsie Glynn and Harry Myers were the leads in Lubin's "Some Mother-in-Law." Miss Hotely was the Mother-in-Law. Mr. Myers did not leave the Lubin Company, as we recently explained, though he had arranged to go to one of the Independent companies.

L. D. N.—We do not believe that you can obtain Miss Lawrence's photographs, as she is not now with the Lubin Company.

R. G.—Miss Isabelle Rea and Miss Lucille Young are playing leads with the Imp Company.

H. H.—Mrs. Mary Maurice was the Mother in the Vitagraph's "Wistaria." She is the same who played in "My Old Dutch." The Vitagraph's Eagle Eye is a real Indian, and not an imitation.

M. C. D.—B loses. The Kinemacolor films are black and white. They use no tinted films, because they do not have to. Kinemacolor film differs from the regular stock in that the emulsion is more sensitive to light values, since the pictures are taken at the rate of 32 each second, instead of the usual 16, and behind color screens at that. We do not know where you can obtain cuttings of the film.

E. C. N.—See reply to R. E. H. above.

R. B. L.—We do not advise querying the company you mention within eight weeks, as they are slow to decide. A delay in this case is a hopeful sign.

C. O. E.—Edward O'Connor is the Bo'sun of Edison's "The Bo'sun's Watch." Edwin Clark was the young man.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

Projecting Machine Mechanisms.—Part I.

This week the entire department is given over to the first of a series of illustrated instructions on machines. Similar instructions on other mechanisms will be given as fast as they can be made ready. It is hoped and believed that these instructions will be found of some benefit even to the experienced operator. It is certain they will prove of great value to the thousands of exhibitors and operators located in our smaller towns where opportunity for the acquisition of knowledge is slight and must largely be come by through the hard and slow school of experience.

These instructions are not designed to "make" operators, but to offer adequate, understandable help to those already engaged in the profession of projection. Great damage has been done to projection, projection machinery and films in the past, by reason of inadequate knowledge of the mechanism and its proper care and adjustment. I have tried to make these instructions complete and there will be no further excuse for the operator who does not keep his machine in proper adjustment and give it the intelligent care necessary. The order in which the instructions are run in the department has nothing whatever to do with the relative merits of the various mechanisms. They will be run in the order in which we are able to prepare them for publication.

While at first glance these instructions may seem complicated, they are, in fact, very simple and easily followed. It must be remembered that the operator seldom has occasion to use more than one of them at a time, while many of them he will use but very rarely, if ever. It has been designed to give full instruction for anything the operator may ever be called upon to do in connection with the machine head, and give the instruction so plainly that even the small-town exhibitor, who is unable to employ a competent operator, may be able to perform the various necessary operations in connection with the machine. The numbers refer to parts and plates, thus: 748 (P 7) means that part 748, which is the toggle gear, will be found on plate 7; 682 (P 3 and 7) means that parts 682, the connecting link, will be found on plates 3 and 7.

Instructions on No. 6 Powers Machine.

No. 1.—Removing Oil-casing Cover.

To remove oil-casing cover 674 (P 4) loosen screw 738 in lower sprocket 646 (P 2) and pull lower sprocket shaft 645 (P 3) out to the left. Loosen set screw in collar 642 (P 5) and pull shaft 641 carrying large idler-gear 640 (P 4). Remove screws (three of them) holding oil-casing cover. Tap lightly on cover to break the shellac in the joint and it will come off.

No. 2.—Removing Flywheel Shaft on Main Spindle.

To remove flywheel shaft, and cam of intermittent movement on same, take off cover of oil-casing (see instruction No. 1). Loosen screw 709 (P 3) and back it out about ⅛ inch, then tap lightly on head of screw with wooden handle of screw-driver, to start wheel from shaft. Keep backing off screw 709 and tapping until wheel can be pulled off. Don't lose the thin washer 748 (P 7) between flywheel, pinion and hub. You may now pull out the shaft and cam to the left.

No. 3.—Removing Intermittent Sprocket, Shaft and Geneva Cross.

To remove intermittent sprocket, shaft and geneva cross, remove oil-casing cover, cam and shaft (see instruction 1 and 2). Loosen screw 743 (P 1). Remove apron 669 (P 1 and 2) by taking out two screws holding same. Loosen screw 743 (P 1), the sprocket, shaft, cross and left-hand (large) bushing may then be pulled out to the left. Should it start hard you may tap lightly on right-hand end of intermittent sprocket shaft 665, using hardwood, brass or copper punch only. Never use a steel punch to drive shafts as you may cause irreparable damage by so doing.

No. 4.—Replacing Oil-Casing Cover.

In replacing oil-casing cover, clean its edges and the contact edges of the casing carefully, removing all oil. Next coat the edges with thick shellac (to be had from any dealer in painters' supplies). Place the cover quickly in place and clamp tightly with screws. Do not put oil in casing until shellac has had time to dry.

No. 5.—To Adjust Tension Springs.

Screw 734 (P 1) controls amount of pressure tension shoes 694 (P 2) exert on the film. Tension should be set just tight enough that picture will not move up on screen when machine is run at a crank speed of about 90 per minute. It should not be in excess of this (except where Kinemacolor is used) as any excess tends to wear sprocket holes of film unduly. It also causes unnecessary wear to the intermittent movement and gears. You should not be able to feel the pull of the film as the intermittent sprocket moves when turning the crank very slowly. Proper adjustment of tension is a very important matter. If the picture vibrates on the screen, catch the bottom of the upper loop between the first two fingers of the left hand as you run the machine. Exert a little pressure, but not too much. If this stops the vibration it is pretty good evidence that the tension is too weak. If it does not stop it, look elsewhere for the trouble. You should then examine your intermittent sprocket teeth. You may use a condensing lens, as a magnifying glass, for this purpose. If they are badly cut on one side, remove the sprocket and turn it end for end, or else get a new one. An extra intermittent sprocket is a good thing to have in stock, but Do not get a Cheap Intermittent Sprocket. Get the genuine sprocket made by the manufacturers of the machine. Cheap imitations of the sprockets put out by machine manufacturing companies are made of cheap materials, with cheap workmanship. They cause much trouble and are generally unsatisfactory. They are a decidedly poor proposition from any and every point of view. Particularly does this apply to intermittent sprockets. If the picture moves up and down slightly, four times to every turn of the crank (every time the intermittent sprocket revolves), it is proof positive that either your intermittent sprocket 667 (P 2), or its shaft 665 (P 1), is not true. Renewing the defective part is the only remedy.

No. 6.—To Remove Intermittent Sprocket from Its Shaft.

To remove intermittent sprocket 667 (P 2) from its shaft, first remove oil-casing cover, cam and camshaft, then cross intermittent sprocket and shaft (see instructions 1, 2 and 3). Resting the sprocket hub on the end of a small block of wood, with a small steel punch gently drive out the two pins holding sprocket to shaft. After removing pins, which are tapered, rest end of shaft on block of wood and with a piece of hardwood or brass held against sprocket close to shaft, gently drive sprocket from shaft. Never drive on rim of sprocket. Don't set end of shaft on metal or use steel punch to drive sprocket off shaft. Should pin-holes in new sprocket not exactly fit holes in shaft, drill new holes at right angles to old ones. Be sure you get sprocket in exact alignment with aperture and other sprockets before drilling new holes.

No. 7.—Adjusting Film-Guides.

Roller guides on top of gate 691 (P 2) should hug the film snugly, though not so as to in the least degree bind it. Should too much play develop through wear, it may be removed by driving out shaft 692 (P 2), and filing the end of hollow sleeve between guide rollers 691, which holds them apart. Be careful not to file too much off. Spread spring 729 (P 2) enough to hold rollers against sleeve, if necessary.

No. 8.—Aligning Sprockets.

It is of the utmost importance that upper sprocket 617 (P 2), intermittent sprocket 667 (P 2) lower sprocket 646 (P 2) and aperture be all kept exactly in line with each other. The alignment of intermittent sprocket, upper sprocket and aperture may be tested by placing a short strip of film (don't use worn film for this purpose) in the machine with the gate open. Place it on the intermittent sprocket and close idler. Engage sprocket holes of film with teeth of upper sprocket and turn flywheel backward until film is stretched tightly, being careful that teeth are in center, sidewise, of sprocket holes. If sprockets and aperture are not in perfect alignment the fact is readily detected by the film edge not being in line with tracks on aperture plate or the aperture not being central in film. If film seems to bear equally on both edges of both sprockets and the aperture plate tracks are not straight with film it would indicate aperture plate out of true. Gently drive its top one way or the other, as is required, to square it with the film. The first thing to do, however, before making this test is to be certain your intermittent sprocket shaft 665 (P 1) is in exact alignment with camshaft 676 (P 2).

No. 9.—Aligning Intermittent Shaft with Cam Shaft.

If the intermittent sprocket shaft 665 (P 1) is out of alignment, or, in other words, not parallel with camshaft 676 (P 2) the sprocket teeth of the end of the sprocket which is lowest will do most of the work of pulling down the film; also other evils will result. It is therefore essential that the two shafts named be kept exactly parallel. This is accomplished by adjusting bushings 671 (P 1) and 670 (P 2). With an inside caliper used either from top of sides of sprocket or directly between the two shafts at sides of sprocket, you can tell when you have it exactly right. To turn these bushings first loosen screws 723 (P 1) and 743 (P 1). In the circumference of the left-hand bushing will be found two pin-holes in which to insert a small, steel punch or a steel wire 1/8 inch in diameter to turn the bushing. In the end of the right-hand bushing is a screw-driver slot for the same purpose.

No. 10.—Adjusting Intermittent Movement to Eliminate Lost Motion.

The intermittent sprocket should have just a little circumferential play, but not much. As this play increases from wear of the parts it should be taken up. To accomplish this, loosen screws 743 (P 1) and 723 (P 1) and slightly turn bushings 670 (P 2) and 671 (P 1) in such manner that they revolve clockwise as viewed from the flywheel side of machine. (See instruction No. 9 for method of turning them.) Turn both bushings the same amount. It is best to use caliper (see instruction No. 9) to be certain you keep shaft parallel with camshaft. Do not turn bushings enough to cause intermittent movement to bind. If after tightening screws 743 and 723 there is binding, loosen them and slack off on the bushings just a little. Binding caused by tightening these screws is due to some slight play bushings may have in their seats.

No. 11.—Setting Sprocket Idler Rollers.

Idler rollers 609 and 660 (P 2) and 657 (P 1) should be kept set away from their respective sprockets by about twice the thickness of a film. This is an absolute necessity and failure to attend to it will cause loss of film loops if there is any tendency in that direction. Idler 609 (P 2) is adjusted in relation to its sprocket by a small screw just behind the handle on which is the arrow-head from 612 (P 2). Screw 719 (P 2) adjusts intermittent sprocket roller and screw 724 (P 2) adjusts sprocket of lower roller. In adjusting lower sprocket roller, if you have the type of bracket carrying two rollers, set the front, or top roller, allowing lower, or back one to come to where it will, provided it does not come closer to the sprocket than twice the thickness of a film. After adjusting rollers always set lock-nuts of adjustment screws up tight. Remember that lack of care in adjusting these rollers is likely to cause trouble through losing upper or lower loops.

No. 12.—Worn Aperture Plate Tracks.

When tracks of aperature plate 687 (P 2) become worn, get a new one. It does not pay to use a worn aperture plate. It causes buckling of the film which throws film in and out of focus on the screen. A new aperture plate should be kept in stock.

No. 13.—End Play in Sprocket Idler Rollers.

Keep collars 611 (P 2) and 726 (P 1) set up snugly against the rollers so that the latter have no end play. Failure to do so may cause damage to sprocket teeth. Don't set them tight enough to bind the rollers, however. Keep rollers set so that grooves are central with teeth. To accomplish this the shaft carrying them may be shifted endwise by loosening screw holding same. It is essential that idler rollers of all sprockets turn freely. If a roller sticks investigate and remove the cause at once.

No. 14.—Oil for Intermittent Oil Casing.

Use a high grade of machine oil in intermittent oil casing and keep same filled to top of oil-cup at all times. This latter applies only to those having oil-cup of type illustrated 673 (P 4). Do not use a thin oil in casing. The Nicholas Power Company will supply suitable oil for casing at a reasonable price. I would strongly advise its use, though a high grade moderately heavy machine oil will produce satisfactory results.

No. 15.—Fire Shutter Counterweight.

Keep fire shutter counterweight set as shown at 629 (P 2).

No. 16.—Gate-Latch Adjustment.

Gate latch-screw 722 (P 2) should be kept set just so as to hold contact screws, on inside of gate, snugly against face of machine.

No. 17.—Aligning Gate with Aperture.

If at any time aperture in gate should, from accident or other cause, get out of line with aperture—not central, sidewise, with aperture—the gate may be moved to the left by striking sharply alternately on its upper and lower front edge with a light hammer. It may be moved the other way by tapping on round part of gate hinge, using a brass punch, thus bending hinge slightly. After doing this it may be necessary to line up idlers 691 (P 2) with top of aperture plate. They should be set equi-distant from its edges.

No. 18.—End Motion in Intermittent Sprocket.

There should be no end motion at all in intermittent sprocket 667 (P 2). End motion may be readily eliminated by loosening screw in collar against end of bushing 670 (P 2). Holding screw-driver in screw-slot, with another screw-driver, or other convenient tool, pry gently against rim of sprocket and collar, forcing sprocket to the right and collar to the left against bushing. While holding the collar over thus, tighten the screw in same. Turn machine very slowly and if the intermittent movement binds, you have the collar too tight. Stick end of screw-driver through one of the holes in flywheel and against end of intermittent shaft. With hammer tap very lightly. Try machine and do it again, if necessary, trying sprocket each time to be sure you have not loosened it too much. This collar should be just as tight against the bushing as it can be without binding. Side motion in intermittent sprocket is very likely to produce side motion in picture on the screen.

No. 19.—Lubricating Gears.

Operators usually have their own individual ideas as to the best gear lubricant. There are several. Engine valve-oil is excellent. Automobile grease is used successfully. Ground mica and tallow make a very effective compound. A light oil is not suitable for gears. If grease or oil is used the gears should occasionally be washed out thoroughly, say twice per week. This may readily be done without removing head from table by holding a shallow dish (a pan about 2 x 8 inches by 1 or 2 inches deep is best), under the gears while you turn the crank slowly at the same time flooding the gears with kerosene, benzine or gasoline from an ordinary oil can, such as is used to oil the machine. If preferred the mechanism may be removed from the table and, after removing lenses, immersed in gasoline, the crank being given a few turns while the mechanism is in the bath. This washes out both gears and bearings. Washing out gears is of much importance since dust mixes with the oil and forms a grinding paste which wears the metal rapidly.

No. 20.—Oil.

Many and diverse are the ideas concerning the best lubricant for motion picture mechanisms. Aside from the oil-casing, instruction for which has already been given (see instruction No. 14) and the gears (see instruction No. 19), two courses are open for lubrication of bearings, viz.: a light oil with frequent lubrication, or a heavier oil used less frequently. Things may be said for both. The more frequent application of the lighter oil naturally keeps the bearings washed out better. It has, however, greater tendency to run off, smear around and get all over the machine and on the film. The heavier oil naturally "stays put" better, but does not keep the bearings so clean. Never use more than one drop of oil on any bearing. Anything more is waste, and worse than useless. One drop is ample for all purposes of lubrication. Any surplus over this will run off, making a dirty mess and probably getting on the film. The Nicholas Power Company is prepared to furnish an oil suitable for use on their machines. I strongly recommend that you procure same.

No. 21.—Emulsion Deposit on Tension Springs.

The emulsion of "first run" films is usually quite soft and has a decided tendency to deposit on tension shoes 624 (P 2). This is common to all machines and is unavoidable. Excess of film cement used in making patches also has tendency to deposit as it is very soft. The trouble may be lessened, when using first run film, by carrying as light a tension as possible and smearing the shoes with tallow from an ordinary tallow candle, one of which should be kept for the purpose, before each run. Never, under any circumstances, use a screwdriver, knife blade or other steel tool to remove emulsion from tension shoes. If you do you will be likely to scratch the polished surface, thus making matters very much worse. Use a silver coin, a small piece of wood or, better still, a wet cloth, or a cloth dampened with kerosene. Water instantly softens the deposit. In running first run film watch this matter very closely and clean the shoes after each run, rubbing on a little grease, tallow preferably. Otherwise you will seriously injure the film, besides wearing the machine unduly. Avoid using more cement than is necessary in making patches.

No. 22.—Keep Screws Tight.

See to it that screws 728 and 745 (P 7) are kept set up tight. If these screws work loose it allows toggle gear 678 (P 7) which fits on 742 (P 7) to wobble. This is injurious and very likely to cause a bad grind in the gears, as well as other troubles.

No. 23.—Keep Studs Tight.

See to it that studs 686 (P 3 and 7) do not work loose. Should these studs, or the slots in horizontal bar 683 (P 3 and 7), become worn so that there is play between studs and slots, do not attempt to close up slot with a hammer. The bar is die-cast and you will merely succeed in breaking it. Order a new bar and studs.

No. 24.—Adjustment for Connecting Link.

Connecting link 682 (P 3 and 7) is beveled on its sides. It is held on its right side by a small, loose casting 685 (P 3 and 7).

Plate No. 2.

This casting is held by screws 745 (P 7). Two set screws 744 (P 7) are for the purpose of holding casting 685 against connecting link 682, to prevent any side motion of same, while allowing it to slide freely up and down in framing the picture. When the connecting link develops lost motion through wear, or from any other cause, first see to it that screws 745 (P 7) are set up tight. If there is lost motion when these screws are tight, slacken off the locknuts of set screws 744 (P 7), loosen screws 745 slightly, but not much, and tighten up a little on set screws 744. Do not get them too tight or connecting link will stick, making the framing carriage work hard. Tighten screws 745 and locknuts on set screws 744 when done.

No. 25.—Oil-Holes.

In oiling do not overlook oil-holes 742 (P 7), just back of toggle gear, and oil-hole 736 (P 5), just back of revolving shutter bracket. Other oil-holes are: one in top sprocket shaft.

Plate No. 5.

Two in crankshaft. Three in governor shaft. One in governor friction case. Two for flywheel shaft. Two for intermittent sprocket shaft, one for lower sprocket shaft. Oil cup in intermittent oil casing. One for shaft of gear 640 (P 4). One in each sprocket roller. One for shaft 681 (P 3). Three for revolving shutter shaft, and one for lower magazine take-up spindle.

No. 26.—Travel Ghost—Setting Shutter.

When new machine is received the revolving shutter shaft will probably be found folded down against the machine. Raise it up, loosening screw 732 (P 5) until it will enter slot in shutter bracket. Raise shaft as far as it will go and set up screw 732 tight. Next tighten screw 733 (P 5), which also holds bracket. Be sure you tighten both these screws after raising shaft into place. Next slip shutter on shaft with the hub out, as shown in P 6, with screw 740 (P 6) in V-groove in shaft. Set shutter as close to lens as you can get it and tighten screw 740 (P 6).

Should travel ghost (streaks up or down from letters of titles or flashes of white up or down from white objects in picture) develop at any time, it may be eliminated by resetting the shutter. Loosen one of screws 739 (P 6) and slack off on the other one until shutter can be slipped by applying some pressure. If streaks are up revolve the top of shutter away from you (holding flywheel stationary meanwhile) slightly and, with a title in machine, try it. If streaks are down pull top of shutter toward you. Keep slipping shutter slightly and trying until streaks disappear. Then tighten up screws 739. When travel ghost develops, first be sure screw 740 (P 6) is set up tight. To set a new shutter, proceed as follows: Place shutter on shaft as shown in P 6, with hub toward end of shaft. Set screw 740 (P 6) in groove and tighten it. Loosen screws 739 (P 6) so that shutter revolves freely on inner hub. Open gate and turn flywheel backward until intermittent sprocket is just at point of moving. Set shutter as shown in P 6 and tighten one of screws 739 slightly. Then proceed as directed for travel ghost. For very short focus lenses the Nicholas Power Company will supply a special shutter on application. The blade with stamp 731 (P 6) on is the wide blade and the only one to be considered at all in setting shutter.

Travel ghost may be caused by (a) screw 740 (P 6) loose. (b) Collars 638 (P 4) not set up snugly against boxing, thus allowing end play in shutter shaft. (c) Gear 680 (P 3) loose on its shaft. (d) Gear 633 (P 4) loose on its shaft. (e) Badly worn gears. Anyone of these things, or all combined may cause travel ghost. Screws clamping shutter blade in flanges of hub being loose might also be responsible for it.

No. 27.—Fly-wheel.

In replacing fly-wheel after removal, be sure that washer 748 (P 7) does not catch on dowel pins 747 (P 7) and that dowel pins 747 engage slots 746 in fly-wheel pinion 677 (P 7). It is well to grind down the end of an old file into a wide, thick screw-driver to use in removing screw 709 (P 3). In replacing fly-wheel, set screw 709 up quite tight.

No. 28.—Automatic Shutter.

To remove friction case cover of automatic shutter, 623

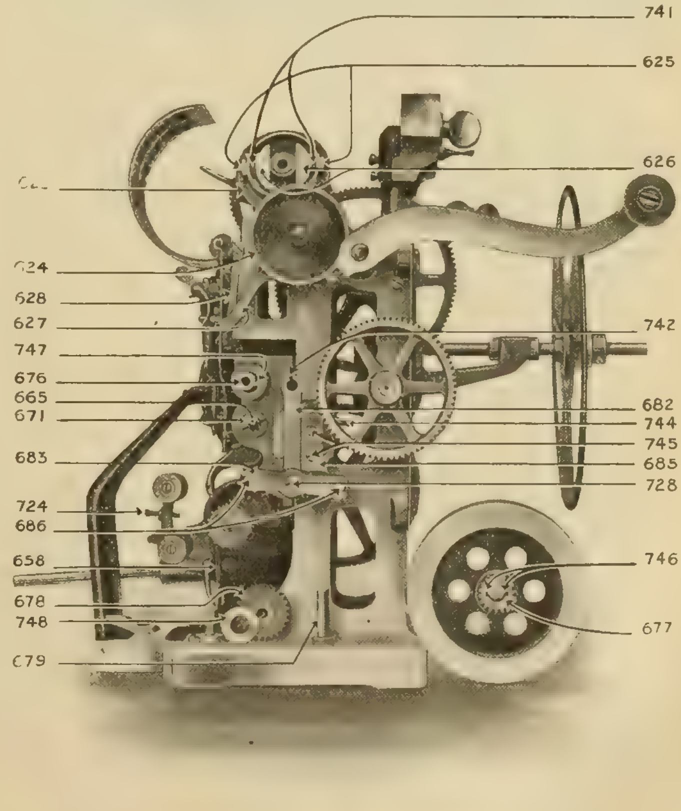

Plate No. 7.

(P 2), loosen screw 718 (P 2) and back it out several turns, as it is countersunk into the shaft. Set machine so that gear 621 (P 4) will not strike spokes of gear 630 (P 4) and then tap gently on end of shaft 622 (P 2 and 3), using a soft punch or a piece of wood. A washer is sometimes placed between casing and cover hubs. Don't lose it; also don't forget to put it back.

No. 29.—Automatic Shutter.

Should automatic shutter fail to drop, examine lever 627 and connecting link 628 (P 7) and see that they work freely and are not bent. Take off cover 623 (P 2) (see instruction 28) and see if springs 741 (P 7) are in good condition. Also examine inside edge of friction casing and see if it is as it should be and not rough or scratched.

Should automatic shutter fail to raise properly, first try a drop of heavy oil. The clutch acts by centrifugal force throwing out weights 626 (P 7), overcoming action of springs 741 (P 7) and forcing friction shoes 625 (P 7) out against interior rim of casing 624 (P 7). This revolves the casing, forcing lever 627 (P 7) ahead and raising shutter flap 697 (P 1). Do not use thin oil in automatic shutter friction casing as it tends to reduce friction too much. Use a heavy oil sparingly.

No. 30.—To Remove Framing Carriage.

To remove the framing carriage from the machine, first take off aperture plate 687 (P 2). Remove the gate by taking out the three screws holding its hinge. Remove the flywheel (see instruction No. 2). Take out screw 651 (P 4). Next loosen the screws holding upright support rods (two of them) upon which framing carriage slides up and down, pulling rods out from below. The whole framing carriage may then be lifted away. After removing old carriage a new one may be installed by reversing the process of taking it out. Two of the screws holding support rods may be seen by looking in through projection lens hole in front plate of machine.

No. 31.—Removing Framing Lever and Its Connections.

To remove framing device proceed as follows: Remove lower sprocket shaft 645 (P 3) by loosening screw 738 in sprocket 646 (P 2) and pulling shaft out to the left. Take off wing-nut 652 (P 5) and bolt. Remove latter by backing it out with screw-driver; 651 (P 3) is head of this bolt. Remove screws 651 and 730 (P 4) and the whole thing will then come away.

No. 32.—Anchoring Machine Table.

Machine table should be perfectly rigid. To accomplish this, set legs in floor sockets (to be had of Nicholas Power Company), spreading the legs slightly before fastening sockets to the floor. If the table is not set solidly, there may be vibration and a slight swaying of the head under the pressure of the crank which will cause side motion of the picture on the screen.

No. 33.—Keep Sprockets Clean.

The face of all sprockets, but particularly that of the intermittent sprocket must be kept scrupulously clean. This is of the utmost importance. Dirt and gum on face of intermittent sprocket are likely to cause picture to jump on the screen. Dirt and gum on upper or lower sprockets are likely to cause film to run off the sprocket, thus losing the loops. An ordinary toothbrush is best for cleaning the sprockets. It should be used every day. Just a little kerosene on the brush will help if there is gum on the sprockets.

No. 34.—The Film.

The upper magazine must be so set sidewise that the film will come down to the upper roller straight and without any side pull. It must leave the lower sprocket and enter the lower magazine without touching either side of the magazine valve. The machine is threaded by bringing film down from upper magazine under large roller in front of top sprocket, and up over the sprocket, closing top sprocket idler down on film. Carry film down across aperture and engage sprocket holes with teeth of intermittent sprocket, it will form upper loop of proper size. Close in- If you stretch the film down tight and then raise it a little more than two pictures before engaging with intermittent sprocket, it will form upper loop of proper size. Close intermittent idler down and then close gate. Next bring film up over lower sprocket and close its idler, leaving a loop between the intermittent and lower sprockets long enough to reach down an inch below top of lower sprocket. Carry end of film on through valve of lower magazine and attach to lower reel in usual way, taking up all slack by revolving lower reel.

No. 35.—Lower Magazine.

The lower magazine should be so set that it hangs straight up and down and in line, front and back, with the table. The belt must be crossed so that as you look into the magazine the front of the reel travels down, the reel traveling clockwise.

No. 36.—Take-Up Tension.

The take-up tension is adjusted by setting the collar on pulley end of spindle in or out, thus applying more or less pressure to the spring which holds the two halves of the grooved, split pulley together. Tension is not regulated by the belt but by the two halves of the pulley rubbing together under more or less friction, according to how much is supplied by the spring. Take off the belt and pull the two halves of the pulley apart a little and you will see how it works. There should be no more tension than barely enough to revolve the reel when it is full. Anything more is very hard on the film and tends to cause loss of the lower film loop.

No. 37.—The Lamp.

The lamp should not be allowed to become dry from lack of lubrication. It is next to impossible to properly handle the light using a dry lamp? Once a week take the lamp apart, all but the insulated joints, which should not be disturbed, and grease all screws and moving parts with vaseline, wiping all surplus off. Then drop all screws and moving parts into a box of good graphite. Shake off the surplus graphite, but do not wipe it off, and put lamp together again. You will be surprised at how much better you can handle the light. Keep metal clean where carbons make contact with it. Scrape and clean thoroughly at least once a week. Dirty carbon contacts induce heating and loss of power and light. Be sure the wires make good electrical contact with lamp binding posts. When terminal lugs become burned, throw them away and put on new ones. It does not pay to use burned lugs. When wires inside lamphouse become burned (the life gone out of them), cut away the burned portion. Burned wires cause high resistance and loss. Unless removed they will eventually burn off entirely, causing vexatious delay.

No. 38.—Setting Lens.

Screws 704 (P 5) holding lens-ring should be loosened after lens is screwed into place and turned until handle of lens is in most convenient position. The screws may then be set up just tight enough to hold the ring firmly in place.

NEW QUARTERS OF CLEVELAND LOCAL NO. 1.

On Wednesday, December 20 the Cleveland Local of The Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America held their first meeting in their beautiful new quarters, located at 1459 West Sixth Street. Great surprise was expressed by the members when they came to the meeting and viewed for the first time new and elegantly furnished quarters, which they could really call their own. The committee in charge of securing and furnishing quarters consisted of Mr. S. Lustig, C. M. Christenson, and S. Bullock. They were given full power to act, and it is needless to say that they made the most of their duties.

The meeting room was artistically decorated with Christmas greens, heavy green streamers hung across the large room from the corners of the ceiling, encircling an immense welcome sign, which hung directly above the president's chair, which was a large upholstered leather armchair, in front of which was a quartered oakstand and gavel.

President S. E. Morris accepted his chair with much satisfaction. A large roll top desk of the latest design awaited L. H. Wilk, secretary, and a desk of the flat variety for F. M. Kenney, the able financial secretary. An enormous rug covered the center of a parquet floor, and six large brass cuspidors stood ready to receive the ash from the Havana Perfectos which the committee had on hand for the members. Thirty-six oak chairs were provided, with plenty of room for more, as the occasion demands.

It is the intention of the organization to install a supply department, in the near future, and carry a full line of machine parts, carbons, tickets, etc., and furnish same to the members at actual cost. Cleveland Local No. 1 was the first organization of motion picture exhibitors in the country, and called the first national convention, which was held in Cleveland, Ohio, August 1-3, 1911.

L. H. Wilk, Secretary.

THE SCAPEGOAT.

"You say the boy's maternal grandfather was a highwayman?"

"Yes."

"And his paternal grandfather was charged with arson?"

"Yes."

"And his aunt is a shoplifter and his uncle a counterfeiter?"

"Yes."

"Then to what do you ascribe his waywardness?"

"Why, to moving pictures, of course."

—From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

JACK HOPKINS.

Jack Hopkins has been a Lubin player, but he has left the Philadelphia company to come to New York to obtain a position in the only real town. In Lubinville he was for the greater part of the time the juvenile lead in the comedy company under Arthur Hotaling, but he has also played under Barry O'Neil, one of the dramatic directors, and the other branches of the Lubin staff. Light comedy and romantic roles are his forte and he has played the lead in "A Near-Sighted Chaperon," the tall miner in "A Human Torpedo," the count in the new version of "A Hot Time in Atlantic City," the father in "Willie's Conscience," Jack in "Jack's Umbrella," the young lover in "Object Matrimony," and one of the two vacationers in "A Gay Time in New York."

Mr. Jack Hopkins.

Mr. Hopkins has had both stage and literary experience and can write as well as play in photoplays. He is a comparative newcomer in the motion picture field, but his work has been clean-cut and effective, and in spite of his comparatively short stay he has already become a Lubin favorite.

POWERS SPRINGS INNOVATION.

The latest novelty, a real novelty in moving picture, comes now from the Powers Picture Company. It is a moving picture, full of stirring incidents, that does not throw its story too directly at the spectator. It leaves something to the imagination, and when the picture is finished the spectator is left thinking hard. There will no doubt be conflicting opinions as to just how the picture should finish, and the Powers Company is going to give the picture patrons a chance to voice their ideas. Each theater will announce a prize of five hundred dollars for the best letter, the replies to be addressed direct to the Powers Company. The picture will be released in January, and there will be a fine array of special literature to help the exhibitor boost.

IT'S "MARGARITA" FISCHER.

The first information issued by the Imp Company regarding the name of its new leading lady was to the effect that her name was "Margaret Fisher." It seemed scarcely possible. An actress named just plain "Margaret"? Not so, for close upon the heels of the first publication came the correction and we now advise our readers that her name is properly spelled "Margarita Fischer."

Comments on the Films

"WINNING AN HEIRESS" (Essanay), December 21.—A very amusing, yes, a delightful farce. It tells how an impecunious young man took a course in automobiling at Chug's School, including instruction in running over a man, and then got a job as Mrs. Van Riche's chauffeur. It is very welcome.

"THE FOILING OF RED DUGAN" (Essanay), December 21.—Red Dugan had vowed he'd get even with Judge Morton for sending him up. When he escaped he attempted to carry out his threat, but was foiled by Judge Morton's little son. It makes a very pleasing picture. The suspense was "nursed" a bit at the climax, but the picture will be popular.

"THE MAID OF ARGOS" (Gaumont), December 23.—An old Grecian legend furnished the scenario for this picture which the Gaumont people have made extremely beautiful. The Maid of Argos was chosen, a human sacrifice, to appease the gods and free the city from the plague. The high priest chose her and later because he loved her, freed her and wanted her to escape with him. She had refused the help of her lover, because she thought her death would free the people from their distress. When the priest tries to steal her away, this lover kills the priest. Diana's priestess declares that the priest has been the needed human sacrifice and all goes well. Some of the scenes of this picture, especially one showing a sail boat on a quiet river, and again one showing a balcony with great columns overlooking a harbor, are beautiful.

"PAT CLANCY'S ADVENTURE" (Edison), December 23.—A comedy farce suggested by O. Henry's story, "The Shamrock and the Palm." It relates the adventures of one Clancy, who thought he was going to be a general in a Guatemala revolution, but found that he was expected to help on the good work of making a railroad. Clancy and others from the Shamrock Isle did make a revolution and the Guatemalian contractor had to escape. It is amusing, some parts of it are very funny.

"A REFORMED SANTA CLAUS" (Vitagraph), December 22.—A Christmas story of rich and poor picturing the reformation of a hard employer whose men were on strike, but who refused to arbitrate or even to argue. He takes refuge from a mob in a dressmaker's and while there agrees to play Santa Claus for her children's tree. The Christmas spirit gets into his heart and makes him more reasonable, even generous. It isn't one of the Vitagraph life-portrayals, at least not in its details, but it is full of the right atmosphere and very pleasing. Its only fault is that there are minor things in it that do not powerfully convince.

"FROM PITY TO LOVE" (Gaumont), December 26.—A medieval love story of which the hero, a count, learns that he has that dread disease of the Crusaders, leprosy. He is told that the heart's blood of a young girl alone can cure him. Louisa, a daughter of one of his tenants, offers her blood. The count learns of her intended sacrifice and hurries to prevent it. The door of the room in which the physician is preparing to stab the young girl is locked and the count has to force this to stop the sacrifice. He is then examined again by the physician who finds that he has made a mistake and that the count is clean. The Gaumont pictures are notable, among other things, for their good coloring. This film is very beautifully colored. While the story is not so interesting as the best Gaumont pictures, which are often gems, it is very entertaining.

"SERGEANT WHITE'S PERIL" (Lubin), December 23.—All the characters in this well-designed military picture are interesting and sharply contrasted, a very important feature in a melodrama. We know and we like them better for being our old friends, the United States sergeant, a fine soldier, his sweetheart, a Mexican girl, and the villain, also Mexican, who loves the girl, is jealous of the sergeant and makes trouble. The cavalry troop (real soldiers) come to the rescue of the sergeant strugglnig in a wild mountain torrent. The sergeant is brought to shore and then he and the troops get the girl out of the villain's power. The picture doesn't drag and is very acceptable.

"INDUSTRIES OF THE SOUTH AND WEST" (Selig), December 15.—This industrial film is given up wholly to representation of the principal occupations and business enterprises of those two sections of the country. The different business operations are so clearly and carefully shown that there can be no question about their being understood by the audiences. Any manager will do well to include this in his program. It will convey a new impression of the many wonders which are developing in both the South and the West. Every resident of the country will be interested to know the situation there.

"THE MISSION FATHER" (Melies), December 21.—A tale of hacienda life in old California. In this picture the Melies people have produced a work of much dignity and beauty. There are scenes in it that will appeal strongly to the most fastidious and critical lover of art and the picture as a whole will appeal as strongly to the natural feelings, because of its human truth. It tells the story of an Indian slave's heart, the Mission father being brought in merely as a means to that end. In the first scene (excellently conducted and there is no scene in the picture that is poor) the slave is beaten by his master, the Don, and for a little fault; the Mission father intercedes for him. When the Don is stricken with small-pox, the slave and the priest show forth as more competent than any around them. The priest nursing the Don back to health, catches the disease and dies. The slave half-mad with grief would have killed the Don, if he hadn't also shown much grief just in time. It is a beautiful picture.

"BROWN OF HARVARD" (Selig), December 21.—This picture is an adaptation of the popular stage production of the same name. It is a rather complicated story for a picture and, at first, it is hard to distinguish the characters and keep in mind what they stand for in the picture. Where there are so many, one is seen for a moment and then gives place to another. When the first is seen again the spectator has to work hard to remember what he was doing when last seen. It takes several scenes before we reach an easy acquaintance. This is the only noticeable weakness of the early scenes of this unusually interesting picture of college life. It is set in very appropriate backgrounds that seem very much indeed like Cambridge, Mass. The story deals with the adventures of Tom Brown and his sweetheart and college friends, one of whom is a weak character who comes very near discrediting Tom. There is a very good boat race with eight-oared shells; perhaps the best thing in the picture. The players do very well and are pleasing, especially the heroine, Tom's sweetheart. It is a picture commendable to spectators who will catch its early scenes closely enough to gather up the threads of the story.

"A TERRIBLE DISCOVERY" (Biograph), December 21.—A very strong picture, well conducted and intense. This reviewer has never sat before a picture that got more grip upon an audience. Around him there were ejaculations, soto voce, profane, but the sincerest kind of applause. The tense moments come during a struggle between a gangster, determined to shoot the city's district attorney, and that worthy official. It takes place at the district attorney's house. His little son (a very well played part) had gone for help. There are no noticeable weaknesses in the picture. The impression made by the player who pictured the gangster was peculiar. His natural face is unusually kindly. He seems the kind of man that a lost child would address first; yet, as soon as he got at his dastardly work, that kindly expression vanished; he became the terrible gangster. The way he got into the house was by dressing up as a poor and sick old woman. He was taken in out of charity. His true character was the terrible discovery of the title. It is ended satisfactorily.

"PAPA'S SWEETHEART" (Edison), December 26.—Simple and unaffected acting on the part of the whole cast tells, in this picture, a human story with the heart-touching truth and beauty that we look for in the best art. As the editor of "The Independent" has recently pointed out, and as the Moving Picture World has reiterated, the best moving pictures are on a higher plane artistically than the plays we see on Broadway. This picture is a perfect illustration of the fact that, for human realism and the presentation of simple stories of the lives people live, the motion picture is better than any other form of art; it is the perfect medium. It skillfully choses and sets before us certain moments, falling within the limits in this case of a few days, in the life of a widower who has three children. He has fallen in love again and the outlook isn't any too birght for the children; the spectator is a little anxious. A painting of the children's mother is hanging over the fireplace in a very home-like looking room. The three children, in a playful moment, "dress up," just for sport. The oldest daughter puts on the hat and dress her mother wore when sitting for her portrait. She looks just like her mother. The sight of her is too much for the father; he turns away from the new sweetheart.

"MODERN WEAPONS FOR FIGHTING FIRE" (Edison), December 26.—Aldermen and other city officials who haven't yet investigated auto fire apparatus might do worse than to see this picture which shows, with illuminating clearness, a comparison between the old and new styles of apparatus. It is an instructive picture.

"THE YOUNGER BROTHER" (Vitagraph), December 26.—An English military drama with the Soudan, at the time of Kitchner's second campaign, as its background. It is remarkably well put on. There seems to be so much of the real thing in it that one wonders where the different scenes were found; intelligence and rare good luck must have combined to make them. The story is worth while and is admirably brought out, and this, with the freshness of its local interest, the desert life of the Tuaregs, makes it most deeply interesting. There is, in fact, something of a Kipling quality to it. The heroes of the story are two English soldiers. One is captured by the stately horsemen of the desert. The other disguises himself as a dervish and rescues him. There's a regiment of lancers in the picture, and a regiment of Scotch Highlanders, and there's a smokey battle scene. It is a picture that one can safely commend to everyone, for any kind of audience, even the most exacting.

"A STORY OF THE WEST" (Essanay), December 26.—A prisoner escapes from a moving train, captures a horse and is chased by a posse through a country of beautiful trees. He takes refuge in an empty cabin. A few minutes later the posse brings in the owner of it, wounded by a blast. The shock of the blast has paralyzed the man's arms. From his hiding place the prisoner sees the man's wife spread the savings of ten years out on the table beside the wounded miner, telling him to imagine that some one is stealing it. The prisoner comes from his hiding and attempts to steal it, but the miner gets the use of his arms again very quickly. The central situation of the picture gets over effectively and there is an amused response to it in the audience. The picture doesn't drag; it's a good number.

"THE LITTLE WIDOW" (Selig), December 22.—A mining story with a pleasing love element. Forman, the miner, befriends a widow and her daughter and eventually she is enabled to return his kindness by helping him over a hard place in his business ventures. When later he attempts to repay the money she refuses, so he takes her and her daughter as well. A shipwreck, caused by fire, is one of its realistic scenes, and another good scene is when the gambler, having stolen the gold of the widow, scatters it along the sands to prevent anyone obtaining it again.

"THE MILLIONAIRE BARBER" (Essanay), December 22.—Through the activity of a local newspaper reporter a barber is suddenly elevated to the commanding position of a millionaire. He almost pulls through, too, and has an heiress nearly corralled when his impecuniosity is discovered and his bluff is broken down. He had a lot of fun while it lasted, but when the wealthy persons, with whom he has been hobnobbing, are shown by the reporter a picture of him in barber attire he is thankful to escape from the little town. It is a close call for him at best; but he lands a good job before we leave him.

"HOW SIR ANDREW LOST HIS VOTE" (Edison), December 22.—An excellent picture purporting to represent an English political intrigue. A certain member of Parliament, whose voice and vote would have passed an objectionable measure, is prevented from reaching the house in time by the opposition's inducing a girl to call for assistance just as he passed her house. She merely re-enacted a scene from amateur theatricals that she had played. This was sufficient to hold him until too late to take part in the debate or vote upon the question. Presumably the bill did not pass. The acting is extremely good and the plot is sufficiently strong to hold the interest of the audience throughout.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S CHRISTMAS DINNER" (Essanay), December 23.—This film is a novelty in Western productions. The idea of it is excellent and the method of working it out is to be commended. Broncho Billy is a bad man who has committed numberless crimes. In this instance, even though he had planned to rob a coach, he rescues the driver and a girl from death in a runaway and is invited with the rest of the crowd to a Christmas dinner at the girl's home. The incident results in his redemption and a decision to reform. The long ride through the mountains with the coach is attractive and there is a thrill in every step of the runaway horses as they dash away and the outlaw after them. When he climbs to the box and takes the reins from the girl's hands the audience is ready to cheer. The story and the action are alike excellent and this film will prove popular because of its unusual but altogether reasonable sensations.

"THE BULLY OF BINGO GULCH" (Selig), December 26.—The bully made the ranch foreman quit; the owner couldn't fire him, so he advertised for a new foreman who could. "Easy" Thompson, the circus bicycle rider, looking for a job, happens along just as the bully is making trouble for the owner, whose arm is in splints, and his pretty daughter. "Easy" knocks down the bully and is made foreman. The bully vows to "get" "Easy." There's a struggle and "Easy" makes the bully ride the wheel which is some fun. It is a well laid out picture. There is no scenery in it except the eye-full necessary to give background to the situation, which is kept moving and kept clear throughout. The last scene is a pretty picture under a lover's knot of trees.

"THE OLD DOLL" (Vitagraph), December 23.—The opening scene of this delightful comedy of sentiment is an old-fashioned primary school with Bunny as the kindly master. This scene introduces the old doll which is subjected to very hard usage by one of the boys. There is a very pretty sentiment running through this first group of scenes. They picture a close friendship between two little girls who are separated and as they part, the doll is exchanged for a ring; that was so each could remember the other. From that separation the picture jumps through some twenty years. We see the marriage of one of the girls to a rich man and are shown that the other has become a poor widow. She makes the dresses of the rich woman's housekeeper. While at the house, she steals a hand bag, because she is so poor, but is filled with remorse. The police searching her rooms, the rich woman and her husband being present the doll is found, and the poor woman recognized and forgiven. Of course, to make a character steal is always likely to weaken our sympathy. Aside from this weakness, if it is one in this case, the picture is unusually good.

"THE HIGHER TOLL" (Kalem), December 27.—The theme of this picture is the sacrifice a girl makes for the sake of her younger sister. She has promised to care for her, and does it, even to smothering her own love that her younger sister may be happy. The closing scene where, at her father's grave she pays the "higher toll," higher than her father expected, in her willingly accepted sorrow is emotional and dramatic. The Kalem players are always exceptionally good in plays of this type. The backgrounds are very pretty.

"THE STOLEN TREASURE" (Eclipse), December 27.—The story of two beggar children who are befriended by a woman and discover the location of a casket filled with rich jewels. They describe its location to their father, who enters the house and secures it. The children follow, see what he does and return the jewels to the owner. They receive a liberal reward. It makes a very interesting picture.

"FAIR EXCHANGE IS NO ROBBERY" (Eclipse), December 27.—On the same reel with the above is a short and rather boisterous comedy. A woman exchanges her costume for bloomers, which, of course, attract a great crowd. Just before she is seized, however, she manages to make her escape in a taxi.

"SCENES ON THE COAST OF NORTH AFRICA" (Gaumont), December 26.—On the same reel with the above a short travelog depicting scenes in the Canary Islands, giving interesting and informing views of the people and their manner of living. The operator made his selections well.

"A MODERN RIP" (Selig), December 25.—The only way in which this story resembles the oft repeated tale of the former Rip is in the fact that the hero is lazy, good for nothing and drinks too much. Arrested for some of his misdeeds, he is put in the village lock-up. There he thinks the matter over and the sight of his daughter causes him to determine to reform. When liberated he will not go home, but starts fishing instead. Then he performs a rescue of a child and is brought home in triumph as a hero. The reception his wife had arranged for him takes a different turn. The film ends with a thorough reformation and a happy and contented family. As a study in characterization the film is a success.

"CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS" (Biograph), December 25.—The favorite Biograph sleuths appear again in this film. They are employed by the vice committee to arrest some men who are running a gambling parlor. They are slow about it and allow the gamblers to escape. The committee, disgusted with the delay, make the raid themselves, seizing the apparatus. The sleuths, with a brilliancy which is quite common to them, arrest the entire vice committee for having in their possession gambling implements. The comedy is so good that the audience appreciates fully every move.

"A MIX-UP IN RAINCOATS" (Biograph), December 25.—This comedy shows consequences coming from a mistake in raincoats, which prove almost disastrous to one unfortunate benedict. Two partners own raincoats much alike. One is a married man, the other is still in the other class. The unmarried man receives a note from his girl and slips it in his raincoat pocket. His partner puts on the wrong coat and his wife finds the note. Imagination and experience can supply the rest of the story, and description would be inadequate to convey any impression of what happened to Brown.

"THE STUFF THAT DREAMS ARE MADE OF" (Edison), December 27.—A delightful burlesque of all the melodramas of yester year to which a high class comedy situation lends a world of fun. The audience laughed with whole-souled volume and the reviewer is still laughing. A young and romantic Miss in love learns that her father's farm is mortgaged. She falls asleep and then the melodramas, from "The Two Orphans" down, begin. She has her part in every scene, is the heroine, loved by the hero, a country boy friend of hers, and pursued by the villain and villainess, people she knew. And how it is acted! Mary Fuller takes the part. One of the managers of the theater came to where the reviewer sat and complimented the picture and this player's work especially. Wm. West is the farmer. The man who holds the mortgage, in the dream, the villain, is James Gordon. His daughter, in the dream the villainess, is Laura Sawyer, and the country boy, hero in the dream, is Yale Benner. It is a very commendable picture; but to appreciate it, one needs to have seen melodramas or moving pictures of melodramas.

"THE REVENUE AND THE GIRL" (Kalem), December 25.—A story of Kentucky, and of moonshiners, like others of its kind. The moonshiner's daughter in the end falls in love with the revenue man. Through her cleverness, her father and brothers, who had been captured, have escaped. The chief revenue man had been in the same plight, had been tied and gagged in the inner chamber of the cave by the moonshiners. His men, from a distance had discovered its entrance and had made the capture. They left the stuff in the cave on fire and their comrade within hadn't been noticed; but the girl had risked her life to save him. It is not as realistic, nor as convincingly acted as the best pictures dealing with this subject; yet it is far above some that have been released.

"A THIEF IN THE NIGHT" (Vitagraph), December 25.—This picture is listed under the title, "Some Good in All." It is called a Xmas drama. It is a good drama for Christmas or any other season, but it has not a holiday atmosphere. There are two interwoven plots; one shows how a thief, coming in the night, chances to visit the nursery where the sweet expression of a little girl asleep awakens his better nature. He is the means of helping the girl's father escape from a blackmailer who also came at midnight to demand $10,000. One can hardly sympathize with this man; who ought to have called up the Central Office and had a detective come and listen to the blackmailer's demand. No reason was shown why it wouldn't have been safe to do so. The second plot, that which deals with the thief, is more convincing and also interesting. The photography is so good that the moving characters are almost alive. It is a commendable number.

Independent.

"THE DIVIDED RING" (Solax), December 29.—A very commendable picture, well photographed and with a truthful, human scenario behind it. It takes much of its charm from the fact that the boy and girl who play the chief parts seem made to fill them. These children were orphans, adopted by different families, the girl by rich people who gave her every advantage, the boy by a cruel farmer. Each had one-half of their father's ring. The boy, very ill-treated, ran away and fell into the hands of a yeggman who taught him to enter houses. The first house he burglarizes is the home of his sister. She catches him in the theft, but her identity is convincingly disclosed to the boy by the half ring she has. The whole story comes out and the boy is also adopted by the foster parents of his sister. We repeat that the story is convincing, moral and very interesting.

"ON THE STROKE OF THREE" (Imp), December 25.—A very original idea is behind this dramatic picture. A reformed forger, who after serving his term became the trusted employee of a well-to-do farmer, used his ability to his employer's advantage. The farmer was away, the cashier of the town bank absconded; the bank was on the point of failure. He forged his employer's name, saved his little fortune, but lost his own reputation. He was in love with the farmer's daughter. Even after he had told of his former life, she remained true and the farmer also accepted him. It is a very satisfying picture.

"AN UNWELCOME SANTA CLAUS" (Rex), December 28.—A Christmas comedy. Mrs. Jolly had gone with the children to spend Christmas in the country. Mr. Jolly was preparing to have a rattling good Christmas dinner with the girls and boys; he was going to bring them all to the house after the show. Mrs. Jolly came back unexpectedly and saw the preparations. Jolly had bought presents for each of the girls. Mrs. Jolly merely substituted a few bits of trash for these, and wrapped them up again, letting everything go on as before. It was a dinner that was about as jolly as could be. When the jollity was at its height Jolly called them all into the other room where there was a tree and presents. Santa Claus gave these out and then they were opened. Say! they didn't do a thing to Jolly; they were tearing his eyes out when Santa took off her mask; it was Mrs. Jolly. The picture is original and extremely well put on.

It is pretty and very, very funny. The ending is a scream and there's no doubt about it.

"THE PORTRAIT" (Imp), December 28.—The picture tells the story of a young artist's model. She was in love with the artist, and the portrait—she destroyed it as it stood on its easel—was of the rich Miss Belairs. The artist had loved the pretty model until the rich lady came. He was very much in need of money. When the artist draws aside the curtain to exhibit the portrait to Miss Belairs and her friends, he finds it ruined. The ladies leave coldly. The artist and the girl both separately determine to commit suicide; but, by chance, they meet on the pier. The ending is satisfactory. It is a commendable picture, carefully managed and fairly well acted. Some of its scenes are extremely well interpreted.

"A MAILBAG ROMANCE" (Powers), December 30.—A melodramatic romance in which two men are rivals for the love of a woman. She can not readily decide between them and promises to wed the one who proves the more worthy. Knowledge of this leads one of them to use foul play to discredit the other, who is arrested for robbing the mails. The unscrupulous rival then marries the girl, but shortly afterward suffers an accident, is dying, and writes a confession. This the innocent man tears up to shield the widow. She, however, finds out the truth, procures his freedom and marries him. One of the marked assets of the picture is the pleasing personality of the heroine who, in the picture, is very pretty.

"A LESSON TO HUSBANDS" (Imp), December 30.—A convincing picture, a little bit of real life shown on the screen. It shows just how a foolish business man let himself be fleeced by a pretty girl. It will be liked.

"BROKE, OR HOW TIMOTHY ESCAPED" (Imp), December 30.—A comedy in which impecunious Timothy made good his escape from a landlady in whose boarding house he had a room and who demanded payment for his room. He pretended to have got a job as manager of a big restaurant, then he invited the landlady and the help, too, to dine with him. They had to pay for the dinners and he got the chance he wanted to get his bags out of the house. It makes a comic character sketch that will please.

"A REALISTIC MAKE-UP" (Great Northern), December 30.—A very good comedy, full of rollicking fun. The burglar called professionally on an actor who was made up as a tough character. He first tied him, but the actor managed to call up the police. He was a very genial burglar. When the police arrive, he turns the owner of the house over to them; but he, the actor, makes "a come back." If any man can see it and not laugh, he must be feeling very blue.

"PRIDE OF LEXINGTON" (Republic), December 31.—A two-reel number, telling a Revolutionary War story. Through one of the early scenes Paul Revere brings news of the British entrance on Lexington. Their arrival at Lexington is shown by scenes made on the spot. Jane McCrea, the Pride of Lexington, herself helps gather the patriot minutemen who harass the retreat which she watches from a window in her house. Later, while carrying powder horns to the minute-men she is wounded. Of the girl's two lovers, one sides with the British and the other in the conflict wounds him with a bayonet. For this he suffers great remorse. Jane is captured after the Battle of Bunker Hill, which is a very commendable picture; but General Howe permits her to go to her friends. Her British lover, who has recovered, is sent on a very dangerous mission. He is captured and is to be hanged as a spy although he is not one. Jane pleads with George Washington for her lover's life and it is given to her. It's a tragic story clearly told with many distinguished scenes. It is well acted. The last scene makes a commendable ending.

"CONSTRUCTION OF THE PIANO" (Lux), December 29.—A very instructive industrial, dealing with a subject that a great many people want to know about. It shows how the great mahogany logs are treated, how the wires are made and strung. We also see the putting together of the keyboard and the assembling of the instrument. It will be liked.

"CAUGHT BY CINEMATOGRAPHY" (Lux), December 29.—A village story in which a tramp-thief, escaping from a house he had just looted, is "caught" by the moving picture camera. The story is made dramatic by the fact that the housemaid of the rich farmer is accused of the crime. The pictured scene, however, disclosed the real culprit and a microscope revealed his identity. The police capture him. This is a very commendable picture. It gives an impression as real as life and is as interesting as can be.

"TWEEDLEDUM IS IN LOVE WITH A SINGER" (Ambrosio), December 27.—A farce that probably will entertain acceptably a great number of spectators, although it will not strongly appeal to people of refined and cultivated taste. The amusing character falls in love with a music hall singer, makes a great disturbance at the theater. On his way to her house he is robbed of his good clothes, but continues in tramp's attire. He walks into her room, finds her asleep in bed. Then there's another disturbance.

"TINY TONI'S EXPLOITS" (Ambrosio), December 27.—A child player with a part as policeman who is very small. His size is of great convenience to him; it enables him to hide. Any thief who steals anything in Tiny Toni's town need not be surprised if, on opening the box, Toni jumps out and arrests him.

"WILL YOU MARRY ME?" (Majestic), December 31.—A broad farce which will amuse those spectators out for a good time in a holiday spirit, although at times it borders on what not only is, but seems silly. The leading man is engaged. He has a quarrel with his sweetheart over a pair of white gloves picked up on the street and the engagement is broken. Through pique, he swears to marry the first girl who will have him and he then goes through the town asking every girl he meets to marry him. His sweetheart's cook accepts. It was she who lost the gloves. The fiancée finds this out and dresses up to look like her cook with amusing results.

"THE CADDY'S DREAM" (Majestic).—A golf-links farce in which a caddy is pictured as having a bad dream, in which he and his employers, a man and a woman, are engaged in an age-long search for a missing ball. We see them growing slowly old.

"WHEN MARIAN WAS LITTLE" (Solax), December 27.—A freshly amusing little comedy of a young girl, her hair still in curls, who tried to dress up so as to appear much older, because her brother was going to bring a chum home from college. She put on her mother's clothes and some of her mother's false hair and painted. The result was ludicious, but she learned her lesson, had a few tears and then some smiles. Two years later she met the same man at a party and accepts his invitation to dance. The picture ends in an exceedingly pretty scene. The lady who plays the lead is charming in this part and the whole picture is well handled by both cast and producer and is a good number.

"THE WRONG BOTTLE" (Eclair, American), December 26.—Perhaps the picture illustrates the truth in that line of Burns, "The best laid plans o' mice and men gang oft aglee." A young student was engaged to a girl at home who, while he was away at college, fell in love with another man. The student returned and found the girl married, the wedding guests were all there, and himself an unexpected, unwelcome guest. Two years passed, the woman's husband died poor; two years later she fell sick at her work in a sweatshop. Her little daughter came to the drug store of the first lover for medicine. His clerk put up the prescription from the wrong bottle; it was poison. The druggist ran fast and reached the little girl's home in time. He was overjoyed, for he also found his old sweetheart again. It is a very well acted and carefully constructed picture and gives a very pleasing impression. Perhaps there were scenes in it that, strictly speaking, were not necessary; but it is artistic and very commendable.

"THE SILENT CALL" (Eclair), December 28.—A very sensational picture and one that comes over with a decided punch. It deals with a daring robbery in a French, first class railway carriage. The girl who is robbed was alone and she flirted with the stranger. He gagged her and after taking all her jewels attempted to escape by jumping from the moving express. He lay stunned on the other track where, as is shown, the next train ran over and killed him. All this while, the girl lay gagged under the seat. Other passengers came into the carriage. To them she made the silent call for help. The feeling of suspense is very effectively produced by this picture.

"LITTLE WILLIE CURES UNCLE" (Eclair), December 28.—A farce with some very amusing incidents. Willie was a very bad boy. They took him to see Uncle who was gouty and melancholy. Willie truly earned a spanking, but so long as he amused Uncle, no real harm was done. His parent evidently considered that his damage was more than compensated for.

"BONNIE OF THE HILLS" (Champion), December 25.—A picture very pleasing in its sentiment and effectively conducted. It tells the story of a wholesome, brave-hearted girl of the North Woods. She was of much assistance to a rich man and his son, who while hunting become lost. The son fell in love with her and at this the father was very wroth. The girl, whose father and mother were dead, determined to make a lady of herself and sent herself to a fashionable school for young ladies. She became the friend of her lover's sister and was soon the means of saving her friend, her lover and their father from being robbed. This makes a thrilling climax. Her courage breaks down the father's opposition. This picture will probably please many.

"THE DOCTOR'S CLOSE CALL" (Champion), December 27.—The Eastern doctor, innocently among rustlers, was captured with them and nearly hanged. He, however, was related to a senator. He was saved from death at the critical moment by a troop of United States cavalry, directed by a telegram from Washington. It is not a slow picture; it never drags, and it has some unconscious humor.

"BONITA OF EL CAJON" (American), December 28.—Bonita, the daughter of a chief of rustlers, had met a sheriff while out on the hills and had fallen in love with him. Her love brought her a tragic end. The picture shows us how it happened and gives us her story. The band had captured the sheriff's American sweetheart and were holding her as a hostage. The dialogues between the captive and Bonita are very cleverly made clear by good acting. In fact, the conversation between these girls is one of the best things in the picture. Bonita is killed by a shot from her father's pistol. It is a commendable picture.

"THE EXPERT'S REPORT" (Thanhouser), December 29.—Seeing is believing. A capitalist is shown, in this picture, as sending an expert out to make a report on certain oil lands. A very unscrupulous character fells the expert and leaves him for dead and then impersonates him, making a personal report to the capitalist who believes he is talking to the man he sent out. The strange thing about this is that the spectator is as thoroughly taken in as is the capitalist. Lively heart-interest is given to the picture by the fact that truly rich oil lands are owned by a poor widow and her two daughters. These girls find the expert where he had been thrown, down in a well. The capitalist is about to sign the papers and take over the worthless land according to the scheme of the sharper when the real expert, the sheriff and the girls enter. The scoundrels are captured and the widow relieved of her poverty. Acting, photography and interesting backgrounds join to make this melodrama effective and pleasing.

"THE BEST MAN WINS" (Nestor), December 25.—A pretty heroine, the prettiest kind of scenery and natural acting will all be found in this picture which tells a romance in rural settings. The best man at plowing was to take the farmer-hotelkeeper's daughter to the barn dance; she seemed to be worth trying for, too. The peculiar form that this contest to prove the best man took (plowing) was her idea. Her father was worried about getting his fifty-acre lot plowed. There were guests at the hotel and there were young men of the village anxious for the honor and eager to be the best man. The plowing bee was a lively one. The man who won was a city chap and a guest at the hotel. The girl's father didn't like him at first. He proved to be an agricultural expert from the Department of Agriculture. So he won his pretty bride. There are many characters pictured around this central situation and there are lively incidents, one a runaway horse, which was conducted to seem like the real thing. It is a commendable picture.

"A WESTERN GIRL'S LOVE" (Nestor), December 27.—A lively picture clearly telling a melodramatic story of a sheriff's daughter who was loved by two men, a fine cowboy and a villain. The girl's father preferred the former; but the villain was the mother's choice; and with her help (she never saw through him until the end) he nearly won. A kindly halfbreed is introduced who helps the cowboy after he is nearly done to death by the villain. For this he comes near to being hanged as the would-be murderer; but the cowboy recovers in time not only to save his friend, but to confound the villain whose wedding plans he interrupts. Many of the scenes make pretty pictures and the story will interest.

"MUTT AND JEFF BREAK INTO SOCIETY" (Nestor), December 30.—This is very funny, as funny almost as any of the series. The story is now laid in California, with some excellent views of southern scenery as backgrounds. The actors are new. Perhaps they are better than those who formerly took these parts; but that is hard to decide.

"THEIR AFTERNOON OFF" (Nestor), December 30.—Exquisite pictures of semi-tropical public gardens make this film notable. The story is very amusing and is well told, but is slight. A young man and a girl scrape acquaintance. They both talk as though millions were behind them. Next day they meet again. She is a cook in a handsome dwelling, he the new milk man. They become friends. Perhaps they took other afternoons off to walk among palm trees and beautiful flowers.

"THE SIGN OF THE HELMET" (Powers), December 26.—A tramp and policeman comedy, not very refined, but there is nothing in it that seriously offends. The helmet was owned by the cop on the beat and was good for a glass of beer handed out over the swinging doors of the saloon. The tramp got beer with its help; but he discredited it and when the cop came back, he got slops.

"WHEN STEEL MEETS CLOUD" (Powers), December 26.—An instructive and very interesting picture showing much of the construction of those steel skyscrapers of great cities. Incidentally, many very interesting birdseye views of New York City are shown.

INTERESTING INTERVIEW WITH J. C. DEAGAN.

J. C. Deagan, inventor and manufacturer of the famous Deagan bells and other musical novelties, is back home again from an eleven months' trip around the world.

Mr. Deagan, accompanied by his wife, sailed from New York the 8th of last January on the Hamburg-American S. S. Cleveland, and visited the principal parts of Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Jerusalem and the Holy Land, Egypt, Asia Minor, Switzerland, France, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Denmark, Norway, Iceland and the British Isles.

In an interview with a representative of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Deagan gave a very interesting account of his trip, which included the Arctic region, as well as the tropics.

"We went as far north as Spitzbergen," Mr. Deagan said, "which is only 600 miles from the pole, a country owned by no nation, a land of eternal ice and snow, where the sun rises and sets only two months of the year, with five months of complete darkness and five months of continuous sunshine.

Mr. J. C. Deagan.

"A place almost as remarkable is Assouan, Egypt, on the Nile, at the tropic of Cancer, where it has not rained for five hundred years. Thousands of nude men are dipping water out of the Nile, by hand in buckets, exactly as they did in the days of the Pharaohs, to irrigate their crops. Here also is the site of the ancient city of Thebes, where inscriptions in the temples say seven million people dwelt in the time of its greatest prosperity—about 1800 B. C. Only the magnificent ruins with carvings, statuary and hieroglyphics now tell the story of the great metropolis with seventy gates. What a pity," Mr. Deagan said, "that we did not have a moving picture camera with us to portray all the remarkable things we have seen."

Of course the conversation drifted to the pictures. "There are some very fine moving picture shows over in Europe, especially in Holland and Germany. In Berlin we saw a film manufacturing plant as pretentious as anything in America. The exhibitor is making money, and generally gets a higher admission than over here. In Berlin they generally charge one mark (twenty-five cents) for the moving picture entertainment, and in Paris one and even two francs. The pictures are, on an average, better projected and in better condition than over here, particularly so in Holland, Germany and France. We saw some beautiful pictures in Italy and Austria. In some countries the moving picture is quite unknown, and we did not see a single picture show in Constantinople. My impression is that in many parts of Europe and Asia the opportunities for the motion pictures are far from being realized, and appearances indicate that there may be a large and profitable field for American capital and enterprise.

"Among other places of interest was the World's Fair in Turin, a magnificent exhibition where American industries were well represented. We had a small exhibit there ourselves of our musical novelty instruments and were awarded several prizes, among others the blue ribbon for our musical electrical bells.

"In London we saw the coronation, and a reproduction in pictures on the night of the same day."

Mr. Deagan also visited the place where his father was born, Nennagh, Tipperary County, Ireland.

Concluding the story of his travels, Mr. Deagan stated that he has a surprise in store for the moving picture exhibitors of this country, and said that after scanning Europe, and particularly Germany, for novelties in his line, and especially for something that might appeal to the moving picture people, he had been fortunate enough to run across a musical instrument called a "harmonium," which looks like a small organ and which, he declares, possesses some really remarkable musical qualities. Mr. Deagan believes this instrument will be an exceptional feature for the photoplay theater. The instrument will sell at a very moderate price, further announcements of which will be made in the Moving Picture World at an early date.

It was also learned that the site for a new factory has been obtained by Mr. Deagan, and that a large and modern plant will soon be erected to meet the ever increasing demands of the Deagan product.

CONCAVE SCREENS.

The Inventors' Specialty Company installed several of their concave screens in Chicago last week. A representative of the Moving Picture World visited the Park Theater, at 61st Street and South Park Avenue, where one was in operation, to see the screen as installed.

Mr. James Tank, the manager of the Park Theater, said it realized his long-felt desire for an even picture from all angles, regardless of what seat in the house the spectator may view it from. It also evens the picture when the picture is thrown at an angle above or at one side of the screen, says Mr. Tank.

MOVING PICTURES AND THE CHURCH.

Rev. Father M. J. Dowling, pastor of St. Aloysius Catholic Church, of St. Joseph, Mo., and former president of Creighton College, of Omaha, has established a motion picture theater in the hall of the parochial school and proposes to give shows each week on Monday and Thursday night.

Moving pictures at Sunday night services of subjects appropriate in character, will be the attraction at the First Congregational Church of Gardner, Mass., early in January. It is the opinion of the members of the church that religious stories in photoplay would be of benefit in the work of the church, and a committee has been appointed to secure funds for the purchase of a moving picture machine. The Rev. Burton S. Gillman will himself operate the machine and is already taking lessons in the operating room of the Gardner Theater, through the courtesy of Mr. W. A. Wesley, manager. To use his slogan, we know the above is true because "Wesley says so."

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE SHEEPMAN'S ESCAPE" (Essanay).

There is a big, powerful plot in this spdendidly acted dramatic photoplay of life in the West. It is a story which might easily be true, for its plot is founded on the early wars of the cattle and shepherd kings of the great Western ranges, when these were trackless, fenceless grazing pastures. It is a story which undoubtedly has its parallel in actual history, and it is a story told in a manner which convinces.

Tom Harper, with his widowed mother goes into the West and with his savings purchases a large flock of sheep. He is not unacquainted with the despotic rulings of his greatest enemies, the cattlemen, but he is not afraid. It is not long after his immigration that he hears from them in an anonymous warning, posted on the door of his cabin. The note is brief and to the point. "Warning," it reads, "This is a cattleman's country and not good for a sheepman's health."

Tom hesitatingly shows the note to his mother and she is apprehensive of trouble to come. She begs him not to carry any weapons, believing that without them, he is less likely to be shot, but he tells her firmly that he has as much right to the country as the cattlemen and will protect his flock at all costs. He then goes to the sheriff, shows him the note and points significantly at his gun. "I'm not looking for trouble, sheriff," he explains, "but they had better let me be."

Scene from "The Sheepman's Escape" (Essanay).

Tom is on his way back to his cabin, when, from out of a clump of bushes there comes a flash of smoke, followed by the sing of a bullet past his ear. Tom's horse wheels about, but not before its rider has fired into the ambuscade. The answer is returned in the loud shriek of a wounded man back of the bushes, and with a self-satisfied smile Tom swings his horse about and gallops away.

Buck Brady, the wounded cattleman, is carried by two of his pals to a shack on the opposite side of the hill, which is opened by a gray-haired lady, who solicitously makes up a bed for the wounded man and binds up his wounds.

In the meantime, Tom has ridden to the home of his sweetheart, a young widow, whom he tells of the shooting and of whom he asks shelter. It is not long before the couple hear the sound of galloping horses and the young woman opens the door to three revengeful cattlemen, who, though not sure that Tom is in the house, demand the right to search for him. This is refused and with the warning that "they will get him if it takes a week" they post themselves about the house to wait quietly for either Tom's coming or his leaving.

By a clever ruse Katy Lee's little girl is dispatched for the sheriff and this official is hurriedly summoned. He arrives at Mrs. Lee's cottage, orders the cattlemen off the premises, then escorts Tom to the county jail, where he is offered protection in a cell.

It is not long before a committee of the cattlemen arrives at the sheriff's office and demands the prisoner. The sheriff stands them off with a gun and, threatening to shoot the first man who advances a foot, holds them at bay.

In the meantime, when things are looking darker for Tom, Buck Brady has learned that the good Samaritan who has nursed him is the mother of Tom Harper, and moved by her tender solicitude he confesses that he had tried to shoot Tom and had been shot by Tom himself. He then declares his intentions of confessing to the sheriff, being fully aware that if Tom has not been hung already, his friends will see that little time slips by before this is accomplished.

Consequently, he arrives at the sheriff's office, just as the others are about to take the sheriff by force, and stumbling through the crowd hands the sheriff a signed confession that he and the others had plotted to kill the sheepman and that he had been wounded by Harper, who acted solely in self defense. Cheated of their prey the surly cowboys turn away and Tom is liberated, and told by Brady that he need have no further fear of violence at the hands of the cattlemen. This photoplay is booked for release Saturday, January 13.

"THE TRINITY" (Imp).

An old taxidermist, whose bachelor companion is a young artist, receives a letter from his brother in Germany informing him that he is sending his baby for a short stay with her uncle. The taxidermist and the painter are alarmed at the imminent invasion of their peaceful home by a baby. Nevertheless they buy her toys and go off to meet her. "Baby Lena" turns out to be a handsome young woman, with whom, in due course, the artist falls in love and she with him. The old taxidermist is fearful lest he should lose the companionship of his artist friend. This is averted by the young couple agreeing to have their new home next to his and thus a trinity of friendship is established.

Scene from "The Trinity" (Imp).

This delicate piece of sentiment is exquisitely rendered by King Baggot, Miss Fischer and William Robert Daly. The settings are in harmony with the pretty story and the film appeals to all in virtue of its quiet restfulness and poetry of theme. "The Trinity" is to be released Jan. 4.

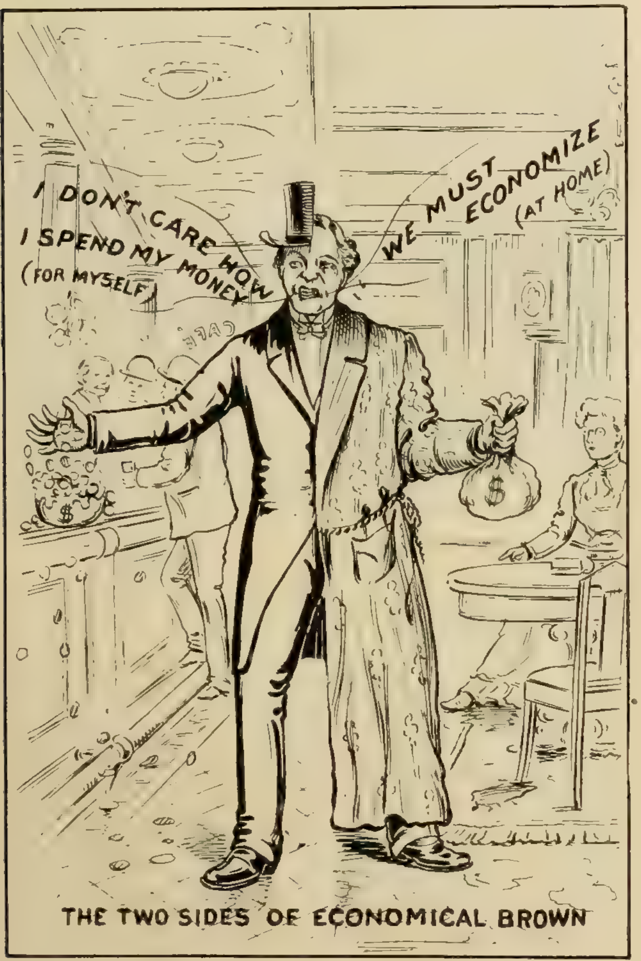
NEW THEATER FOR TROY, N. Y.

E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Novelty Theater, Troy, N. Y., is building a new picture theater which will be called the "Plaza." As soon as the new house is completed Mr. Weinberg will devote his entire time to the enterprise.

"ECONOMICAL BROWN" (Solax).

When the motion picture shall have become like the newspapers and the magazines, the mirror of our times, it will have attained its highest educational merit. To reflect from the screen all the frailties of human nature; to show graphically the ambitions and the machinations of society should be the ambition of all good scenario writers and producers. Only in such a way can the motion picture become a force for good. The trend to-day is in those directions.

In the Solax production of "Economical Brown" is reflected a peculiar characteristic often discernible in many American husbands. This characteristic is one of extreme extravagance outside of the home and absolute parsimony on the inside. In other words, there are men who never stint themselves when they are "out" with the "jolly bunch" having a good time, but as soon as they cross the threshold of their own homes they are seized suddenly with a wild desire for economy. Usually the wife is the sufferer.



I DON'T CARE HOW I SPEND MY MONEY (FOR MYSELF)
WE MUST ECONOMIZE (AT HOME)
THE TWO SIDES OF ECONOMICAL BROWN

"Economical Brown" is just such a man. Good cigars, taxicabs, high-class tailors and good wines are not too good for him, but his wife, he insists "must economize." Brown's wife is too clever for him, however; she soon shows him how truly wrong are his principles of economy. In fact, she has such convincing arguments for him that he finally loosens up and "comes across" with a three-figure check.

Miss Fanny Simpson, the clever comedienne of the Solax stock company, plays the part of the wife, and Miss Simpson plays it very acceptably, and not only "puts across" all of the comedy situations, but injects into her work the buoyant spirit of a young wife with a sense of humor. A very pleasing likeness of Miss Simpson was printed in the World of December 30.

"THE BEST POLICY" (American).

Ever watch a dress rehearsal? Then you remember that the stage director spent much of his time in tearing his hair and shouting, "Give it more snap! Don't die on the scene. Action! Action! Action! That's what I want."

Action! There is the keynote of the American release for January 29, entitled "The Best Policy." The picture opens with a spicy bit of action and the scenes are carried along with a snap and go to the very last picture. Those persons fancying the typical Western comedy heavily surcharged with constant laughter and incessant shifting of plot and scene, will enjoy "The Best Policy."

That it was a study in pantomimical facial expression was the remark of one critic, caused, no doubt, by the fact that all scenes are staged in dense underbrush and the characters are moved so close to the camera as to practically fill the entire curtain.

The story is breezy, decidedly new and novel in thought, and delightfully executed. Three gentlemen looking somewhat the worse for wear, are seen forcing their way through the thick semi-tropical growth of Southern California. Caution is expressed in every movement, for be it known, these gentlemen are seeking rest and freedom from excitement. If the bag of loot they are carrying between them does not ably express this thought, the subsequent scene showing the sheriff and a determined-looking band of rangers, posting a reward notice for the capture of three train robbers, certainly does. The dilapidated trio bear the respective and respectable names of Boggs, Briggs and Boswell.

Boggs is almost twice the age of his companions. He has seen many a tiresome day wind to a sunset close, through the gossamer steel web of a San Quentin prison window. "I-for-me-me-for-I" is the sound logic of his creed, rigidly adhered to.

They camped. They slept—or pretended they did. Boggs and Briggs determined to appropriate all they had, thus leaving Boswell free to mend his way and clear his conscience. But Boswell overheard and while the older robber went away to place the treasure in a hollow tree, Boswell bitterly upbraided his companion. So, Briggs relenting, the pair decide to give the old man the double cross. Proximity of the rangers prevented Briggs and Boswell from retiring very far into the underbrush; hence old Boggs overhears and decides to double cross both of them. So he leaves the treasure in the tree and places in his vest a false package. Then Briggs held him up and secured what he thought was the treasure. Finding it all his own and deciding that a whole loaf is better than a half, he sees no necessity for sharing it with Boswell. A chase ensues, Boswell catches Briggs, sits upon him and removes the loot quite handily. And then—horrors of horrors! they discover the gross fraud perpetrated upon them!

Meanwhile, Boggs has lodged himself comfortably against a tree. He draws from his shirt the real loot and examines it, long and earnestly, looking up with a pleasant smile just in time to sight down the wrong end of a gun barrel. The law catches tight hold of poor Boggs' collar and Briggs and Boswell are left alone to speculate on the folly and futility of material things.

"The Best Policy" is well acted from start to finish. The story is largely told in facial expression and the pantomime is considerably above par. The photography is excellent. It will be released January 29.

INCREASED DEMAND FOR DIRECT CURRENT ECONOMIZERS.

The recent discussions in the columns of this paper on the subject of direct current economizers and motor generator sets has awakened widespread interest. A large number of exhibitors did not know that Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," has had direct current economizers in successful operation in various parts of the country for over three years, although the fact has been generously advertised in the Moving Picture World. Mr. Hallberg reports that his factory is very busy, especially on 220 volt direct current economizers.

THE COTTON INDUSTRY.

On January 13, the Imp Films Company releases a special film illustrative of the cotton industry in the Southern States. Everybody in the world should be interested in the film, as everybody puts cotton into practical use for some purpose or other. First of all we see colored laborers at work in the field; then the cotton is packed, ginned, sampled, and sold. The panorama of its local progress is completed by the reception of the great bales of cotton onto an ocean liner, in which it is conveyed to Europe. The center of the world's cotton manufacturing industry lies in the north of England, where there are innumerable mills devoted to the work of spinning. The cotton grown in the American Southern States supplies the larger demands of the foreign market.

ANOTHER MYSTERY SENSATION FROM THANHOUSER.

A young man, son of a retired merchant, enters his father's study and asks him for a loan. The father offers him some small change and the young man rejects the tithe with scorn. The father rages at the son, and a butler hears, or, at least, he claims he has heard, when examined by detectives who come when the father is found stark and suddenly dead on the floor of the study, and he tells the officers that the son has packed his suitcase and gone to the railroad station. Sure enough, the officers find the son there and "nab" him before he can board the train.

Scene from "The Twelfth Juror" (Thanhouser).

And searching him later, they find a large roll of bills, known to be missing from his dead parent's wallet.

Still, as a matter of fact, he did not take his parent's life.

But the butler did—you guess.

No; he, too, was guiltless.

Then who, you puzzle, WAS the murderer?

As it came out in court, there was no murderer. There was no murder. There was merely an odd combination of circumstances that made things look black for a clean-handed young man until "The Twelfth Juror," in the picture of that name, told a simple enough story that cleared him. Thanhouser issues the picture Friday, Jan. 12.

HER NOTION OF BLISS.

New Rochelle, Dec. 22.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City:

Dear Editor—This is in reply to your letter asking for a photo. I send you herewith a photo which gives my idea of perfect bliss. It was snapped while I was rehearsing in a picture called "Just a Bad Kid," and while I don't like a lot of rehearsals usually, I wouldn't have cared if they had a DOZEN rehearsals of THIS scene! The jam was the jammiest, peachiest jam I ever tasted. No picture can picture how I enjoyed it!

"Just a Bad Kid" (Thanhouser).

M. Thanhouser is going to give me a French poodle dog for Christmas and I know a lot of others will try to "surprise" me. But I'm "on" to most of them. But Mr. Adler bets me a dime that I don't know what his present will be. A Mr. J. T. Mann, of Dallas, Tex., is sending me a Texas prairie dog. These are very little dogs—no larger than a big rat. I will certainly have a merry "dog" Christmas.

Very truly,

The Thanhouser Kid.

"THE DESERT TRAIL" (Kalem).

Kalem will offer among its forthcoming releases a picture entitled "The Desert Trail," done by the No. 2 California company, in which is shown a particularly bleak and dismal bit of the Mojave Desert. What is meant by descriptive writers when they talk about the "waste of sand" is made clearer to us by the glimpses that are given in this picture of this region. Another feature of the picture is the fact that the actors who impersonate miners make use of the long-handled shovel and the miner's pan instead of the "D" handled shovel and a seive, as has been seen in the hands of some of the "Jersey" miners.

Miss Ruth Boland, Kalem's new "pretty girl," is also a prominent figure in this picture, and it is around her that a love story has been written upon which the picture is based.

Scene from "The Desert Trail" (Kalem).

Two young fellows are in love with her and, as usually happens, one is turned down. He doesn't seem to take it very hard at the time and, a little later, we see him and his successful rival start off for the mines.

The prospectors are successful and fill their pokes with quite a store of nuggets and dust and then decide to return home. On the way they stop in the desert over night. Here the fellow who got turned down wakes up in the night, steals his partner's gold and provisions and horses and leaves him marooned, while he hastens on to report that the other fellow is lost and probably dead in the desert.

This story is a great shock to the sweetheart of the lost miner, but she has a dream that night that reveals him staggering over the sand. Next day she tells her story to a girl chum and that girl sends her lover after the lost man. Of course he finds the wanderer at the critical moment and brings him in, whereat there is a happy reunion of the four young folks before the camera. Kalem has done this lost-in-the-desert idea much better in previous pictures.

NEW FEATURE FILM COMPANY.

Under the trade name of Theater Film Company, Moe Streimer, formerly with the Empire and the Great Eastern film exchanges, has started a business of his own to handle feature pictures, and all kinds of supplies and accessories for picture people. He has the only set of Langford-McVey 20-round fight pictures, taken in Paris, and a version of Dante's Inferno.

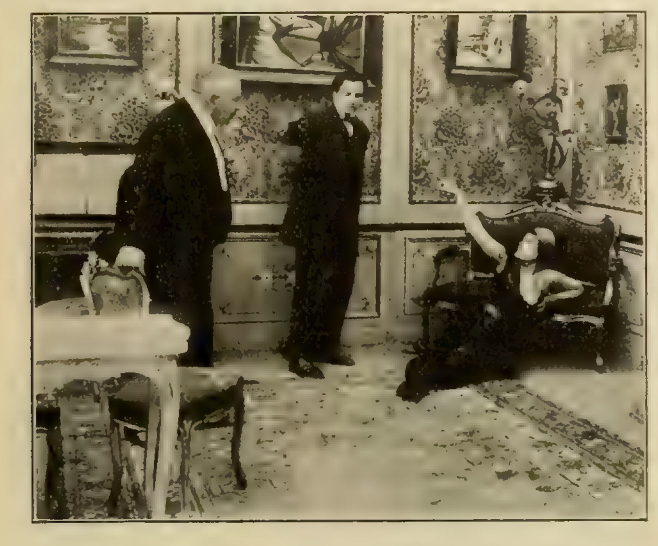
THE GAUMONT WEEKLY.

The Gaumont Weekly with events of interest happening in America as well as in Europe will be a feature of value to the Independent exhibitor, and will be released in the very near future.

In an interview with Mr. Herbert Blache, a Moving Picture World representative was informed as to the future release intentions of the Gaumont Co., which proposes to release early in January three reels of hand-colored subjects every week, and also the Gaumont Weekly. The Gaumont product will be sold direct to the Independent exchanges. On account of not being affiliated with the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co., its pictures will not be handled through the regular channels with the other Independent manufacturers.

"THE TEMPTRESS" (Great Northern).

The line of powerful dramatic feature pictures that are being released by the Great Northern Film Company is not weakened in the least by its latest release entitled "The Temptress." On the contrary, this picture sustains the character of the series in every particular. Dealing with the strongest sentiments and passions of mankind the Great Northern players, consummate artists, have the faculty of bringing out the full value of every situation and of making motives unmistakable. Thus, in "The Temptress," the design of the woman is most plainly, yet artistically, portrayed as she seeks to involve the man chosen as her victim. It is the boldness of the woman that accounts for the reluctance of the man and really saves him from the snare which she has set for him. Strong acting is required to save such scenes as are here portrayed.



Scene from "The Temptress" (Great Northern).

In brief the story is of a young clerk out of work with a sick wife to care for. He answers an advertisement and secures employment as private secretary to a wealthy man. Upon making his application he is critically observed by the man's wife, who thinks she sees in him a man suited to her own desires and it is through her influence that he secures the position. But the young secretary is true to his ideals and repulses the advances of the temptress and thus incurs her enmity. By a daring ruse she causes him to lose his position and then further avenges herself by writing a letter which falls into the hands of the poor fellow's invalid wife and causes her death.

When he comprehends the devilishness of the woman, the young man attempts to kill her, but is prevented by his little daughter. But he succeeds in denouncing her in the hearing of her husband and retribution overtakes the temptress in the end.

Rare photography characterizes this picture. January 6th is the date of release.

MOTIOGRAPH SALES INCREASING.

A visit to the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. reveals the fact that the year just closing has been the most successful in the history of their business, which was established more than thirteen years ago, and the sale of the Motiograph has continued on the increase throughout this entire year. The company reports a most gratifying increase in the last three months of the year, and although at the time of receiving this information only two-thirds of the last month in the year had been covered, the company reports that the sales for that period of December were in advance of the sales for the entire month of November, which, by the way, was one of the best months this company has ever had. Mr. Woodward, the manager of the company, is very optimistic over the prospects of the Motiograph for the year 1912, and already he has been working on plans which will make this machine even more popular than it has now become.

The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. introduced the Motiograph in the early days of 1908, and adopted then as their slogan: "Quality Before Quantity," and the exhibitors generally have gradually been brought to realize that the quality which this company has been advertising so consistently is really being put into the Motiograph, and to-day the record which this machine is making is one to be proud of. Within the last fifteen months the Motiograph has been installed in some of the largest and most expensive theaters throughout the United States, and a list of these installations would make most interesting reading, for one could walk along Broadway in Frisco and find that two-thirds of the machines used were Motiographs. In Los Angeles they could visit Mr. Clune's handsome houses and find the booths equipped with this machine. The same might be said of all the large cities throughout this country, and when one visits Europe and enters some of the large picture palaces in London, Edinburgh, and other large cities, they are surprised to find that the Motiograph manufactured in Chicago is the machine that has been installed. The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. wishes to express their appreciation of the business they have received from the users of the Motiograph and from their many friends among the exchanges, and to wish one and all a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

CHAMPION AEROPLANE RELEASE.

"An Aviator's Success" is the title of a very fascinating aeroplane story to be released January 8, 1912. It depicts the efforts of a young inventor to obtain financial aid to effect a realization of his aeroplane model.

Miss Blanche Scott, the famous woman aviator, assumes the leading role in this subject, as daughter of the banker who backs the young inventor in his project. Incidentally she loses her heart to the young genius, and crowns his achievement by bestowing on him her heart and hand, while they soar together in the air in the aeroplane's initial flight.

Scene from "An Aviator's Success" (Champion).

Just one word more about the handsome three-sheet poster which goes with "An Aviator's Success."

"PARSON SUE" (Solax).

To get comedy out of a Western subject without resorting to moss-eaten methods is quite an achievement. In the production "Parson Sue," a Western comedy, such a result is really achieved. Events and characters are given a new twist, with the result that the production stands out triumphantly as a distinct winner.

Even without Billy Quirk, the story would commend itself on its own merits, but with the genial and irrepressible Billy at his best, doing a comedy stunt, this film will make a man laugh even if he has been soaked for a double admission.

The story is about a bunch of cowboys who feel that they need the spiritual leadership of a parson. They send for one, and all go to the station to receive him. The boys keel over in astonishment when they find that the parson is a girl. Of course the chivalrous cow-punchers, who live in a section where the delicate influence of a woman is scarce, fall over themselves in an attempt to "get in right" with the new parson.

As time goes on, the new parson is the center of a plot which is laid by a villainous cowboy. The plot fails and Parson Sue is rescued by her lover at the expense of a bullet wound, which almost proves fatal, but Sue's nursing brings her rescuer around all right.

This is the first release in which Billy Quirk appears. The comedy is infectious. Billy puts things over in his inimitable way.

GEM COMPANY ANNOUNCES FIRST RELEASES.

Brief Review of Four Highly Creditable Subjects From the New Company.

The reader will remember that we were speaking last week of the Gem studio in general and of our very favorable impression of everything connected with it that we saw. Out of a couple of dozen finished negatives four have been selected to be the first releases appearing once a week, on Sundays, as first-run pictures. The initial release of the Gem Company will be

"The Defender of the Name."

This is a Civil War picture of intense dramatic interest. One of its most pleasing features is its historic atmosphere and fidelity to the Civil War period in the matter of costumes and settings. The story is entirely different from most war tales. The absence of the usual wartime love episode is somewhat of a relief, yet the story holds the interest from first to last. It has to do with the son of an aristocratic Southern family who joins the Confederate army and later is selected to cross the Union lines in quest of important documentary information. On his way he witnesses the execution of a Union spy and his courage fails him. He slinks back to his home where his sister observes his cowardly return and, a moment later, his more cowardly suicide, which is cleverly shown by suggestion.

Being an aristocrat by birth, the dead man's sister cannot abide the shame of a coward in the family. Acting quickly upon impulse she herself crosses the Union lines, invades the headquarters, procures the documents and retreats under fire after having shot one of the Federal officers. Reaching home in safety, she drags her brother's body to a part of the grounds and leaves it there with the much wanted papers tucked in his breast. There the lifeless youth is found and is later buried with military honors, as a hero, without anyone's knowledge of the real facts except his sister, "The Defender of the Name."

"Readin', 'Ritin' and 'Rithmetic."

A highly entertaining comedy picture to be released Sunday, Jan. 28th. The action revolves about a winsome school teacher who has the power of captivating the hearts of men without any effort on her part. The school-room scenes are realistic and highly amusing. One of her pupils is a large, stupid country boy whom she is obliged to punish. Through this punishment she comes into contact with the lad's irate father who comes to the school like a roaring lion and departs like a cooing dove, for he is at once smitten with the pretty school teacher and falls an easy victim to her charms. Before long father and son are both having day dreams of love and tenderness about the young schoolmarm and each privately makes up his mind to propose to her. Their reception at the school teacher's home as they appear in their Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes is very funny. They do not win her because she is already "spoken for" by a handsomer man. The incidental school-room scenes and the ensembles of school children are a touch of nature that will appeal instantly to all beholders.

"Under Her Wing."

A picture with more truth than poetry in it; a phase of everyday life that has not been overdone in pictures. An irresponsible husband of the type that has no right to take unto himself a wife and bring children into the world without some visible means of providing for them. The principal male character of the picture is that of a shiftless young man who has established a family and then found the task of providing for them an irksome matter. Being out of work more than not, a sister of his who lives with the family secures him a position in the banking house where she is employed as a confidential clerk and stenographer. He is thus placed in a position to provide for his family, but the crookedness in his nature rises quickly to the surface at the sight of quantities of money that are deposited in the safe every night. Taking advantage of his sister's confidence he commits a theft which is quickly discovered by the sister who immediately starts after her erring brother and arrives home a moment after him. She accuses him and demands the money, but in the midst of the accusation her employer and detectives arrive. Rather than see a needy family deprived of a bread-winner by imprisonment the sister confesses to being the thief and is, of course, arrested. Upon her is found the money which her brother had returned to her, but the police not being satisfied keep an eye on the young man and trick him into a confession. He is then arrested and the sister released, to the satisfaction of her employer. The employer learning the circumstances of the young man's family refuses to press the charge and reinstates the girl into his confidence. By this time the love of the sluggard's wife is completely dead and there are no regrets when he leaves home with his bundle to return no more. His sister then determines to become the bread-winner herself and takes her brother's family "Under Her Wing." The part of the improvident husband is played in a convincing and finished manner by Mr. Velfey, and the part of the stenographer is played by Miss Marion Leonard in her usual competent way.

"Through Twisting Lanes."

This picture will be released February 11th. It is a rustic story that involves the happiness of a young couple and treats with the question of elopement in a distinctly original way. The girl's father is quite positive that a good farm-hand would be a more desirable husband for his daughter than a fellow who paints pictures. Consequently his objections to a young artist who was working in his neighborhood and had fallen in love with the girl. In spite of parental objections the lovers were married by the elopement process and were expelled from home by the stern old father. They went to the city and got along nicely for some time, but the unanswered letters of the young wife to her parents were a source of unhappiness to her. Finally her artist husband thought of a plan for reconciliation. In working garb and with his mustache shaved off he applied for work at his wife's former home. The old man gave him a job and soon discovered that his new farm-hand was the best man around the place for work, and formed a great liking for him. Meanwhile the daughter had come home with the story that her husband had deserted her. She was welcomed back and was soon engaged in her household occupations of former days. The old man smiled with favor upon a love affair that seemed to be growing between his daughter and his new farm-hand, but it troubled him when he remembered that she was another man's wife. It all came out right in the end when he discovered the trick and found out that his artist son-in-law was also a rattling good farm-hand. Every scene in the picture has a direct bearing on the final result and the picture as a whole is extremely pleasing.

These new Gem pictures are remarkable for their style and execution. They can be considered an acquisition to the Independent programme and are going to cut a considerable figure in the photoplay business. H. F. H.

HAROLD A. LOCKWOOD.

The Nestor Film Company, always on the alert for new talent, discovered some months ago Mr. Harold A. Lockwood, a splendid looking young man and a most promising actor. Mr. Milton H. Fahrney, the Nestor Western director, and Mr. Thomas Ricketts, the Nestor comedy director, saw great possibilities in Mr. Lockwood, and he was promptly engaged to play juvenile leads in the Nestor stock company. The young man made good right from the start and was soon a favorite among the players of the Nestor Company. Under the able guidance of Messrs. Ricketts and Fahrney he is fast developing into a motion picture artist of no mean worth. Mr. Lockwood has a pleasing and magnetic personality and is one of the handsomest juvenile leads.

GAUMONT POSTERS.

The accompanying cut is a reproduction of one of the posters to be shipped with the second Independent release of the Gaumont Co., under the name of "The Christian Martyrs," a strong dramatic feature telling a story of the hardships and suffering and finally the triumph of the Christians in pagan Rome.

The story throughout is very clearly told and cleverly acted. The hand-coloring process through which all Gaumont pictures pass tends to make this subject more realistic. The last scenes, picturing the Christian martyrs being cast into a den of lions after offering a prayer, and their walking among these huge beasts unharmed, is nothing short of marvelous, and will hold any audience spellbound throughout its entirety.

The mere handling of so many full grown lions, forty in number, even though they are trained, is no easy task. The story, though portrayed in one reel, is one of the strongest features ever offered as a regular release on the Independent program.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS" (Rex).

A picture told in a distinctly religious atmosphere, although it has no particular bearing upon religion itself. The general treatment is reverent and a restful departure from the beaten path. A young organist who had not quite come to the point of declaring his love for the choir soloist found it necessary to choose between the church of his present occupation and another church whence the priest had been called. The priest desired his organist to go with him to the new church, thus placing him between love and duty. Not having the courage to propose to the young lady, the organist sent a letter declaring his love for the lady, and she answered with a note of appointment which she gave to her small brother to deliver. On his way he forgot all about the letter when he met another boy with a toy sail-boat. He was thus responsible for a change of destiny in two lives. The organist receiving no reply to his note at length yielded to the wish of the migrating father.

During the following three years the organist studied for the priesthood and became ordained. Meanwhile the choir singer, disappointed in love, had become a nun. They met one night at the bedside of a dying pauper and both were surprised at the turn their lives had taken. But now regrets availed nothing, for each had taken vows that could not be broken. Soon the young priest was selected to minister to a leper colony, which meant his isolation from the world in general and from the lady of his heart in particular.

The scenes of suppressed emotion are strongly wrought The entire picture is idyllic and tender. The final parting o the two Christian soldiers is pure and reverent, leaving an impression of devoutness and sacrifice that closes the picture like an unuttered benediction.

"A LESSON TO HUSBANDS" (Imp).

A young business man falls an easy victim to a prett woman who calls upon him and persuades him to change check for her. Had matters ended here no particular harm would have been done. But the girl with the checks is pretty and alluring, and entices her victim into further indiscretions. He lends her money to buy hats; he calls a her house and leaves her flowers. He is infatuated to suc an extent that he grows cold towards his wife. A newspaper paragraph recalls him to his senses. The "girl wit the checks" is a notorious creature against whom the publi is warned; her victims are business men.

This paragraph has a salutary effect upon the youn husband, who thereupon recalls himself to his duty and put himself right with his wife.

"A Lesson to Husbands" is very refined comedy, an King Baggot and Margarita Fischer enter so thoroughl into the spirit of the story that they enliven it with som very telling acting. This picture was released December 3

Mr. and Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, of 219 Madison Av nue, New York, gave a Christmas entertainment for the relatives and friends at their residence. Instead of tl usual Christmas tree and tableaux, moving pictures we the feature of the evening.

"We recommend to the chemical men in the Moving Picture trade who are having difficulty in securing good negative films, the following formula for tank development:

Distilled Water	60 gals.
Sodium Sulphite Anhyd	½ lb
Sodium Carbonate "	2 lbs.
Agfa Glycin	½ lb.

Time 20 mins., temperature 70°. Thoroughly wash the film after development before placing in the fixing bath.

The above formula will be found to give very brilliant negatives, and will entirely overcome any danger of fog." Yours very truly,

ECLIPSE.

LAZY BILL AND THE STRIKERS (Jan. 10).—The office force feel that they are being overworked, and led by lazy Bill, decide to go on strike. After the usual indignation meeting in a nearby hall, and several skirmishes with the police, they go to their respective homes to rest.

Lazy Bill is welcomed by his wife, and is told to "get busy" immediately at the housework.

The others may have fared better, or worse, but nevertheless, at the end of three days, they all appear at the office to apply for their old jobs.

POTTERY MAKING IN THOUNE (Switzerland) (Jan. 10).—The products of these potteries are known all over the world for their originality. We are shown how the dishes are shaped with the aid of the potters' wheel, then beautifully decorated by hand, and finally varnished, after which they are ready for market.

GAUMONT.

THE WINGED MESSENGER (Jan. 9).—Little Ethel is in great distress. Her father wishes to give her a new mother.

She has an inspiration; she will write a letter to her mother in heaven, asking for assistance, and attach this to the neck of a white dove, which is to be the messenger.

The fond father captures the bird, however, and reads the note. Greatly moved, he decides to give in to his daughter's wishes. After writing a tender answer, he attaches it again to the dove, which he places upon her bed in the morning.

Little Ethel wakes, reads the answer and is overjoyed. She then runs to the window and, full of gratitude, liberates her winged messenger.

GORGES OF THE VERDON RIVER (Lower Alps) (Jan. 9).—The Verdon River has carved for itself a wonderful gorge. In this film we can imagine ourselves in a motor car, taking a short trip through this veritable realm of rocks.

THE GOD OF WINE GETS STUNG (Jan. 13).—The wily old Bacchus falls in love with the beautiful Leona, and is very persistent until suddenly Cupid interferes in her behalf.

Plotting revenge, the God of Wine one day induces Cupid to become tipsy, and then deserts him, lying upon the river bank.

Lycas, a young shepherd, finds the sleeping Cupid and succeeds in restoring him, and, fortunately, at this moment, Leona appears, followed by the ardent Bacchus.

The shamed Cupid resolves to make things right and shoots one of his darts at Leona, who immediately falls into the arms of her true lover, the shepherd.

Bacchus sees that he is not wanted, and departs, possibly to drown his sorrows.

THE ARDENNES FORESTS, FRANCE (Jan. 13).—Situated in the northeastern part of France, these dense forests attract many hunters. The film shows how stags are imported from Bohemia, and allowed to roam at will, to provide excellent sport for lovers of the chase.

ESSANAY.

A HEN HOUSE HERO (Jan. 9).—Farmer Schmulz in the city hires a young woman to help with the work on the farm. Tom and Dave, the hired men, fall in love with the new girl, and each write a letter of proposal, and the girl, undecided which to choose, seeks the advice of farmer Schmulz and his wife. A chicken thief has recently made raids on the Schmulz hen house, and the old German promises the girl $50, if she marries the fellow "what catches dot chicken thief." That night Henry is accidentally locked in the chicken house by Dave, and it is much to the surprise of the farm folks when Henry enters the kitchen with the darky chicken thief, at whose head is levelled the butt end of a harmless bayonet. The girl gets the check and Henry gets the girl, while Dave is left to take it out on the cat.

THE TENDERFOOT FOREMAN (Jan. 11).—Edna Graham is advised in a letter from her father, given her after the old ranchman's death, not to attempt to run the big "Double K," but to secure a competent manager. Later, Edna is caused to regret not having followed her father's advice, as the men in her employ are surly and rude, and endeavor in every manner to make life miserable for her. Finally, she advertises for a foreman, and a few days later a young man, dressed in the height of fashion, makes his appearance, and states he is an applicant for the job. Jack Reed soon makes it clear to the boys that he means business, but the climax comes when Jack is forced to shoot Buck Bradley, the leader of the men, whereat the other boys plot to hang him. This is about to be consummated, but Edna comes on with the sheriff just in time, and the lynching is prevented. The two young people have loved each other from the first, and Jack finally promises to take the ranch and be proprietor for the rest of his life.

A RAGTIME LOVE AFFAIR (Jan. 12).—Betty Cutt is to inherit a large sum of money from her grandfather, providing she learns to play the piano within six months after her grandfather's death. This, while attractive, is not the girl's only prize to be won, for she is hopelessly in love with Jack Wright, and entirely in opposition to her father's wishes. Betty has no aptitude for music and it seems little likely that she will win the fortune. However, Jack schemes to get an electrical piano in the house and masquerades as Professor Teachem, who guarantees to teach the piano in one lesson, and soon convinces her father and grandfather's lawyer that Betty is a great pianiste, and thus succeeds in winning Betty. But, alas, the couple lose the fortune by forgetting to turn off the piano as they are leaving the house.

THE SHEEPMAN'S ESCAPE (Jan. 13).—Tom Harper, a young sheepman, lately arrived in the country with his mother, is warned by an unsigned note that "this is a cattleman's country, and not good for a sheepman's health." Tom goes to the sheriff, armed with the note, and a revolver, and tells this officer that he is not looking for trouble, but they had better let him alone. Tom, on his way home, is fired upon, and returning the shot, wounds one of the cattlemen. Tom turns his horse, and riding to his sweetheart's home, takes refuge there. The wounded man is carried to Tom's home, when his mother, unaware that the cattleman had sought her son's life, cares for him. In the meantime, a number of the cattlemen have trailed Tom to his sweetheart's home, where they lay in wait for him. Later, Tom is taken in hand by the sheriff and locked up in jail to prevent a lynching. But Buck Weaver, the ring-leader of the cattlemen, who was shot by Tom, learning that his nurse is the mother of the man he tried to kill, goes to the sheriff and makes a full confession that Tom shot him in self-defence.

KALEM.

A SOUTHERN BOY OF '61 (Jan. 8).—Cyril Brant's sympathies were with the North and his father, a loyal Southerner, informed him that the parting of the ways had come. Although his mother wept, his father refused to take his hand, when he departed to join the Federal troops. His cup was filled when his Dixie sweetheart coldly returned his ring and then, overcome by emotion, burst into tears as the brave lad drove away.

In an engagement upon the battlefield, Cyril led an attack and pursued a party of retreating Confederates, who quickly dispersed. Then it was that the youth came face to face with his father as an enemy. The tie of blood proved the stronger, and Cyril permitted Brant to return to his army.

Shortly afterward a skirmish took place near Cyril's home, and an enemy's bullet pierced his leg. Dragging the disabled limb behind him he crawled to the cottage of an old slave, Aunty Blossom, who helped him in and bathed his wound.

When one faces death, principles are prone to waver in the balance. Father and sweetheart came to Cyril's bedside with hearts overflowing. As the days passed and the end of hostilities was declared, the young man's devotion to the cause he thought was in the right, touched the brave Southern hearts, and won for him a forgiving parent and a loyal bride.

MRS. SIMS SERVES ON THE JURY (Jan. 10).—Mrs. Sims, a prominent suffragette of San Francisco, helps win a glorious victory for the cause. Mr. Sims is not quite in accord with his ambitious wife, and the straw that breaks the camel's back arrives next day, when Mrs. Sims is called for jury service. The lady, however, determines to do her duty.

Mr. Sims disapproves of his wife's activity for Women's rights, and persuades his stenographer to help him in his plan to teach Mrs. Sims a lesson. To carry out his scheme Sims invites his stenographer for a ride in his automobile. The young lady likes to ride fast, and Mr. Sims is fond of showing off, and the result is they are arrested for speeding. Taken to court for trial, Mr. Sims, to his great surprise, finds he is to be tried before a jury of women, and that the forewoman is his wife. Sims demands immediate trial and gets it.

The verdict is handed in to the judge, who addresses the stenographer as follows: "Young woman, you are discharged. The jury is convinced that you are not to blame for this violation of the law." Turning to Sims, the judge continued: "And you, Sir, are sentenced to the county jail for six days. I am determined to put a stop to the reckless speeding of high-powered automobiles through our streets. Officer, remove the prisoner."

THE O'NEILL (Jan. 12).—The O'Neill, an Irish patriot, covertly returned to the old, familiar haunts, from which he had been obliged to flee during times of oppression, and found a proclamation, nailed in a conspicuous place, which offered a reward for his apprehension. He therefore betook himself to the country lanes, that he might meet his old friends, the peasants.

One in particular, a frail old man, tottering with age, welcomed O'Neill to his humble cottage, and divided his last crusts. Touched by the abject poverty of his countryman, The O'Neill determined to aid them at the price of becoming a highwayman. Going to a secluded spot along the highway, he masked himself and lay in waiting. Soon a carriage appeared, and with a command to halt, O'Neill politely requested the occupants to alight. The passengers were an elderly gentleman—who protested vigorously—and his charming daughter, Elinor, from whom O'Neill, with the utmost courtesy, took a finger ring. In a spirit of mockery, The O'Neill forced Elinor to dance a few steps with him.

Shortly afterward a masked ball was held, which Elinor attended, O'Neill, still remembering the pretty face, and unable to overcome his longing to see her again, went to the ball, carefully masked. There he met Elinor and engaged her in conversation, but she discovered her ring upon his finger and cried for help. As the guests rushed in, The O'Neill dashed through the window, taking sash and glass along with him.

The following day the outlaw chanced to encounter Elinor upon the highway. She promised to meet him that night. At the appointed hour she appeared, but with a band of men, who surrounded The O'Neill and made him a prisoner.

When they had conducted him to the house and left him securely, tied, the men passed into another room to drink a toast to their success, Elinor, finding herself in love with the handsome patriot, and repenting of her subterfuge, stole through the window and released him. Together they sped away on horseback, stopping only at the peasant's cottage, where O'Neill bade a hasty good-bye to his friend. When the escape was discovered, the men started in pursuit, and reaching the cross roads, inquired of the peasant if he had seen a young man and woman. The faithful friend pointed in an opposite direction from that taken by the fugitives, who were able to reach the coast, where a hasty ceremony was performed and a good ship carried them away to France, happy in their romantic love.

THIRTY DAYS AT HARD LABOR (Jan. 9).—Beatrice Langdon's father objects to her marrying Jack Deering on the grounds that he is a son of a wealthy man. He makes it plain to Jack that if he is to marry his daughter he must sign an agreement, which stipulates that he must put in thirty days at hard labor. Jack, unknown to Beatrice, signs the agreement, and his first position is laying pipes with a gang of laborers. Inside of three days he is so worn out that he is obliged to relinquish his position. His next jobs were at rock excavation and shoveling coal, but his weak physique is not strong enough for hard work, so he resigns.

In the meantime Beatrice, who has heard nothing from Jack for a couple of days, is heartbroken, but too proud to write him for an explanation, so she indulges in a little flirtation with Reggie Bullion. While passing the Munich Restaurant, Jack notices a sign, "Halberdier Wanted." He makes application for the job and is accepted. Upon the last night, Langdon, Reggie and Beatrice happen to visit the place. The awkardness of the halberdier so annoys Beatrice that she insists upon him being discharged, but before this can be done the clock strikes twelve and Jack raises his visor. After due explanations everything is adjusted and the waiter becomes a guest.

MAX AND MAURICE (Jan. 10).—Max and Maurice are two mischievous boys. Their first victim is the Widow Tibbets, from whom the boys swipe, by means of a fishing rod, her roast chicken. They then saw in half the little bridge which spans a stream running directly in front of a tailor's door. The tailor, after being called a number of names, rushes out and gets a cold plunge, much against his will. Uncle Fritz is their next victim. He is unable to sleep on account of a deposit of pinching bugs in his bed. He then tries to seek solace in his pipe, which nearly blows his head off, having been filled with gun powder. They then play a joke on a farmer by cutting open his sacks of corn. The boys play many other amusing tricks, which all tend to make the film a highly-amusing comedy.

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT (Jan. 12).—Nellie Gray, a sweet little maiden of sixteen, is discovered surrounded with all the loving care of a dear old-fashioned home and a mother and father who worship her. Unused to the ways of the world, she steals away from choir practice one evening to take an auto ride to the big city with a salesman who has come to town. Eager-eyed and wonder-marveling, she is induced to take supper at one of the gilded cafes of a great city, where the bright lights glitter and fascinate the unaccustomed stranger. Here in this heated atmosphere her companion endeavors to persuade her to take her first glass of champagne. In her weakness she tries to resist his persistent pleadings, but at last she yields to his demand. Opposite her at a table sits a woman of the world into whose soul, at the sight of this young girl, has crept the memory of all that she has lost and ere the tempting glass reaches her lips, this frailer sister has knocked it from her hand. Lightly turning the accident into a joke she succeeds in getting her companion away for a moment, and with all the compassion of a woman of the world to her purer sister, she gets little Nellie Gray home and safe into her mother's arms. Here one good turn produces another, and the woman finds the little girl's prayer book and hymnal which she has left behind. On the fly-leaf are inserted the words, "Your mother's prayers are always with you, my child." Something has been awakened in the woman's soul; she falls upon the table sobbing, crying for the better, purer things in life. Along the streets in the darkness she comes, hopeless, alone.

Across her path steals a stream of light from the open doors of the city church and its kindly light leads her into a better and purer life.

A QUESTION OF SECONDS (Jan. 13).—Hardwell, a young engineer, running a new railroad through a tough Western section, falls in love with Bonita, daughter of Jim Collins, a wealthy ranchman. Haligo Laderez, a wealthy Mexican, also has his eye on Bonita. When he sees that Bonita is favoring Hardwell, he invites the gang of Mexicans working for Hardwell to strike for more money. They are refused; so Haligo sets about capturing Hardwell, who has escaped and is on his way to the sheriff. As he is making his way through a narrow railway cut, Hardwell is hemmed in at both sides by Haligo's men, so he takes refuge behind a barricade of rocks. Unable to get at Hardwell, Haligo places a can of gun powder in front of the rocks and lights the fuse. Just before the flame reaches the can, Bonita and the sheriff arrive, putting the Mexicans to flight. The next day Bonita's father agrees to let her become the wife of Hardwell.

ST. JOHNS, NEWFOUNDLAND, AND ITS SURROUNDINGS (Jan. 13).—This film shows interesting views of St. Johns. It stands on rising ground on the north side of a land-locked harbor, the entrance to which is guarded on one side by Signal Hill, 520 feet high, and on the other by South Side Hill, 620 feet high. A view of the harbor is shown, and a panorama from Signal Hill beginning in the rugged country far away and winding its course to the city lying far below, will bear adequate testimony to the fact that the eastern shore of Canada is justly celebrated for its beauty.

The city has about forty thousand inhabitants and practically monopolizes the commerce of Newfoundland, being the center of the cod, seal and whale fisheries.

CAPTAIN JENKS' DILEMMA (Jan. 8).—Mrs. Brown, who is a widow, finds it a rather difficult matter to clothe and feed her large family of children, so when she becomes acquainted on the beach with Captain Jenks she is not slow in inviting him to her house. That evening the Captain calls with an engagement ring. He asks the widow to become his wife, but just as he is accepted Mrs. Brown's numerous offsprings come running into the room. Upon being told that they are her children the Captain nearly faints and does not know how to break the engagement.

He consults his friend Squills, who tells him to borrow a number of the children from the neighborhood and call upon Mrs. Brown, saying that they are his. He follows the idea to the letter and Mrs. Brown is surprised. The children not only fight with one another, but tear up the place, whereupon Mrs. Brown gives back to Jenks his ring. He leaves the widow in a joyful mood, thanks to his friend Squills.

HOW TOMMY SAVED HIS FATHER (Jan. 9).—Bidding his wife and Tommy good-bye, Mr. Barton, a captain in the Confederate Army, starts for the war to take his place at the head of his troop. The boy is filled with the war spirit. Some of Tommy's young friends enter the house with drum and mimic gun and try to enlist Tommy in service. Tommy pleads with his mother to let him join their ranks, but she refuses. Awaiting his opportunity, the little fellow steals away and is soon in charge of the juvenile warriors.

In their play they come across a deserted cave, where they make one of their number prisoner. Mammy, who has been sent after Tommy, sees him coming from the cave and immediately drags him toward home. On their way a horse comes dashing down the road, with its rider, who falls from the saddle as he nears Tommy and Mammy. At a glance Tommy recognizes his father, who has been wounded and is being pursued by the Union soldiers. Tommy hides father in some bushes nearby, starts the horse down the road and tells the Federal soldiers, who ask him if he has seen the Confederate captain, that he has gone that way, pointing to the fast disappearing horse and thus throwing them off the scent.

He then takes his father to the cave and hides him there, but not without some very narrow escapes from capture by the pursuers. Mammy assists Tommy in making the captain as comfortable as possible in the cave and succeeds in getting provisions to him, until the coast is clear and Captain Barton is able to return in safety to his wife and family, all of whom praise the little hero for his courage and shrewdness.

ALMA'S CHAMPION (Jan. 10).—Henry Talbot, the son of the president of the V. C. A. R. R., desiring to get a more comprehensive knowledge of the railroad, accepts a position as engineer on his father's road. Alma Randall, the niece of Stephen Bradish, general manager of the railroad, is reluctant in recognizing him in his position and he in turn makes it very unpleasant for her, so much so that she leaves his home.

Going to the railroad station, she enters the cab of the engine driven by her sweetheart and there tells him her story. In the meantime Bradish, missing the girl and learning that she is on the express, orders a special, which overtakes the train driven by Talbot. Bradish is informed by the conductor that Alma is not aboard.

At a reception given by her friends in honor of Alma's birthday, Henry is invited. As a surprise Henry's father and Bradish are also present. Bradish assumes the authoritative with Alma. Henry interferes, and when she is introduced to her father, Bradish looks on crestfallen and vanquished.

THE MEETING OF THE WAYS (Jan. 12).—Tom and Dick are brothers and are being educated at the same college. Tom is a studious fellow and graduates with honors, while Dick is expelled from college through misbehavior. Dick is ashamed to go home, but before leaving Tom gives him a locket containing a picture of their mother.

Ten years later Tom, who is a successful lawyer, is married and has two little children. Dick, who has now been reduced through personal neglect to a derelict, overhears a plan to rob his brother's house. Making up his mind to prevent it, Dick climbs through the nursery window, catches the burglars, but effects their escape. His two little nieces, who have been watching him, kiss and hug him before he makes his exit. When their parents return from the reception they attended, the children relate to them what had happened.

Dick gets into a scrape with a gambler a month or two later, who laughs at the miniature of his mother that Dick puts up in lieu of cash. In the struggle the gambler's pistol is discharged and he is accidentally shot. Dick is arrested and his brother is appointed by the court to defend him. Tom, not recognizing his brother, makes a strong defense in his behalf and a touching plea in introducing the locket, pleading exoneration for the man who would defend an insult to his mother. Tom opens the locket and recognizes their mother. He is filled with a sense of his duty and shows clearly and concisely the accidental discharge of the gambler's pistol and so cleverly presents this phase of the case that Dick is acquitted. Tom takes his brother to his home, where he is recognized by his two children as the man who saved their home from robbery and they lovingly embrace him. Tom's wife is introduced to her brother-in-law and it is not long before Dick is in a good position and an honored member of his brother's family.

WILLIE'S SISTER (Jan. 13).—Willie Green, off for college, tearfully kisses Ma and Pa and Sister good-bye. Arrived on the campus, he approaches a grave and reverend senior to ask where the proctor is located. The Senior knocks off his hat. Willie replaces it and laughs feebly at the joke. The Senior sternly tells him to take it off and be respectful to his betters. Willie obeys, and awe-stricken, repeats his question. The Senior points. Willie dodges, gathers up his suitcases and exits cautiously, watching Senior. The proctor places him in a room with a Senior, who makes life a burden to him, using him as a valet.

Later, Willie receives a box from home and a note from Sister, telling him not to make himself sick with the contents and they are coming down to see him shortly. He is obliged to leave to attend recitations. In his absence his roommate discovers the box and invites some of his cronies to join the feast. Willie, returning, is enraged to see his sister's good things disappearing. His protests result with his being struck with the empty box. Willie takes his roommate to task and is paralyzed by being compelled to clean up the mess the others have left.

Willie's family visit the college. Willie takes his sister around to see the place. His tormentors immediately want to make up and be introduced. They follow Willie and Sister around and the family to the railroad station. When the family go they take Willie to an ice cream saloon. Willie spends the rest of the term in comfort, and as an acknowledgment of courtesies received, separately invites each of the boys to come home and meet his sister on July 15th.

Separately they alight at the railroad station and growl at each other's presence. They all hurry to Willie's home just in time to meet Willie's sister and her husband coming out after the ceremony and receive a shower of rice. Willie dis-

LUBIN.

THE TRAMP AND THE BEAR (Jan. 6).—Two gentlemen of the road, Weary Willie and Slim Jim, while passing a furrier store, notice a stuffed bear. They decide it would be a good scheme to get a little change, so they borrow the bear, unbeknown to the owner and by one getting into the bear they will fool the public. They do so and the first victim to be frightened is an Italian organ-grinder. The tramp and the bear get possession of the organ and play music, while the bear dances to the great amusement of the crowds that gather. A collection is taken and there is no end to the amusement they furnish by scaring different people around the small town. They meet their Waterloo when they start to divide up the money they have collected. The tramp in the bear skin removes his head when the crowd that is gathered jump through a fence. They receive a severe beating for the amusement they have had.

A POOR EXCUSE THAT WORKED (Jan. 6).—The "boys" have a smoker at the club and phone for Harry to come up. He does so under the excuse that he is going to see a sick friend. Wifey, though suspicious, allows him to go, but warns him to be home by twelve o'clock. As Harry is leaving, his wife accidentally drops her handkerchief. Harry picks it up and hands it to her. He then exits. He and the boys have a swell affair at the club and he does not notice until too late that he has stayed out past midnight. White with fear, he hurries home and is unnerved by the sight of his waiting, wrathful wife, as he sees her through a window of his home from the outside. He therefore returns to the club and tells the boys of the horrible situation. They laugh at his predicament, then put their heads together and hatch up a plan that Harry has lost his memory and spring it on the unsuspecting wifey. The plot works beautifully and the handkerchief episode repeated succeeds in restoring buggy's lost memory, whereby he is saved from an awful fate. Moreover, the accident has the happy effect of thawing out Mrs. Henpeck's cold, snappy nature and like the ending of a good fairy tale, they both live happy "ever after."

SELIG.

THE PEACEMAKER (Jan. 8).—Winnie Simmons marries Pete Bolan, and they get along well until Pete imbibes too freely and commences to abuse his wife. Winnie leaves him and goes home. Pete, however, follows her, receives a thrashing from her father, and like a whipped puppy, runs off to tell his father of his troubles, marital and otherwise. The two return to Simmon's house, where the two older men have a forceful argument. Winnie, though, refuses to return to her husband, and finally obtains a divorce from him.

Several months after Paul Gregory, a young author, comes to the vicinity of the Simmons in search of color for a new novel. There he sees Winnie, accosted by her erstwhile husband, rushes to her rescue and accompanies her to her home, where he receives the hearty thanks of her people.

But Pete does not so easily forget and so, getting his gun, resolves to "get" Paul. He follows him, aims at him, but shooting high, does no more damage than knock Paul's hat off. Paul, instantly on his guard, turns and shoots, wounding Pete in the leg.

Hearing the shots, Winnie and her mother rush in their direction, and seeing Pete shot, Winnie realizes that her love for him is not all dead and takes him to her home. There she cares for him and when Paul leaves a week later, she and Pete are fully reconciled, Pete having promised never to drink again.

A year later, Paul Gregory, now a most successful author, receives a letter from Winnie, containing her blessing for the man who made life happy again for her, though a little late.

TWO MEN AND A GIRL (Jan. 9).—Jack Read, born in the East, but raised in the West, receives word that his brother "Dan," still in the East, is in need of aid. He sends money for him to come West.

Dan arrives, delapidated, and soon tires of the employment which his brother has secured for him. He gets the gold fever and starts for Mexico. Jack, loath to give up trying to save his brother, goes with him.

They discover in their wanderings an old miner who is dying. He gives the boys a chart of a mine he has located, and with his dying breath asks them to send for Mary, his niece, and mine the gold in her name.

Jack sends for the girl and they start for the old miner's desert claim. Both men fall in love with the girl. After many thrilling experiences they become lost in the midst of the desert, without food and dying for lack of water.

Dan attempts to steal Mary's last drop of water, but Jack comes to her rescue and after a fierce fight gets the best of his cowardly brother.

Through sheer grit and will power, Jack finally leads the other two out of the desert and to safety. The mine is discovered and they start back rich with gold. Both men propose to Mary and needless to say Jack wins his suit.

THE PROSECUTING ATTORNEY (Jan. 11).—Nina Brooks and her associate, Joe Brooks, are caught in a badger game, convicted and sentenced to a term of years in the state penitentiary. Nina serves her term and on her release is taken in charge at the prison gate by Mary Moore, who presides over a mission for the reclamation of unfortunate women. Nina finds herself in this new field, and becomes an ardent worker in the cause. In the course of her labors, she meets Henry Lewis, a humanitarian. Lewis is the prosecuting attorney that was responsible, in the line of his duty, for her conviction and sentence. He becomes more than interested in Nina, and would marry her, assuring her, in spite of her objections and fear that her past is her own. They are married and happy. Meantime Brooks has escaped from prison. He meets and recognizes his old pal and calls to blackmail and persecute her. Driven into a frenzy Nina shoots Brooks. Lewis recognizes Brooks and associates him with Nina's past. The police arrive; Lewis shows his true and manly love by assuming the responsibility for the tragedy, giving himself over to the authorities without a murmur.

A MODERN ANANIAS (Jan. 12).—Will Deming, a club man and hale fellow well met, returns home about six a. m. with somewhat of a jag. His wife, who has been patiently awaiting his return, notices his condition and an argument ensues in which her umbrella plays an all important part. A day or so later he appears at his club slightly disfigured. When his friends prove inquisitive regarding his appearance, he allows his imagination to get the better of him, and tells of a most remarkable experience, in which he, of course, was the hero. His story almost gets over, but Fate takes a hand by producing an amateur photographer who happened to be passing Deming's house during the argument. The snapshot which the amateur presents for approval puts Deming into the Ananias class.

THE JOURNEY OF THE WESTERN GOVERNORS TO THE EAST (Jan. 12).—One of the most interesting topical pictures ever secured. Showing intimate, close-up, personal views of the entire party and of every interesting place visited upon this epoch-making tour. Selig camera men and representatives accompanied the official party on their special train during the entire trip.

MELIES.

THE OUTLAW AND THE BABY—(Jan. 18).—Joe Fuller, the outlaw and bandit, draws rein at an humble cottage and begs refreshment. The traditional hospitality of the West is at once shown him by Jane White, who is alone in the house at the time, with her baby daughter. The bandit is given food and drink, while he is eating which, the baby takes a child-like fancy to him. Fuller also takes a liking to the child, but contents himself with fondling it and receiving, at the child's suggestion, it's photograph.

When, later, Mr. White returns and finds the child missing, suspicion is at once cast on the bandit, of whose visit Jane has informed him. But the child has only responded to its fancy and wandered, in hope to again see the "nice man."

In a shaded place, the bandit has laid down to rest, when he notices the child, followed by an Indian, about to kidnap it. He rushes to the baby's rescue, and bravely risks the chance of capture to take the little one home.

Assembled in the cottage are the sheriff's men. The outlaw gets the "drop" on them, returns the baby to the distracted mother, collects all the guns and makes as graceful a departure as ever Raffles made.

Then to the border line, where he leaves a note, informing the sheriff that he need not follow him more, for he is for a "straight" life in another country, and all because of "the kid."

Scene from "The Outlaw and the Baby" (Melies).

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 1—1912 (Jan. 1).—Paris, France—The Le Bargy-Malherbe duel. In the fifth encounter Mr. Malherbe is slightly wounded in the arm.

Frankfort, Ky.—Governor McCreary is inaugurated. Miss Viola Polsgrove presents chrysanthemums to Governor McCreary as he is standing with Ex-Governor Willson.

Carbondale, Pa.—Forty-three runaway freight cars overturn a switchman's shanty, killing five men and injuring five more. The overthrown shanty stove sets fire to and completely destroys the Delaware & Hudson Railroad shops and five engines.

Havana, Cuba.—The funeral of the widow of Maximo Gomez, the liberator of Cuba, is witnessed by the entire population of Havana, who line the streets in respectful silence.

Tripoli, Tripoli.—The Italo-Turkish War, showing: (1) The Italian camp sleeping guarded by the sentries placed on the minarets; (2) The artillery changing its position, and convoys of the commissary joining the column; (3) The Arabs who had joined the cause of the Turks have been shot after court-martial.

New York, N. Y.—Jackie Clarke, the Australian champion, who made the final sprint in the Nineteenth Annual Six-Day Bicycle Race at Madison Square Garden, winning the event for the Fogler-Clarke team.

And many others.

THE STRIKE ON THE RANCH (Jan. 10).—Col. Tobias Milliken Boggs Jones has a thousand head of cattle to be shipped in semi-annual shipments, but his men refuse to round up the cattle and drive them to the shipping point unless he pays them more wages. This he refuses to do. Being crippled himself he appeals to a neighbor to drive his herd and to this the neighbor agrees. Col. Jones' daughter, however, is captured by the striking cowboys and her rescue, effected by her little six-year-old brother, is one of the most thrilling things ever produced upon the screen.

THE HORSE THIEF (Jan. 11).—A horse thief steals a horse and is about to be promptly strung up to the nearest sycamore when Major Dugmore persuades the men to show clemency and turn him loose. In return Mr. Johnson, the horse thief, gives Col. Dugmore the only thing he has to remember him by, a white handkerchief on which a left hind foot of a rabbit is artistically slung. Major Dugmore's daughter takes it for her own. Subsequently Miss Dugmore is captured by a pal of Johnson's and Johnson and his pal have a discussion as to what shall be done with the girl. They finally fight and Johnson is wounded and his pal rides off with the girl, but Johnson, crawling on his hands and knees, succeeds in notifying the Major, who rides for his daughter's life and succeeds in rescuing her.

BILL'S BILLS (Jan. 13).—Bill is blessed with a bunch of bills and is also blessed with a beautiful wife, who systematically searches through all his pockets when he's asleep and relieves him of any surplus cash; therefore Bill decides to hide the bills which he has in his possession and in consequence Bill hides his bills in some newspapers thrown carelessly aside. That Third Imp Is King of All Swamped, buried, smothered under an avalanche of congratulatory letters and telegrams! That's the condition we've been in ever since our first "Saturday Split Imp" made its public appearance. Just for instance:—"Congratulations upon the success you are making with your third reel. It's a jim-dandy and the best comedy we have ever shown in our house." So says F. T. Lynch of Ottumwa, Iowa. There are now only two things as good as the Saturday Imp. One is the Monday Imp. The other is the Thursday Imp. Get them all—yes, even if you have to pay more! They're worth it!

"A WINNING MISS"

With King Baggott in a new sort of role. A love-comedy of the kind you have been clamoring for. Released Monday, Jan. 8. Copyright 1912.

"IN THE NORTHERN WOODS"

A thriller with something doing in every foot. A story of Canadian logging life. Released Thursday, Jan. 11th. Copyright 1912.

"COTTON INDUSTRY"

One of the best industrials ever produced. Scenes secured near Charleston, S. C. Released Saturday, Jan. 13th. Copyright 1912. On the same reel you will get a typical Imp comedy entitled in which Mr. Cumpson (you used to know him as "Bumptious") gives you some of the best laughs you ever had in all your born days.

gathers them up and gives them to the Salvation Army. When Mr. Bill comes home to say that he is wroth is to put it mildly. He fairly froths at the mouth with rage and anguish and finally rushes off at top speed to the Salvation Army headquarters, where he successfully passes the sentry and lands poste-haste into the refuse pile. He frantically searches through everything in sight, hoping to stumble across his lost wealth. Failing, he rushes away again to look elsewhere, but almost immediately after he has left the money is found and a lieutenant and police officer follow poor Bill to return his money. Bill sees them coming out of the corner of his eye and he goes some. So do the cop and the lieutenant. Bill is some sprinter. So is the cop. So is the lieutenant, but finally Bill is captured and his money returned.

THE FOSTER SISTER (Jan. 9).—A wealthy man leaves his orphan child in the hands of some peasants, while he takes a journey in a faraway country. The child thrives and grows and incidentally falls in love with the son of her foster parents. This continues for years and years and finally the father returns and claims his child and wants her to marry a young nobleman of his acquaintance, but the girl, with proper pride, refuses and finds her happiness in linking her life with the man of her choice.

THE HAUNTED ROOM (Jan. 12).—Nicholas Willoughby Johnson Brown seeks a room in a one-horse town and in a weird hotel he lays him down on a cot of so-called snowy down (but which in realty is made of corn husks). Before doing this, however, he endeavors to divest himself of his clothing. Removing his shoes, he is astonished to see them dance on the floor in a most exciting manner, and becoming desperate he tears off his coat and throws it on the shoes, only to find another coat on his back. This funny farce continues along these lines.

BIOGRAPH.

A TALE OF THE WILDERNESS (Jan. 8).—In the wilds of the Kentucky hills two brothers, the elder an outlaw, view from a distance the approach of a party of settlers moving forward to a new home in the vast wildness. The younger brother is overwhelmed by the sight of the pioneers, and, unknown to his elder brother, joins their party. The settlers build a stockade home and the outlook is most rosy, until the outlaw brother meets a girl from the stockade at the spring, he, of course, not knowing his brother is among the party. He forces his attentions upon her, which she repulses, rushing back to the stockade for help. The outlaw's influence with the neighboring Indians arouses them in his plan for vengeance. They attack the stockade, and when the settlers' chance seems hopeless they dig a tunnel from the back of the stockade to the hillside. Most of them have effected an escape, but among the few captured is the younger brother, so the outlaw regrets his action and uses again his influence with the Indians, but with a different effect.

THE ETERNAL MOTHER (Jan. 11).—The young couple are betrothed and later are married, and so the days pass by, they happy and contented on their little farm, each helping with the other's burdens, until a restless, thoughtless woman appears and meets the man. He is possessed of an irresistible fascination for her, and so the grief-stricken wife, whose love for her husband is of the unselfish kind, feeling he would be happier with the attractive woman, makes the sacrifice of freeing him. He is divorced and married to the other woman, and later begins to pay the penalty. His second wife is ill, and he is alone in his distress, when his first wife, in whom is strong the spirit of the eternal mother, comes to him in his hour of need, caring for the wife and taking the infant after her death. It is now that the man awakens to the realization of his unworthiness, and as the years pass he works out his redemption.

PLAYING THE GAME (Jan. 6).—The story opens at a meeting of the Welcome Idea Husband's Club, in which the women jangle and Jackson's wife learns that she is abused. Coincident with this, Jackson is enjoying himself with the boys, and the drinks come fast and furious. He leaves the club and in an inebriated condition, reels home. At the sight of him the wife softens. He tells her he is ill, and she, in her ignorance, believes him. A physician is summoned, who takes in the situation in a glance, but tells the wife that Jackson needs exercise in the open. He advises golf, and Jackson is forced to acquiesce.

The next day the ponderous husband engages the services of some friends, and repairs to the golf course, attired in regulation golfing costume. The party has also taken the precaution to bring along a wheel chair. Jackson makes ineffectual swipes at the ball, misses, and perspires freely. He is a failure as a golfer, and decides to play the game by proxy. Wheeled about the course, his assistant lands on the ball and they follow. They approach a hill and the chair and its freight gets away from the helpers and Jackson is precipitated to the bottom and lands between two rocks.

He finally returns home to announce to his wife that he has had a delightful day's play, and is much improved in health by the exercise. She has implicit faith in him and is overjoyed. (Copyrighted, 1911, by Imp Films Co.).

BACK TO HIS OLD HOME TOWN (Jan. 6).—Mr. Abner Brown, in deciding to revisit his old home town, never dreamed of the series of adventures that lay before him. A sedate, respectable, middle-aged member of society, who would have thought that in the home town, Abner, at the time of his supposed arrival, should be represented by a double—Somebody who looked so like Abner that he might be mistaken for him? Well, he was. And this double was a moving picture actor.

It also happened that Mr. Abner Brown's home town was a moving picture center, at which various producers gathered their respective companies to work out their plays. The actor, who looked like Mr. Abner Brown, was daily instructed in his part by the producer, and disappears for the time. When unsuspecting Abner appeared, he was mistaken for the moving picture actor, whom he resembled. The resemblance was such that the Western actors held him up; he was chased across the prairie by cowboys and Indians; he was shot by French soldiers—in fact he went through a whole lot of extraordinary adventures at the hands of the moving picture actors before he escaped and got home to his wife and children. (Copyrighted, 1911, by Imp Films Co.).

A WINNING MISS (Jan. 8).—An irate father, a persistent lover, and a pretty girl who solves the difficulty, furnish a tale of elopement that is pleasing and excites the risibilities of the most sedate. The father objects to the marriage, and elopement is resorted to with complicating results. The girl flees to the apartments of her sweetheart, and just escapes the father and his detective, by being carried away in a wardrobe that has been delivered to the young man by mistake. This muddles matters, but the young man sends for the minister and prepares for the wedding. The girl has been delivered to the rooms of a friend, and he assists. The lover and the minister dive through the window into a mortar box, and are followed by the sleuth and the father, and they emerge, sorry looking specimens indeed. The lover and the minister, covered with a white coating, find the girl, and the ceremony is performed, only to be broken into by the father and the detective, whose clothing is also soiled. The old man forgives the young couple and the story ends happily for all concerned.

IN THE NORTHERN WOODS (Jan. 11).—In this drama of Canadian logging life there is a half breed who seems incapable of manifesting any goodness of heart even after the most vital kindnesses and benefactions are conferred upon him. His camp chum saves his life by actually stealing brandy for him, yet later on the half-breen fells his friend in a sawmill and placos the body on the machine, ready to be cut by the blade. The heroine arrives in time to stop the machine and saves her lover.

Two years pass; the lovers are married and there is a child. The implacable half-beeed invades the peaceful scene and in the husband's absence offers violence to the young wife. The opportune arrival of the husband seals the half-breed's fate. "The boys" of the camp decide to hang him. The fatal rope is round his neck when the young wife intercedes for him and the wretch's life is spared. He is told to go away, but he cannot even do that without turning upon one of the men, who promptly shoots him down. (Copyrighted 1912, by Imp Films Co.)

DIVORCONS (Jan. 2).—Divorcons tells the story of a young wife who, discontented with her husband, whiles away her time with a juvenile fop of a cousin. The husband's suspicions being confirmed by some slight evidence, he surprises them in a clandestine meeting.

He is indignant, of course, and threatens to kill the cousin and punish the wife; but, on second thought, decides to pretend he shares his wife's discontent and further pretends to believe a faked-up telegram which he, himself, has written and sent.

In an exquisite scene, the husband coaxes a confession from his wife, in which she ingeniously tells him all her little peccadillos. He then sends for the cousin and, with mock heroism, delivers his wife over to him. The pair, finding concealment no longer necessary, lose interest in each other; and she begins to realize the deficiencies of her admirer.

The indifferent husband deliberately prepares to go out and enjoy himself, which arouses the latent love and jealousy of the now surprised and worried wife. She finally persuades him to take her along for the evening. They go to a fashionable café, where they have an enjoyable little supper in a private dining room. They are followed and disturbed by the bedraggled and disappointed cousin, who has followed them in a drizzling rain. The wife is indignant, but the husband's sense of humor saves the situation. He conceals her and sends the cousin off on a wild goose chase to various impossible addresses. A pleasant love scene follows between husband and wife, when the angry cousin again interrupts them and creates so much disturbance he is finally arrested.

The husband, at last succeeding in making his wife's lover appear thoroughly ridiculous in her eyes, wins a lasting reconciliation.

THE DOCTOR'S DUTY (Jan. 9).—How a young physician fought and mastered himself when tempted to revenge himself against a bitter enemy, who stole the woman he loved. A film rich in sentiment, picturing man's emotion under terrific strain and a woman's devotion under trying circumstances.

ECLAIR.

OLD PAPERS, OLD SOUVENIRS (Jan. 4).—Having caught his cashier robbing him, Mr. Noirmont dictates a confession and demands Saufert to sign, Mrs. Noirmont as a witness. He then takes possession of the paper.

Years later, after Mr. Noirmont's death, their son, now grown to manhood, is led by a money-lender to speculate, which has the usual disastrous ending. The boy, driven frantic by the money-lender, finally appeals to his mother. Mrs. Noirmont recognizes the name of the money-lender, being identical with the dishonest cashier, and, after looking through old papers, she finds Saufert's confession and decides to confront him with it.

They recognize each other instantly. Saufert realizes he has lost, and will concede to most anything to gain possession of his confession. They compromise by exchanging papers, which saves the boy.

THE INVENTOR (Jan. 11).—A mechanic has invented a marvelous machine, and he most eagerly shows the plans to his wife, while they enthusiastically plan their daughter's future.

He finally interests an important manufacturer, who promises to have the plans patented jointly. The manufacturer realizes how great the plans are, and decides to have patent made out in his name only, realizing, however, that he must take the inventor in the business until a favorable opportunity comes to dismiss him. Later, the inventor demands his share of the profits and is coldly rebuked. The inventor threatens and the scoundrel ejects him from the place.

Without work and no money, the inventor visits his fellow-workmen and explains the situation to them. They immediately rush to the manufacturer and demand justice. The villain is too frightened to comply at once, and the mechanics, misunderstanding his silence, proceed to use violence. The stupified inventor finally realizes his mistake, and bravely defends the manufacturer. His noble act is so much appreciated that it awakens a feeling of remorse in his partner, and he humbly makes amends by reinstating the inventor, sharing equally the profits from the invention.

THANHOUSER.

JUST A BAD KID (Jan. 9).—"The Bad Kid" was an orphan, and was cared for by a sloppy old woman, who made her work and constantly ill-treated her. The woman beat the child, a kind-hearted neighbor interfered, and a tenement brawl followed. The upshot of it was that the woman was sent to do penance on "The Island," and the child was committed to an institution. There she found other children to tease. Inquiry developed that the child had a relative, an uncle, a farmer out West who, although only a distant cousin, was the only kin the girl had. It was a happy day in the institution when he was located, and agreed to take "the Bad Kid" off their hands.

In her new home the child, having never been taught, kept up her troublesome ways. Her new-found relatives, with the knowledge of her reputation, were not disposed to make allowances, and finally decided that it was a hopeless task to try and reform her, she never would amount to anything.

The child overheard their conversation, and vowed to be good, for really she was hungry for someone to love her, the only trouble was she did not know how to go about it, and was too shy to ask. Her pitiful awkard little efforts to "be a comfort" were a failure, and she ran away, first leaving a letter for the old couple, in which she confessed how she had tried, but knew she had not succeeded.

The farmer and his wife were devout church members, and interested in foreign missions. The child's note brought home to them a realization that there were other heathens, right at home, who needed to be cared for; so the farmer decided to bring her back.

He found a little wanderer some distance from the farm. He tenderly carried her home, but when she revived she wept anew, fearing them. They gently convinced her of their love and assured the weeping child that sometimes, many times, a "Bad Kid" will grow up to be a good girl if she has the proper care and the proper love, and assured her that they would give her both. And she never tried to run away again.

THE TWELFTH JUROR (Jan. 12).—A rich man is found dead in his library. His cash box, which was known to have been full of money, is lying empty beside him. The last person known to have been with him was his son, and the servants testified that the two had had a violent quarrel. The son is sought and is found at a railway station. Brought back to the house he is searched and the stolen money is found in his overcoat pocket. He admits the quarrel, and that it was over money matters, but denies the crime and says he does not know how the money got into his pockets.

A strong case is made out against the prisoner when he goes on trial. When the jury take their first ballot, the vote stands eleven for conviction. The majority argue with the stubborn twelfth juror, but to no avail. Finally he bows to the will of the other. The foreman approaches the door to give the signal that will notify the court officer that a decision has been reached. His hand is raised, but the twelfth juror stays it. He tells them he has a statement to make.

The twelfth juror, in private life, is an underpaid expressman. His little daughter is very ill, and the doctor tells the heartbroken father and mother that her only chance of life is to go South. They haven't the money, and realize that their poverty means the death warrant of their loved one.

The expressman is sent to "a fine house" to get a trunk. While waiting in the hall, he sees the prisoner, after a quarrel with his father, run up the stairs. The old man, who is brandishing a cane and holding a cash box, works himself into a frightful fit of rage. He is suddenly stricken and falls dead. The expressman goes to his assist-

"The Raising of the Maine."

Motion pictures showing the raising of what remains of the ill-fated battle ship Maine from her watery bed in Havana Harbor form the major part of the interesting programme offered at the Belasco this week. The pictures, which are quite clear, first show the Maine as she lay for thirteen years after the explosion, with but a few feet of her showing above the water line; then in-detail views of the apparatus used in raising her, and finally the Maine as she is to-day, the barnacle-covered remains of a great man-of-war.

MAINE IN MOTION PICTURES.

The first public showing of motion pictures taken in Havana harbor during the work of uncovering the wreck of the battleship Maine took place at the Herald Square Theatre yesterday afternoon. Some of the films were exhibited before the Maine Monument Committee several weeks ago, but the present reels contain later views.

The series began with the building of the caissons, showed the gradual lowering of the water inside the coffer dam, and the clearing of the parts of the wreck as they were exposed. The pictures showed clearly the force of the explosion that destroyed the ship and the present condition of the vessel.

ance, but is attracted by the packet of bills that has fallen on the carpet. He realizes that this wealth means life for his little girl, and yielding to impulse, picks it up and places it in his pocket. He closes the door, and makes his escape undetected.

He finds his crime of no avail, however, for his little daughter proves to him that stolen money is accursed, and the expressman, yielding to her prayers, goes back to the house, intending to return the bills. He finds the front door open, and slips the cash into the pocket of a coat on the hat rack, believing that it is the old man's.

When drawn for the jury he serves, hoping that he might be able to save the innocent man, but the circumstantial evidence was so strong that he could not win over even one of his associates, and he finally decided to confess all to them.

The jurors believe him, and return a verdict of not guilty. The Twelfth Juror again confesses his fault in open court, and a new investigation establishes the truth of what he had told. He escapes punishment, under the circumstances, and the little girl is sent South to regain her health through the kindly aid of the man whose life has been put in jeopardy because of the one crime of him who later was the Twelfth Juror.

RELIANCE.

RESIGNATION (Jan. 3).—The mother's only child is dying, and in her insane grief she rails against Providence. She becomes so hysterical that the doctor is compelled to administer a strong sleeping potion, and she is soon slumbering. In her dream she sees her boy grow up headstrong and uncontrollable, causing her innumerable heartaches. He is expelled from college owing to his bad habits, and his father puts him to work in his office. He forges his father's name to a check and is thrashed soundly. Mortified and defiant he attempts suicide, and just as he is about to kill himself the woman awakens, screaming. They lead her to the bedside of the boy who has just passed away, and the woman falls on her knees, resigned to the ways of Providence which has taken her child in all its innocence.

TWO OLD MEN (Jan. 6).—Joe, an old musician, is discharged from the orchestra because of his age. He goes to a cheap rooming house and discovers that Jim, another old, broken-down musician, has the adjoining room. Joe becomes sick, and to get the medicine prescribed by the doctor Jim pawns his violin. While convalescent Joe plays on his cello, but not hearing an answering harmony from the next room, as has been the case previously, he raps on the wall. Getting an answering rap, he plays again, but still there is no musical response. He goes to Jim's room and learns of his sacrifice, and also that Jim is hungry. So that they may both have food he sends Jim out to pawn his cello, although it grieves him sorely to part with the instrument. Years before Joe's daughter had married a man against her father's wishes, and father and daughter had been estranged since. Her husband had prospered, and she would have been happy but for the thought that she had lost her father's love. She discovers the cello in the pawn shop window and traces Joe. A reconciliation takes place and Joe goes to live with her and her husband, and the pawned instruments are redeemed and given back to their respective owners. Joe is happy awhile, but pines for Jim. Jim mourns the loss of his comrade, and is pleasantly surprised by a visit from Joe. When the daughter and her husband discover the situation they make both old men supremely happy by inviting Jim to also become a permanent member of their household, and the story closes with both old men playing a duet together by the fireside, a picture of perfect joy.

BISON.

FALSELY ACCUSED—(Rel'd Dec. 26, in place of "The Run on the Bank," as announced in last week's issue).—Bob is a petty thief and loves Helen, the rancher's daughter. She loves Harry, the foreman, and the couple elope and are married. Bob spies on them and in his jealous rage steals the payroll money, places part of it in Harry's coat pocket and puts the rest away in a secret hiding place behind an unused barn. He brings an accusation against Harry and a search reveals the lost money. At this critical moment he tells the ranchman about the elopement, and in his anger the ranchman orders Harry and Helen away. More than a year elapses, and Bob's stealings having amounted to a considerable sum he plans to get away, and digs up the hoard. He is surprised by little Betty, Helen's sister. Alarmed, he catches her and carries her away, and is intercepted by Harry. A thrilling fight takes place, in which Bob is shot, and Harry carries the unconscious Betty to his cabin, where she is revived by Helen. She sees that Helen and Harry are in desperate financial straits, and goes home and tells her story. Bob is caught as he has dragged himself to the old barn in an effort to get the money, and is arrested. It is the day before New Year, and the ranchman makes up for his unjust treatment by having the entire crowd go out to Harry's cabin with loads of good things to eat, and a joyous banquet takes place.

AMBROSIO.

TWEEDLEDUM LOVES A SINGER (Dec. 27).—Tweedledum becomes madly infatuated with a beautiful singer. He applauds her so vigorously that the theater seems shaken by an earthquake. He attempts to reach the actress after the performance, and after he has overcome the many obstacles in his path he falls in the clutches of a couple of unromantic policemen, who dispel his visions of love.

TINY TOM'S EXPLOITS (Dec. 27).—Tiny Tom enters the police corps, and being so small he is entrusted with dangerous missions which a large man could not accomplish. He performs the most daring deeds, surprising thieves by suddenly emerging from unexpected places, emerging from a barrel or jumping out from behind an automobile, etc., in time to catch a culprit.

REPUBLIC.

LIFE OF DANIEL BOONE (Jan. 14).—Daniel Boone, one of the most adventurous of all "pioneers of civilization," to whose courage, endurance and skill, America owes so much, was born in Virginia. At an early period, he emigrated to North Carolina, but his love of the wilderness not being sufficiently gratified here, he planned an expedition, and with a few adventurous men entered into Kentucky.

On June 7th, 1769, he reached the famous Red River and was captured by a tribe of hostile Indians, who finally adopted him. At the first opportunity he escaped and fought his way back to a settlement.

Shortly after, while agent for a Carolina company, he built a fort on the site now known as Boonesborough, and here were fought the greatest Indian battles in the history of that period.

In 1777 that place was attacked several times by bands of Indians who were repulsed with heavy losses. On the 6th of August, 1777, that famous battle of Boonesborough was fought; 450 Indians led by Chief Blackfish and officered by French Canadian renegades attacked the fort. In spite of repeated assaults, that little garrison of less than fifty men set at defiance its enemies, who were finally obliged to return with heavy losses.

Besides being famous as an Indian fighter, he was also noted as a successful hunter and trapper, which vocation he followed to almost the last few years of his life. He died a peaceful death in his son's home in 1822, surrounded by his children and grandchildren. In portraying this wonderful life, great pains have been taken to accurately reproduce the famous battles, as well as locations mentioned in history, and the result is a magnificent production of Indian and pioneer life, seldom, if ever, equalled in moving pictures.

THROUGH THE AGONY COLUMNS (Jan. 5).—Algy and Gertie had a quarrel and parted. Algy got lonely and so did Gertie. Algy sought a soul mate through the Agony Columns and so did Gertie. In consequence, Algy went to meet his unknown companion in sorrow in the park by appointment. So did Gertie. Algy found that he has been corresponding with Gertie. Gertie found that she has been corresponding with Algy. Algy made up his mind to make it up. So did Gertie; so they did and cupid rejoiced! So did Gertie.

ARTISTIC EARTHENWARE IN THE MAKING (Jan. 5).—From the very earliest days of his meandering around this planet, Man has devoted much time and study to the manufacture of pottery. After centuries of hard work he has made himself some very fine articles, which are both useful and ornamental. On these grounds alone, a complete and comprehensive description of the manufacture of artistic earthenware in the celebrated factory at Nevres, in Central France, should prove of the highest value to the showman.

are followed by a relentless nemesis until the spirit of Christmas, with its joyousness and good cheer spreading over God's world, brings happiness into her home.

The widow seeks work, but luck being against her, she does not secure a position. During her wanderings she is falsely accused of theft by an irascible and insistent old miser, but with the aid of a good-natured sergeant, she escapes the indignity of false imprisonment.

Her little daughter, like more little girls, wanders off to see the big Christmas displays in the shop windows. While gazing with hungry and envious eyes upon dolls and houses and toys, she makes the acquaintance of a benevolent woman of wealth. This woman is moved by the child's longing glances, and so buys for her a big French doll.

The plot is complicated by a dull-headed policeman who arrests the child, but it all turns out happily at the widow's humble home on Christmas Eve, for Santa Claus is the harbinger of hope and love, besides material gifts.

HIS MUSICAL SOUL (Jan. 3).—In "His Musical Soul," a fat man loves a slim little girl, who weighs about one hundred and ninety pounds less than he does.

The fat man has a rival in the shape of a handsome and gallant violinist. The fat man soon gets an inspiration! He decides that he could perhaps charm the sweet damsel with the entrancing (?) strains of a trombone. When he tries, he finds that the silver-throat instrument is not only vibrant and rancous, but a disturber of peace and quiet.

His courtship is a rather inharmonious one. Indeed, so inharmonious that neighbors decide to interfere. The poor fat man gets the worst of it all, but he is finally rewarded for his efforts. He is the happy recipient of the hand of his sweetheart's spinster sister.

OUR POOR RELATIONS (Jan. 5).—The son of a poor widow leaves his mother, and goes out into the "world" to "make his mark." The boy succeeds rapidly. Before long he marries into a family of wealth.

The boy in the meanwhile forgets all about the narrow straits in which he has left his mother. He also forgets that she needs money regularly with which to live. Only periodically does he send her a measly $5. To his new friends and his wife he poses as an orphan without friends or relations.

His mother suffers keenly her son's neglect. At last, when her son had neglected to send her a remittance for a good many months, the mother decides to go to the city and look him up. Worn out with privation and hunger this poor widow reaches the city. Having no place to go, she wends her way to a house of God. Here she sinks into a faint, while the services are in progress.

A wealthy woman and her little daughter have compassion on the poor woman. Answering the pleadings of her little girl and her own humane instincts, she orders that the widow be taken to her home.

The wealthy woman's husband turns out to be the widow's son. Fate brought together mother and son. The son, seeing his mother's condition, soon realizes how snobbish, how undutiable and how mean he has been. And while with bowed head and shamed face he asks her forgiveness, his wife and child clasp their new-found relation to their hearts. The mother forgives her erring son and takes him to her heaving breast.

NESTOR.

AN UNLUCKY PRESENT (Jan. 1).—Young Frank Hope is a lawyer at last. The holidays are approaching, and the present for his sweetheart worries him considerably, as his cash account is low. He is hoping for a client to help him out of his predicament. One comes unexpectedly. A rich woman is accosted by two highwaymen, who meet their Waterloo, by coming in contact with the athletic young lawyer. She becomes his first client and gives him a retainer. Frank is desirous of giving Bess a diamond ring, but even the money he received from the lady does not come up to the price of the ring, so he pawns several of his personal effects. Placing the ring in a box of candy, he forthwith sends it to his sweetheart. Bess opens the package hastily and not noticing the box contains the ring, but thinking that it is all candy, casts it into the fire, for she had hoped that Frank would have given her something better. However, Frank, through the kind help of the society lady, manages to clear up the misunderstanding.

THE TENDERFOOT'S SACRIFICE (Jan. 3).—Through the intervention of a tenderfoot named Eric Newton, Mrs. Andrews' son, Donald and Marie Lewis would have been married ere this time. But it happened that Marie took great pleasure in teaching the tenderfoot to ride, and incidentally indulging in the pastime herself.

One day Marie's horse, "Beauty," was frightened by the blasting of rocks and dashed away with her. Eric, who tried to go to her rescue, was thrown from his horse and wounded. One of the men who was not blasting soon got his horse and darting after the frightened "Beauty," succeeded in bringing her to a stop.

At the hotel Marie's tender solicitude for Eric's injuries enhanced Donald's determination to leave the place entirely. Directly to the hotel went Mrs. Andrews to learn how sincere were Eric's affections toward Marie, but after being told by his doctor that he had only a few months to live, the tenderfoot indulged freely in alcoholically-inclined liquor. Marie, still cognizant of the fate of her father, could not tolerate a drunkard, turned to her erstwhile lover, while the tenderfoot rode away.

DESPERATE DESMOND FAILS (Jan. 6).—Catching butterflies out in the country on a summer day is a pleasant occupation; Rosamond and Claude Eclaire find it so. An elusive butterfly lures Claude away from his girl. Desmond appears in an auto, captures Rosamond and honk-honks past the butterfly chaser.

Realizing his sweetheart's peril, Claude calls the United States troops to the rescue. Uncle Sam's boys enthusiastically answer the call.

Half-burnt cigarettes bearing Desperate Desmond's initials, and which the villain had carelessly thrown away, give his pursuers the only clues to work on, and Desmond is trailed at last. Cornered, he leads Claude and the soldiers to the wigwam wherein Rosamond was hidden. Leaving the boys on guard, the villain enters the tent and—before Claude and the troops can gather their wits, the wigwam moves rapidly away. Another mad chase follows, but Desmond in his auto-tent makes good time and keeps the hunters at a safe distance. They dare not shoot for fear of hitting Rosamond, and the villain goes merrily on.

What the boys cannot do, Desmond's own harmless cigarettes unwittingly accomplish. The villain soon finds himself in a trap. Flames to the front of him and soldiers to the rear of him. He cannot escape this time and, like the coward that he is, he does not care to die. Surrender is the only alternative left him. He surrenders—curse the luck!

AMERICAN.

THE WINNING OF LA MESA (Jan. 8).—The little cow-town of LaMesa was controlled by old Tex Garvin, proprietor of the Garvin gambling place. He kept Pretty Peggy about the saloon to jolly up the "boys" when the Goddess of Fortune frowned. Then came a handsome young minister with his mother and sister and when one of the cowpunchers insulted the sister Peggy's reformation occurred. She went to live with the minister's family and the "boys" all promised to join the church. But Garvin, loving Peggy, drank himself into a murderous fury and determined to revenge himself upon the minister. A catastrophe was averted by the timely work of Peggy.

THE LOCKET (Jan. 11).—George Hughes gave the widow of his old classmate a cottage because he loves her, but she is indisposed to return his affections on account of his strong desire to gamble. The widow's son has a locket containing a photograph of his (Hughes) mother, which the gambler wishes to have, but as the boy is unwilling to sell it to him Hughes leaves and writes a proposal to the widow. Her refusal incites him to indulge in drink more freely, until he is soon reduced to a derelict.

Ten years later, while walking up a street in a western town, he asks the widow's son (whom he does not recognize) for a few pennies. In pulling out the money from his pockets the locket drops and a mutual recognition follows. Hughes steers the boy into a saloon, where he loses the money with which he was to pay the ranch help. The boy tells his mother and sweetheart of his wrong doing and leaves the house, determined to shoot himself. Just as he is leveling the pistol to his temple Hughes, who has won back the boy's money, stays his hand and gives him the amount he had lost. Hurrying to his home the boy tel his mother and sweetheart the joyful news, whil the old gambler looks in the window once mor upon the face of the woman he loves and the passes out of her life forever.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE TEMPTRESS (Jan. 6).—An unemploye secretary, reduced to starvation, with his wife death's door, sees an advertisement for a privat secretary to Mr. Multon. He applies for and s cures the position, mainly by the assistance Mrs. Multon, who thinks she sees in him an eas victim to her wiles. Installed in his new positio Mrs. Multon takes advantage of the absence of he husband to practice the blandishments upon he unsuspecting prey. Time after time does thi cunning Eve endeavor to make the new secretar bring dishonor upon his family, but without avail At last, goaded to desperation by her charm having no effect, she employs cunning as an aid deceit, and creates a scene, in the midst of whic her husband rushes into the room and finds hi wife in a disheveled and agitated condition, whic makes him only too ready to give credence to he story. The employee is sent about his busines and the woman, to make her revenge more complete, writes a letter, which falls into the hand of the secretary's wife, giving the reason of hi dismissal. The shock brings about the woman' death, and on the husband's return home he vow vengeance. Armed with a revolver, he returns his late employer's mansion, and there accuse the woman of her perfidy. Vixen that she is, sh simply laughs in his face. But her idle jest and gibes have been overheard by her husband, wh thereby discovers that it is she who has playe him false, and the story closes with her ignomin ous dismissal from the house.

COMET.

MR. WHOOPS, THE DETECTIVE (Jan. 8).—Mr. Whoops is a milliner detective, and for long time has little to do in the sleuth line. H is a personal friend of the great Sherlock Holme and invariably follows his methods in unravelin crime. Mr. Holmes receives a case. It is to ru to earth a band of kidnappers which has stole "the darling" of a Duke and Duchess who vis a fashionable summer resort. The little one ha been placed in the care of a negligent maid an the disappearance of the little one raises a cr all over the place. Mr. Holmes tries his utmo to find the missing one, but is unsuccessful; he suggests to the Duke and Duchess to emplo Mr. Whoops, which they readily do. Whoops ha his own idea of how the kidnappers should captured. It is needless to say that they ar most absurd and rather impossible. He undergoe a lot of deductions entailing humorous adventure and mishaps. But in the end he reaches a cl and eventually restores the "darling" to the di tracted Duke and Duchess. The "darling" tur out to be a plain, but educated monkey.

THE WIDOW (Jan. 12).—The hand and heart Mrs. Hasthecoin, a rich widow with two childre is sought by Col. Pepper and Col. Carsons, Ke tuckians. The pair are chums and inseparabl One afternoon Pepper calls on his lady love an is received rather coldly, due to the fact that has been gently imbibing. The widow's daught asks him to leave, which he does. The followi day Mrs. Hasthecoin writes him a curt note. S reproaches him for his conduct and adds that t first of the two colonels to quit drinking will w her. Pepper at once shows the note to Carso who reads it in a perfunctory manner. Pepp at once takes the pledge and visits the wido again. He succeeds in impressing her with air of reform and temperance and waits for answer. Then she tells him that she has doted his friend all the time. Pepper confides this Carson. The latter tries to abandon the bott but finds the task a futile one. Not wishing stand in the way of his chum's happiness Pepp hits upon a scheme. He decides to pretend suic and carries out his plan by leaving behind his c and hat at the river front and also writes a let of his intention to destroy himself. To make appear that he has really killed himself Pepp leaves town and no more is heard of him. course, the widow upbraids herself for what has done, but all wounds heal in time and consoles herself with Carson. The latter w again and without the proviso of becoming a t totaler, wins the widow.

MAJESTIC.

TRAINING A HUSBAND (Jan. 7).—Mrs. Charles Bender discharged the cook. Her attempts at preparing a good meal for her husband were so futile that he had his mother come to his house to give him a decent meal. When Charles was at his office admonishing to his head clerk, who is engaged to the stenographer, that he had better pick out a girl who is able to cook, old Mrs. Bender was busily preparing an omelet, upon which she is doing her worst.

Charles is summoned home with the assurance that his dear mother has cooked a meal for him. But at the first mouthful of it he throws up his hands in horror, and his mother, pretending indignation, says that she and his wife will spend the afternoon in a theater.

An hour after the women left the place Bender, who has made several unsuccessful attempts at the culinary art, calls up his stenographer, asking her to come and cook for him.

When the women return hubby has a splendid meal ready for them. Having dismissed his stenographer, Bender gets the credit for the meal. But it is only short-lived, as Mrs. C. Bender happens to go into the kitchen just in time to catch the girl, who has returned to get her umbrella, which she had left. She reveals her identity and the mother and daughter request that she go and tell hubby that she has fallen a victim to his charms.

The scheme works well until the girl's fiance, who has followed her and who has not been told of the plot, dashes into the room and is about to strike his employer, when explanations reduce things to a normal state.

POWERS.

WHEN HUBBY WENT TO COLLEGE (Jan. 9). —Just because a fellow looks like a henpecked codger today gives no reason to believe that he was always thus. In your mind's eye you can see this same old gink fifteen years ago, a handsome, dashing college boy, full of all the thousand and one little tricks that make the college boy what he is.

But hubby, in this case, is a patient, suffering old chap until he takes a notion to assert his independence. Then he does it with avengeance. He calls in all the ingenuity and tom-foolery of happier days, completely turning the tables on her majesty. In fact, so far does he carry matters that when she changes her plans in order to catch him unawares (as she hopes) at a frolic, he maneuvres so cleverly that he soon has a keen satisfaction of seeing his wife intoxicated, and of course, he plays the outraged husband to a T, although he fixed the whole thing up himself. But he bombastically pardons her for her erring ways and in future it is his privilege to smoke and even take a drink under the very roof where it was heretofore forbidden. And wifey must not say a word.

TOURING VENICE (Jan. 9).—This picture takes us through sleepy, dreamy Venice, the city of romance and poetry and flower and song. It is a delightful trip, first on a train and then on a gondola with the fine palaces of ancient Venice and the picturesque peasants' homes continually in view.

HER HEART'S DEPTH (Jan. 13).—One can never tell what changes in the relation of men the lust for gold will bring about. Two old pals who have slept and starved with each other for years find suddenly that they are on the verge of possessing a great fortune, and the very instant that one of them finds that he has a slight advantage over the other there begins a heart-breaking race for the control of the situation. This control means also the hand of a girl and as luck would have it, the machinations of Fate favor the less worthy of the two men. But it is a long lane that has no turning and when in the hour of desperate need the call is made to the heart of the woman, that indefinable feminine intuition which juries have learned to value even higher than fact, comes into play and for the millionth time, as ever it is, the depth of the woman's heart through which Fate plays her hand —and the best man wins.

CHAMPION.

AN AVIATOR'S SUCCESS (Jan. 8).—Gerald Griffen is a young inventor, and the triumph of his genius is an aeroplane. With the perfected model, he calls on a broker, Robert Gemp, to back him. Gemp flatly refuses to assist him in his enterprise. With saddened hopes, the young man leaves his office. He now bethinks himself of the banker, Scott. Into the banker's house he comes with his precious model.

The family cluster about the young man with his model. Once more his aspirations are squashed, for the banker is of the broker's turn of mind. But the daughter has become interested, not only in the machine, but in the inventor also. Of course she has her way and in short order our genius goes forth with a check of substantial figures in his grasp, and a young girl's affection in his bosom.

Shortly afterwards, Robert Gemp pays a visit to his friend Scott, but the real motive of his call is Scott's daughter. Now, Robert Gemp being a handsome fellow, he was not to be "sneezed at," nor up to this moment had Miss Scott attempted to do so. But the coming of Gerald Griffen changed her attitude towards her quondam sweetheart, Gemp.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED

The climax to all this came on the aviation field. Young Gerald had undertaken to initiate her into the mysteries of the air machine, much to Gemp's annoyance, and when she was about to accept an invitation to fly with the handsome youth, he put in his veto with much vehemence. This was too much for the spirited girl, and she broke with him then and there. Gerald now repeated his request and was accepted in a double sense by Miss Scott, who now entered the aeroplane and they soared aloft.

LOVE THAT NEVER FAILS (Jan. 10).—Paul Burns lives with his wife and five-year-old baby girl in a snug little cottage up among the hills of the Northwest. Paul, who is a hunter and trapper, is passionately fond of his little girl Ruth; his love for his wife is also ideal. Into this happy home comes a human serpena—a boa constrictor of the human species. The woman is charmed by his basilisk eyes, and yielding to the temptation she suffers herself to be led off, feeling in the glow of his slimy encircling coils a false passion that is to compensate for the loss of husband and little baby girl.

This monster who comes into the paradise of the poor trapper is a foreman on a ranch of old Denizot; his name is Pollard. A number of his cohorts accompany him on the fateful morning he carries off the wife of Burns. Just previous to his doing so, the husband had kissed his spouse good-by, and putting his little Ruth on his back, had sallied forth with his gun to bring down a bird or bag a hare for the midday repast.

Having proceeded on his journey quite a way, Pollard bethought himself of an act worthy of his type, and despatched one of the cowboys with a hastily scribbled message to be tacked on the home he had just destroyed. When Burns and the child returned there was no wife's voice to greet him. He could not understand it, and while puzzling over it, a rude knock came to the door. It was the cowboy who had pinned the fatal note and then rode swiftly away. When Burns went out on the porch no one was there. He espied the note, and when he read it his heart almost burst. He grabbed the baby and rushed within.

Through sheer exhaustion from worriment, Burns fell asleep. When he awoke with a start, his little Ruth was gone—she had wandered out into the woods, calling and searching for her mother. In a mad frenzy her distracted father dashed after her, calling to her loudly as he followed her tracks. But long before, the child had fallen over a high rock. Then Providence intervened. Down at the ranch when Pollard and his crew arrived, a little baby ran forth to greet the wretch. The guilty mother then realized her own loss, the enormity of her sacrifice. In an instant she broke the fetters of her unholy alliance, and, defying interference, hugged the child to her and retraced her journey towards home.

Long after, she sank from hunger and weakness upon the same rock over which her child had fallen. And here the distracted husband found her, and dashed her headlong over the ledge. Fortunately, what saved her baby and now saved her was a big snow drift, into which she fell. Hours later, when she dragged herself homeward, the husband was amazed to see wife and child. The smiling countenance of his little Ruth reflected its purity in their hearts, and wife and husband became reconciled.

REX.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS (Jan. 4).—John Finley meets sweet Mary Sparks at church, and on their way home the spark enters their hearts and the gift of a great love becomes theirs. John is backward in the telling of his affection, and Mary waits, eagerly, yearningly, for the honeyed words. At last he writes her, deciding to go West if her reply is not favorable. The woman pens a hasty note, asking him to call at eight for his answer. She assigns her small brother to deliver the note.

On his way to John's home he meets a little acquaintance, who is bound for the pond with a little boat. An invitation is extended, the errand and the purpose are forgotten, and the letter is never delivered.

John enters the church, seeking to find there the balm and peace his spirit craved.

Eight o'clock came and went, but John did not come. The woman, not realizing, not understanding, and misunderstanding, is broken-hearted. Broken-hearted, she loses interest in life. Broken-hearted, she enters the church as a nun.

Time, the dispeller of all doubts, the interpreter of all misconceived situations, takes its course. And years speed.

One day Mary, in going over some clothes contributed for the poor, comes across her little brother's jacket. She finds the letter—Satan visiting one of God's women.

And then they meet. They look upon each other and into each other's eyes, and there they read the answer. She shows him the letter. They are tempted; church, duty, God, life and death and all things of the world and beyond, are forgot—it is the conflict of hearts and the strife of souls. They are just about to —— when the Angelus rings, and they stop and remember.

He turns his steps about, and re-enters the monastery. She joins the passing line of nuns, and re-enters the convent. And peace and calm, let us hope, re-enter their hearts.

Among the Exhibitors

Rochester, N. Y.—A certificate of incorporation has been filed for the Thompson-Tyler Company, which will erect a fireproof motion picture house. It will be on the east side of Plymouth Avenue north, near West Avenue. The incorporators and officers of the company are T. G. Thompson, G. L. Tyler, and Jacob Nann, Jr.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Plans are also being prepared for a large vaudeville and moving picture theater, to be located on Jamaica Avenue near the Brooklyn Manor section. This building, it is said, will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000 and will be opened early in the spring. There are at present several moving picture houses in Jamaica Avenue, all doing good business.

New York City.—S. Osgood Pell & Company have leased for Mrs. Laura W. Parsons the four-story building No. 2328 Broadway, who will convert it into a picture house.

Dunellen, N. J.—The vacant store in the Linke Building is being fitted up for a moving picture theater, which is soon to be opened there by J. G. Wolfe.

Winston-Salem, N. C.—W. E. Pike will erect a theater here.

Tampa, Fla.—Orpheum Theater Company will expend about $7,000 to remodel the Orpheum Theater.

Louisville, Ky.—Fidelity Trust Company will expend about $4,000 to remodel building at 226 W. Market Street for moving picture theater.

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—Eli Nelson, of the Gem Theater, will erect a new theater building at Ladysmith. W. H. Goff, of Bruce, has the contract.

Mason City, Ia.—The Wilson Theater, which was destroyed by fire, will be rebuilt.

New York, N. Y.—Sam Schwartz will establish a moving picture theater in the building at 120th Street and Sylvan Place to cost $5,000.

Trenton, N. J.—The Princess Moving Picture Theater, at 617-619 Princeton Avenue, has opened with Charles Wright as manager. The new theater will be made fireproof and will have a seating capacity of nearly 200.

Brockton, Mass.—Samuel A. Shaw and Robert F. Keene, who have purchased the moving picture business at the Empire Amusement House, West and Washington Streets, are having it remodeled and enlarged.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Atlas Amusement Company will erect an addition to their theater, at 3d and North Avenues, to cost $3,000.

Sheridan, Wyo.—The Pastime Theater, owned by Walsner & Kerby, was sold to James Brown.

Shelburn, Ind.—S. K. Baird and Harry Banister have sold the Sambo House to Harvey Arbaugh.

CONGOLEUM

For FLOORS and WAINSCOTING

The Aisle Problem

For aisles of Moving Picture Theatres with their steady, heavy traffic, we manufacture and recommend our Slate Gray Congoleum. It looks like sheet rubber except that it is a little thicker, wears better and is very much cheaper. It gives perfect footing, can be used on steps and slopes and will stand an enormous amount of traffic. In fact, the best field for the sale of this material is just such places as aisles of moving picture shows where the traffic is concentrated.

Sold in three widths, 36, 45 and 54 inches; buy whatever length you need. You can get it at Department Stores and hardware stores, or we will sell you direct.

The Wainscoting Problem

The walls of moving picture theatres need a wainscoting of some material that will not easily blacken or become dingy. Our Oak Finish Congoleum solves that problem perfectly. The fabric has a special finish in duplication of quartered oak. It is brilliantly varnished, and when used on the walls in conjunction with a top rail and baseboard, it secures a very handsome hard wood effect at trifling cost. It is ideally sanitary and can be easily kept clean and bright for years.

It can be put in place by anybody who can drive a nail. It is not inflammable and will be accepted by fire insurance underwriters. Sold in rolls a yard wide. Light Oak or Golden Oak. Buy whatever length you need. Booklets on request.

THE MAJESTIC

Calls attention to the following seven January releases. Each and every picture has a strong story, is cleverly acted, and the photography is perfect.

Every exhibitor should feature all of these pictures and should make an immediate booking with his exchange.

Every exhibitor should demand TWO MAJESTICS each week, because there are none better.

TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK

WATCH THEM GROWING IN QUALITY!!!

Our second release begins Friday, January 12th. A high-class, double-exposure comedy—something new and novel—demand it from your exchange.

Seven Majestics in January

SUNDAY, JANUARY 7TH. "TRAINING A HUSBAND"—a fine comedy—a fault-finding husband who temporarily gets the whip hand of his wife and his mother-in-law through the aid of his pretty stenographer, but who is finally put in his properly humble position—a comedy of complications.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12TH. "GOSSIP"—a double exposure comedy, showing exterior and interior scenes at same time—relating the bad effects of gossip—how the story grows as told from one to another and the sure cure for the dreaded evil.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 14TH. "HIS FATE'S REHEARSAL"—one of the strongest dramatic pictures ever produced—the husband reaching home after a bad night's carousal, and his wife's father, a physician, administers treatment which causes husband to live through a terrible strain of mind—a strong picture—a good moral lesson.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19TH. "NEXT"—a roaring comedy—the lonesome barber, the manicure girl, the nice boy falls in love, thrown out by parents, and finally the manicure girl wins parents—a laugh every foot.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21ST. "SPARE THE ROD"—a strong lesson, showing the results of using the whip on children—the temper of the father is finally overcome by the ever-loving mother, who takes child from home, earns her own living by teaching school and finally shows husband the error of his ways.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26TH. "THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE"—comedy. Father has a little extra money, hires an automobile, apparently runs over a woman, who then proceeds to extract money, piano, furniture and medicine—father finally driven to poverty until the discovery of farce and deception.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28TH. "A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE." The widow at home, in love with a young fellow, who partly returns the affection—the return of widow's daughter from school—the transferring of affection of young fellow from mother to daughter—then the hidden suffering and sacrifice for strong love for her daughter.

TRY IT!

If you haven't seen any Independent films in the past few months, you've got the biggest surprise of your life coming to you. The steady, never-ceasing growth of my business shows that more and more exhibitors are turning independent and that when once they jump to the independent side they STICK! They wouldn't do this if they didn't increase their profits, you can bet your life. Try it!

DO your patrons avoid your front and side seats? When they are compelled to occupy those seats, do they leave your entertainment wearied and dissatisfied, feeling that they do not care to come again?

Is it worth anything to you to know that with a

"PERFECTION CONCAVE SCREEN"

you can correct that defect so that the front and side seats will be just as desirable as the center seats?

This feature alone will be worth many times the cost of the screen.

Let us know your requirements and we will quote you on the kind of a screen best suited to your needs.

The Eye Comfort System of Indirect Illumination

Since the first advertisement in this paper, a few months ago, theatres in all sections of the country have installed this system. All enthusiastic, and acknowledge that theatre lighting has been revolutionized.

Even illumination throughout your theatre can be obtained without a light in range of vision.

No glaring side lights to detract from the detail of your picture, and more perfect depth and perspective are assured.

Our engineering department will furnish you, free of expense, reports and recommendations on request.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and any one can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of three dollars ($3) cash with order, we will send by express, charges not prepaid, or $3.50 by registered mail, prepaid, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address

It will give you perfect pictures without haze, glare or eye strain. You can keep your theatre brilliantly illuminated, still save one-third on your juice bill. Mirroroide is not an aluminum coating, but pure silver foil. Our 1912 product now ready for the market. Get it. Do it now.

HOW THE AGENT WAS SHOWN.

From the Yale Theatre Co.

Muskogee, Okla.

Benjamin Genter Co.—An amusing incident occurred here this morning. A representative for a patent screen put up his wonderful screen. We run a part of picture on it. Then rolled your curtain part way up showing half of picture on your curtain, half on his. "Your curtain was far superior." We came to make this test in this way: This representative called on us a few days ago, and stated his screen was far in advance of your curtain. We replied, "Show us and you can make a sale." He did with above results. We have never seen anything to equal your screen.

From the Patrons View Point

What Causes People

to continually patronize one Picture Theatre in preference to another? Of course, location, appearances, films, etc. have a great deal to do with it, but quality of the picture is what builds up a steady patronage that makes the business profitable.

This depends largely on your light and if you are using any other device than a to step down your current you are not getting best results.

With our machine you can produce a clear, white, steady light that won't worry your "house" by continuous flickering and will surprise you with the difference it makes with the films.

It is the only device that can be changed instantly to any of the three intensities without breaking the circuit between adjustments.

But this is not all. We will guarantee that our Compensarc

Will Cut 65% from Your Light Bill and we'll send you one on 30 days' free trial to prove it.

We have a little 22 page booklet that explains all the reasons why If you want a better light at ⅓ your present cost, send for it today. It's free.

No. 6

POSSESSES POPULARITY WITHOUT PARALLEL

In no field, where moving pictures are utilized, are the best results so imperatively demanded as that of the illustrated lecture; and here Power's Cameragraph shines as a most important factor.

Dwight Elmendorf, Burton Holmes, Lyman H. Howe, Fred Niblo. You know them, perhaps have seen their work. They all use Power's. Why? Because they must have only the best.

For fourteen years Power's has stood for "BEST," and our No. 6 embodies the most advanced thought in moving picture machines.

It is perfect in construction, noiseless in operation, projects a picture absolutely without flicker, runs like a watch and firm as the hills eternal.

THE THANHOUSER

"GREATEST JANUARY" Including EAST LYNNE (2 Reels, JAN. 26th)

RELEASED TUESDAY, JANUARY 16th

Dr. Jekyll AND Mr. Hyde

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

"Greatest January's" Psychological Subject

This is the famous story of the physician who tasted of the drug that changed one from a good man to an evil one. A conscientious man who has devoted his life to the saving of human life, a swallow of the drug makes him a beast who would destroy all within his reach and another swallow restores him to his normal balance. But one day the drug-bottle breaks, while he is in the evil state, and he can't GET the OTHER swallow! The film tells the thrilling rest.

RELEASED FRIDAY, JANUARY 19th

A Niagara Honeymoon

STAGED RIGHT AT THE FALLS AND EN ROUTE TO THE FALLS

"Greatest January's" Scenic Gem

In this unusual comedy-drama, you leave New York for Niagara Falls with a pair of Newlyweds and marvel with them at the pretty sights on the way. Finally you reach "America's Greatest Cataract" and see some lively situations worked out in the localities that citizens of every nation pay large money to see. From far and wide they come to look at Niagara Falls, and far and wide they will welcome heartily the best moving picture ever taken there.

FOUR-A-WEEK ESSANAY

Where Photography Counts

Compare the photographic qualities of the average ESSANAY with that of the average film of any other company and you will observe that the ESSANAY is superior in every feature. ESSANAY photography is clean-cut, clear, pleasingly soft to the eye, with the right proportion of sparkle and snap. One can almost trace the eye-lashes, every line in the face. Not the slightest change of expression in the character's face is lost. The figures seem to stand out from the screen and to become living flesh and blood. The critical public appreciates good photography. You will always find good photography in the ESSANAY photoplays.

A Hen House Hero

RELEASED TUESDAY, JAN. 9th

(Length, approx. 1,000 feet.)

Here is a bully good comedy, with a unique plot, brimful of laughable situations.

The Tenderfoot Foreman

RELEASED THURSDAY, JAN. 11th

(Length, approx. 1,000 feet.)

An excellent story of the West, intensely dramatic. Portrayed with fine feeling, and developing many situations of sympathetic heart interest.

A Ragtime Love Affair

RELEASED FRIDAY, JAN. 12th

(Length, approx. 1,000 feet.)

A "musical comedy" with Cupid at the piano. Fresh in plot, with lots of fun, and pleasingly played.

The Sheepman's Escape

RELEASED SATURDAY, JANUARY 13th

(Length, approx. 1,000 feet.)

This splendid Western drama develops a tremendously powerful climax, worked out in a thoroughly logical and convincing manner. It is a human story, portrayed with splendid skill.

COMING

or

from Thomas's French Opera

The Exhibitors who are booked for Mignon, the second in the series of the monthly features, will receive from their Exchange a copy of a "Potpourrie"—meaning scores of popular selections for piano and violin—from the well-known opera.

Owing to the infinite preparation which this feature production requires, it has been decided to postpone its release from Sunday, January 28th, to Friday, February 2d.

BY THE HAND OF A CHILD

Released Sunday, January 14th

"There is some good left in the worst of us."

A keepsake, a small doll, influences the life of a desperado—after he is "given a chance." The doll and what it represents to him, guides him in the path of righteousness.

PARSON SUE

Released Wednesday, January 17th

This is a Western comedy that is different from other Western productions. It is an exhilarating novelty—something far above the ordinary. The story is about a girl parson who is the spiritual guide of a bunch of wild cowboys. The way they all try to "get in right" and the way Billy Quirk "puts over" the comedy is a revelation. Take it from us straight—no kiddin'—Parson Sue is a winner.

A MAN'S A MAN

Released Friday, January, 19th

This production shows the Jew in a different light. We see him here as a man ready and willing to make sacrifices and forgive and forget. It is a pathetic story that not only grips but kindles up in us an entirely new sensation.

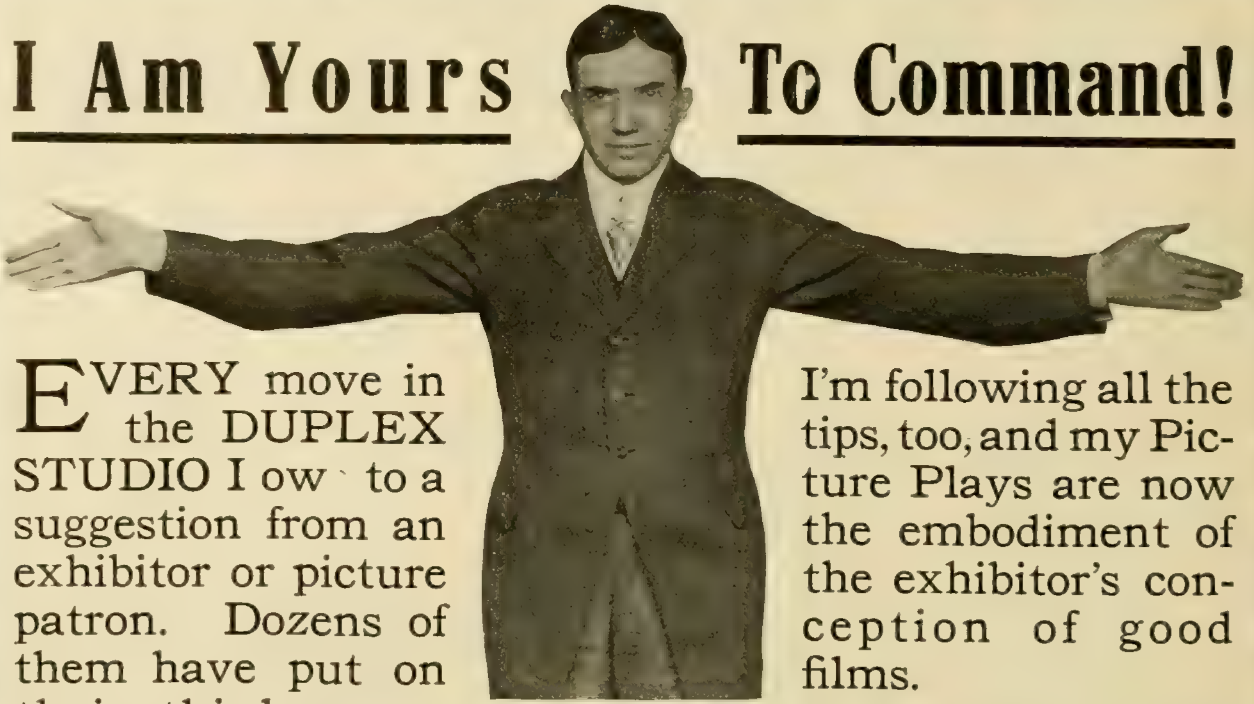
I Am Yours To Command!



EVERY move in the DUPLEX STUDIO I owe to a suggestion from an exhibitor or picture patron. Dozens of them have put on their thinking caps, and the letters I get are worth a young fortune to my staff. They're rich in ideas, fertile in conception.

I'm following all the tips, too, and my Picture Plays are now the embodiment of the exhibitor's conception of good films.

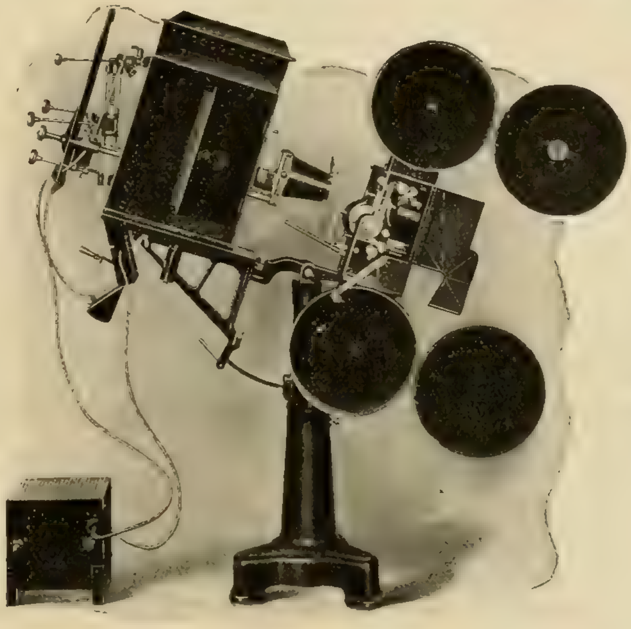
THE PEER OF ALL

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

The table for lamphouse is provided with a substantial swing movement which instantaneously brings the lamp into optical center either with the M. P. Projection or Stereopticon lenses, and the Tilting arrangement giving ample latitude, is governed by the moving of the support through the arc provided at the back of the stand.



The base, at its center, rests on a device by which the machine can be swung to right or left, and the center of gravity of this stand, together with its table support, and in conjunction with the Head and lamphouse, owing to careful calculation provides a machine of perfect rigidity and freedom from all vibration.

KISSING PILLS

Nothing funnier has ever been thought of than "Kissing Pills." A clever crank doctor concocts a pill which will induce the appetite for kissing. To get it on the market he one day gives them away to all comers and the promiscuous kissing that eventuates is a scream that will be hard to recover from.

GENERAL DAFT

This a farce pure and simple, but even at that might be possible. It is a case of mistaken identity and the extreme is that a splendid young military college boy is mistaken for the craziest kind of a lunatic, who has escaped from the asylum and thinks it is his duty to take other people back there. It will make your audience fall off their seats laughing, so keep your floor clean.

Released Thursday, January 11th, 1912

Length about 1000 feet

THE BLACKSMITH

A story that might well be accredited to George R. Simms. It is pathetic and full of heart interest. It will please young girls immensely and doubtless have a long run. Three of the Lubin best players and the necessary auxiliaries acted the story.

Scene from "The Blacksmith"

Released Saturday, Jan. 13th, 1912

Length about 1000 feet

PAID IN HIS OWN COIN

This picture illustrates a very interesting story.

Marguerite Moreland, a young society girl, meets with a sad accident by a railroad train striking her automobile. The gate to the tracks being open it is clearly a case of fault on the part of the railroad company. A suit is brought and the railroad attorney wins out against the young lady by a cruel trick. She, in return, gets square with him by making him fall in love and breaking his heart.

Released Monday, January 15th, 1912

Length about 1000 feet

HER UNCLE'S CONSENT

A nice little laugh on Uncle Pettingill, who has his niece's matrimonial future in his hands. The professor thinks he is a woman hater, but falls a victim to the blandishments of a chorus girl. The niece is in love with an actor and by one couple catching the other all are made happy.

This film is a corker.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The only permanent thing in the Universe is change.

Progress is attained through evolutionary changes.

In the film business KOSMIK has been synonymous with Progress.

KOSMIK is derived from the word "Cosmos" meaning Universe.

KOSMIK films treat of human nature in drama and comedy.

The dramas sound the depths of pathos, passion and virility. The comedies resound with laughter, of the genial kind, good-natured and clean.

After January 20, 1912, KOSMIK films will include two CIN-ES and one URBAN-ECLIPSE reels and no others.

They will prove a revelation: to miss coming Kosmik comedies will be a calamity for the picture public; to lose Kosmik dramas, fatal to the exhibitor.

Coming CIN-ES and URBAN-ECLIPSE features are magnificent productions; dramas that quicken the blood; comedies whose humor will wipe away the wrinkles of carking care.

All issued under the license of the Motion Picture Patents Company.

Geo. Kleine

COMING KOSMIK CLASSICS

BRUTUS

This CIN-ES production, scheduled for release January 20, 1912, is the subject we have chosen with which to introduce this nake of films to the American public. It is an adaptation from Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar", showing the death of Caesar, the light of Brutus from Rome, the appearance of Caesar's ghost to Brutus, his death upon the battlefield and the Battle of Philippi.

"Brutus" is a marvel of magnificence, staged in splendor, wrapped in grandeur.

Real live Exhibitors will not fail to book BRUTUS early.

On Tuesday, January 23rd, we will release a CIN-ES split reel

THE BRAVE DESERVES THE FAIR
ARTISTIC VENICE

Then comes our regular URBAN-ECLIPSE release on Wednesday, January 24th,

A WOMAN'S WRATH

A remarkable production, showing Madame Dermoz in wonderful piece of dramatic acting.

Following, on Saturday, January 27th, we will release another CIN-ES masterpiece and a faithful interpretation of the biblical narrative.

JOSEPH IN EGYPT

Keep a sharp look-out for

A CIN-ES every Tuesday
An URBAN-ECLIPSE every Wednesday
A CIN-ES every Saturday

The NEW ERA in picture entertainment is at hand.

Facts and Comments

TO all who are interested in the making and exhibiting of motion pictures nothing can be more interesting as a fruitful source of information and enlightenment than the current statistics of libraries. Nowhere can the pulse of the pleasure-loving public be felt with better promise of a correct estimate than in the free public library of to-day. For some time past the librarians have issued a weekly bulletin of statistics, which we have studied with some care for the last few months. It appears from these statistics that readers are roughly divided into two classes—readers of fiction and readers of more solid matter. The modern novel seems to hold a slight advantage in the field of fiction, but is not so very far in advance of what may be called classic or standard fiction. As far as solid reading, akin to study, is concerned, books on social problems have a decided preference with historic and purely scientific works next in demand. All over the country the reading of fiction shows a pronounced decrease and the patronage of the libraries to-day as a whole shows a comparative retrogression as compared with the patronage of ten years ago.

Are we far out of the way in attributing this comparative falling off of readers to the motion picture? Let it be remembered, that this falling off is not only confined to this country, but has been observed in European countries as well, notably in England, where Lord Rosebery, one of the most accomplished and enlightened scholars of our day, has made the decrease of the patronage of free public libraries the subject of a most interesting article. He practically says, that the modern world is overstocked with libraries; that there is a lot of dead matter in libraries. We may add to this significant testimony of a keen observer the comments of a Parisian scholar, who suggested that the great libraries of Paris might be improved by building bonfires in some of their sections.

The fact of the matter is that, to the great majority of our people, to whom circumstances have allowed nothing better in the way of mental training than a common school education, the motion picture is a royal road to pleasure and knowledge. The library, then, is deserted for the products of the cinematograph and the moving picture becomes to very many of our adult population a most welcome and pleasing post-graduate course of the common school. The idea of a municipal free moving picture theater is slowly but surely taking root in many progressive minds to-day. Of course there will be opposition from more than one quarter. We do not have to go back very far in time to find bitter and various opposition to the free public library. The latter, indeed, is strictly a modern growth. Great public libraries freely accessible to the general public were few and far between at the beginning of the last century. The good the free public library has accomplished defies calculation, but we sincerely believe that the free public picture theater would be an even greater agency for good.

TO those of us who labor for the uplift and the higher destiny of the motion picture, no popular heresy is more annoying and provoking than the idea, still prevalent in many intelligent circles, that the cinematograph was invented for the exclusive benefit of small children and that the motion picture entertainment is primarily a children's entertainment. To judge by the products of certain manufacturers of the past and a few film makers of the present it would indeed seem as if they imagined that the world consists mainly of messenger boys, dime novel readers and candidates for the asylum for feeble-minded people. Such products, however, are getting rarer almost every day and the great majority of the film manufacturers have a very correct idea of the duties and capabilities of the motion picture. In spite of all the improvement in quality, however, there are to-day thousands upon thousands of otherwise intelligent people, who formed their opinions of the pictures they saw five and more years ago. The notion that the motion picture was chiefly intended for the child and especially the most immature of children arose, quite naturally perhaps, from the tremendous popularity of all kinds of motion pictures in the world of children. Up to the age of twelve the mind is most powerfully affected by pictures. It is a stimulant of which the child of and under twelve can never get enough, for up to that age the imagination dominates the whole human being and the imagination is impressed by the picture immeasurably more than by the cold black type on white paper.

THE counsel warning us to be careful in the treatment of pearls and not cast them before swine, seems to stand in need of revision. Judging by the keen and savage appetite, with which of late former dime museum managers, impresarios of street carnivals and similar ilk have pounced upon classic masterpieces in films it is by no means impossible, that the humble but useful denizen of the sty may improve on a steady diet of pearls; the discordant grunt may be changed into melodious harmony and the feat of transmuting a sow's ear into a silken purse may yet be accomplished, the Milesian superstition to the contrary notwithstanding. Dante scholars are turning up in the most unexpected of places. The moving picture is a breeder of miracles.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD would be remiss in its duties if it failed to make any mention of the litigation now in progress between the Greater New York Film Renting Company and the Motion Picture Patents Company. The matters in dispute being under advisement by the competent legal tribunal we defer all reference thereto to the time of the rendering of the decision. It may, however, be stated as a matter of fairness to the litigants, that both parties come into court with clean hands. The parties are seeking to maintain and defend what they believe to be their good, honest rights. Both parties are represented by counsel of more than common ability; Samuel Untermeyer, noted for his courage and his mastery of corporate law, represents the plaintiffs, while David Leventritt, who looks back upon many years of honorable and distinguished service as a justice upon the bench of the Supreme Court, has been retained to safeguard the interests of the defendant. From the magnitude of the interests involved on both sides it is probable that a final adjudication may be sought in the court of last resort.

Picking a Play

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

FIFTY per cent. of all the plays that appear on the screen show the eternal triangle, two men and a woman, with one couple embracing at the end. That is a fine old conundrum. "When is a door not a door? When it's a jar, tee-hee," but after hearing it twice a night, every night in the week and fifty-two weeks in the year, it begins to grow monotonous. The men who pick such plays are a lot of old cast-offs, never-was's and never-will-be's posing as "directors" in motion-picture studios, still adhering to villains in dress suits and addicted to cigarettes in pursuit of heroines obtrusively virtuous, trying to get a thrill out of tying a woman to a railroad track, holding up the unpleasant spectacle of drunken sots with destitute wives and children as an impressive moral lesson, or trying to convince us that the spectacle of a lot of people chasing up and down the streets, falling over each other and upsetting everybody and everything in their way, or the edifying view of men and women knocking over tables and other furniture in a room, breaking up a lot of old junk from the second-hand store, smashing plaster casts and tearing down the window curtains is funny. It is about as funny as a crutch.

The director of the orchestra does not pick the opera, but gives his entire attention to the suitable performance of the score in hand, yet I have heard that some of these shockheaded studio directors cannot put on a play unless it appeals to them. None of us is in the business of appealing to them but to audiences weary of monotony, to exhibitors who want satisfied customers, even to critics in search of noteworthy plays, and the director who cannot attend to his department, who has proven his incompetency by poor response to support given him, is ready for the garbage can.

Many studio directors have snaps because the producers are, in a majority of cases, commercial men whose attention is absorbed by the economic laws that govern all industries, busily occupied with essential details of finance, organization, and mechanical perfection, and inclined to let the director make good if it is in him to do so. This condition may continue; the clash of legal opinion and complicated political factors in the large groups of manufacturers are especially interesting just now, but it would not be a bad plan for those who are after big profits and lasting success to turn aside for a few hours and do some quiet thinking on a subject that is causing widespread dissatisfaction among those now supporting the little theaters. It is time to anticipate the effect present conditions will have on the future. Because the present business is good, even because it looks promising, is no reason for going up in the air.

There is a serious weakness in the quality of the present output which does not result from lack of good scenarios, but from lack of men who can bring up to their selection of photoplays anything like the quality the public expects in such productions. Another weakness lies in the fact that present surface conditions are misleading. In boom days it is very difficult to get any man to look out over a long period of time and see things in a large way, but if the history of theatrical affairs teaches anything at all it shows a lack of foresight on the part of those enjoying a temporary period of high prosperity. They have often killed the goose to get all the golden eggs at once and found themselves loaded up on a declining market, because they were unwilling or unable to meet the steady advance in public taste and in public enlightenment that is going on all the time.

The producer of ability to see things first and get into the lead, if he does not distance his competitors, will be the one who puts out a uniform high quality of photodrama, not an occasional hit, but this is obviously impossible where fine selective capability is lacking. An essential in every well-balanced photoplay studio is a man who can prove his case by choosing the best photodramas in the market, by holding professional playwrights close to his firm's interest, and by hiring directors capable of subordinating their individual peculiarities to the common welfare. An art director of ability, whether or not he is also a successful playwright, must be acquainted with the various forms in which the photodrama expresses itself, but he should also be a man of broad national outlook. He needs a range of vision that embraces a large sweep of life to reach the interest of people all over the country. The purely theatrical director confines himself to action and reaction, to tension and relief.

To illustrate my meaning I will refer to a photoplay scenario that sold on sight at a good figure. The situation presented was that of the triangle. A husband suspects his wife of infidelity, the other man in the case is a warm personal friend, and the man who believes himself deceived by those he loves best takes a peculiar poison that assures slow but sure death. After the poison is in process of destroying his life, he finds that he was mistaken and his wife loves him with all her heart. "Fine situation," said the director who bought the play, and the leading man, seeing some splendid emotional opportunity in his rôle, added his approval. The element of suspense lay in the search for the antidote. After the presentation of that play the audience is likely to say, "What of it?" It is not so much a case of "show me," with the average American as a common recognition that there must be a reason for the existence of everything created. He is inclined to give every play a fair show, will sit patiently through a lot of straining for effect if there is a raison d'être in the summing up, but his mode of thought, and it belongs to the constitution of the race, is that of getting at some truth by venturesome experiment or logical demonstration. Most of our people are self-made or in the process of making and are interested in all questions pretty sure to come up before them at some time or other in their lives, they are also deeply affected by the varied aspects of whatever is making its appearance in modern thought, they even delight in figuring out the infinite possibilities of moving pictures, but they do not care for emptiness in a novel, a drama or a picture. No matter how well constructed the play, nor how much opportunity it affords for emotional acting, it will never be regarded as great unless it is fit to meet a certain preparedness in the public mind to look at great questions from new point of view, and it will be greatest when it adequately guides common sympathy and common sense, hand in hand, to some striking result. The hour needs the man, but neither can do effectively without the other.

"A great idea thrown out by a mind in advance of its age takes root and germinates in secret, shapes the unconscious thought of a few individuals and is widely diffused by them until"—like a great play—"it silently matures itself in the womb of time to come forth before all in full panoply of power."

Achievements of "Nineteen-Eleven"

SOME OF THE BIG THINGS ACCOMPLISHED IN THE UPLIFT OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY —SOME HINTS TO EXHIBITORS LOOKING TO FUTURE BETTERMENT.

THE manufacturer, the exhibitor and the renter of films can look back upon 1911, from a general viewpoint, as a year of progress and of gain rather than of loss. But it does not necessarily follow that any one of these great factors in the moving picture industry should feel satisfied with either the progress or the gain.

MORE THAN ONE-REEL SUBJECTS.

One of the greatest achievements—indeed, it is the greatest—of the year has been the successful introduction of the more-than-one-reel film. These great subjects have raised the moving picture to a plane on which it has won the admiration and loyalty of millions of new followers. But the manufacturer, since he has fixed this higher standard, would do well to remember that the production of one of these subjects occasionally will not atone for inferiority in his regular output. The quality of the latter must increase rather than diminish, because the critical faculties of picture lovers have been sharpened, and the demand is for better quality and still better quality.

FOUR RELEASES WEEKLY.

Right here it is pertinent to treat of the four weekly releases, or more, by manufacturers, a policy that marked 1911. How is it working?

Anyone who keeps in close touch with exhibitors will find that there is a feeling of dissatisfaction among them over the four-release policy. They will tell you that the policy has already reduced the quality of the output of several manufacturers, while it has not, as yet, affected that of others. Nor is this judgment based on their personal opinions; it is based on the expressed opinions of their patrons.

Let us get at the root of this matter.

Granting that factory facilities are ample for the weekly output of four reels, there is the grave question as to whether the members of the stock companies have been increased, so as to avoid overwork and consequent imperfect characterizations before the camera. These requisite additions to the acting force mean large additional expenditures, and if they are not made the quality of the output must diminish. No actor or actress has the versatility or the physical stamina to appear in several different characters of any importance, in different dramas, the same day, with any possibility of doing good work. And the silent drama demands the best work that an actor or actress can do.

In a nutshell, the four-release policy is all right, if the indispensible additional provisions are made for the maintenance and still further heightening of quality. Added to this, the scenarios must possess constructive merit and stories worth while.

THE EXCHANGES.

Film renting has reached the most satisfactory stage known in the history of moving pictures. This implies that the exchange is furnishing a more satisfactory service than ever before and that the exhibitor is better pleased with his service than ever before.

The General Film Company has exercised a beneficial influence on the renting business. Managers of the various branches have had it impressed on them that exhibitors are a potent factor of the trade, and that they must be treated in the light of co-partners. All the old evils of conflicting programs with nearby competitors have been remedied.

In cities where there is a daily change, the pictures suffer from dirty films and imperfect inspection, owing to the short idle time of films at the exchange. These drawbacks should be remedied. The exhibitor can secure a simple contrivance, at a nominal expense, to clean his films of oil when unwinding and rewinding them. The labor will be amply repaid by the reputation given a house for clear, good pictures.

It is monstrous negligence that will permit a fine film subject, which has cost thousands of dollars, to be ruined artistically after being used for only twenty or thirty days. It is vital that a remedy shall be applied at once to offset this crying evil of dirty films, for the evil aims directly at the laudable ambition of the manufacturer to excel; and, at the same time, exercises a malignant influence on the minds of good people who are favorably disposed towards moving pictures.

The burden is strictly on the exchange; but if at present the exchange finds it impossible, owing to conditions, to meet the emergency, let the exhibitor jump in and perform the task as best he can, for his own profit and the upbuilding of the business.

THE EXHIBITING FIELD.

The average moving picture theater of the United States is by no means in keeping with the demands of the time. Structurally, the great majority of such houses are two years or more behind the progress of the moving picture. They are small, cheap-looking and uninviting. They have served their day. During 1911 quite a number of fine, modern structures have been erected for the exclusive use of moving pictures. They are the vanguard of the magnificent list that will follow.

It is gladly conceded that, while the home of the moving picture is still unworthy of it, the exhibitor has tried hard to overcome the effect of forbidding surroundings. He has aimed at having neatness, cleanliness and comfort in his house, and he has devoted much thought to giving his patrons a good picture. He has learned to look after his operating room, and he has busied himself with a study of screens, and of a lighting system that will not injure the picture. He is paying a good price for his service, and is careful in the selection of his programs. In fact, he is giving a better show to-day than he ever gave, and at a greater cost to himself. But he is not treating himself fairly. He is not charging what is due him for his show.

An admission price of five cents nowadays for such magnificent picture programs as are offered, not only deprives the exhibitor of reasonable profits, but hurts moving picture entertainment by making it cheap and common. And the small house is the great stumbling block.

Think of it! A house that changes daily, and shows three reels daily, offers during the week films that have cost in the aggregate, for production, from $40,000 to $60,000. And a patron can see every program at an aggregate cost of thirty-five cents! Just the cost of a gallery seat in a first-class theater, where the attraction offered may have cost any figure from $5,000 to $15,000!

Let us examine if exhibitors in other countries are so foolish as we are:

In England, where the picture theater will seat from 300 up to 1,000 people, the admissions are 12 and 24 cents. And the cent there has a higher purchasing value than it has here. For example, in Chicago the taxicab fare is 75 cents for the first mile and 50 cents for every additional mile. In London the rate per mile is 16 cents!

In Paris the prices of admission are 20, 40 and 60 cents, with loge standing places at 10 cents. In addition, 5 and 6 cents is charged for programs. These French theaters seat from 300 people up.

In Germany, in provincial towns and cities, the prices are 8, 12, 18 and 25 cents. In the capital cities the prices run as high as 48 cents.

Do these figures not show that the average American exhibitor is the most extravagant and unbusinesslike showman that was ever heard of? What one gets at a cheap price he holds as cheap.

Americans of means want surroundings that are congenial, and are willing to pay the price without haggling. Millions of them are barred from picture theaters now because of the discomforts of the small house. And millions of patrons of the small houses would be quite willing to pay 10 cents for the programs that now cost 5 cents.

The year of 1912, in the moving picture industry in America, could not be marked more decisively than by a general advance of the 5-cent admission to 10 cents.

The Moving Picture in the South.

By W. H.

HAVING just returned from a trip through the South, I feel inclined to say something of the moving picture industry in that locality. It is, indeed, a very significant factor, being the chief amusement in the small towns and an important attraction in the larger cities.

Two reels form the usual show of a five cent house in the cities, while a three-reel performance with a singer and good music is ten cents. A departure from this was found in Atlanta at the Vaudette, where a most extravagant program is presented for a nickle. It includes three photoplays, a singer or two, and a small orchestra. This is under the direction of the Vaudette Amusement Company, which controls several houses in Atlanta. In an interview with Manager A. C. Evins, of the Vaudette, he said: "We realize we offer an exceptional show for the money—a program for which we receive ten cents in other parts of the city. A trial with such a price here in the business section was not found popular. Therefore, we reduced the entrance to five cents and have been making money ever since. The house has a large seating capacity, while its standing capacity is taxed often during the evening. The Vaudette is attractive and commodious."

The Alamo, another pretty theater in Atlanta, uses a three-piece orchestra and several reels. This also claims capacity houses.

By the way, I found "Alamo" a popular name through the South for moving picture theaters. I recall the one just mentioned in Atlanta, there is one in New Orleans, another is in Gainesville, Ga., and still others are elsewhere. The memory of Texas's fight for freedom is well preserved in name at least.

There were many theaters in Atlanta I would like to have seen, managers I would have been pleased to have talked with, and exchanges I would have enjoyed visiting; but my stay was not long enough to permit of all this.

In Nacogdoches, Tex., a two-reel show costs five cents for children and ten cents for adults, and whenever an extra reel is offered the prices are raised to ten and fifteen cents. Remembering that there is little opportunity for matinee performances except on Saturday (as everyone is engaged with businest and household duties) the price is not high and is readily given. While in Nacogdoches, the championship baseball film was exhibited as a "special attraction," but it was very tamely received. The audience for the most part was bored to death and the manager, Joe Langston, was disappointed. Realizing the Mexican element in Texas, perhaps a bull fight would have pleased the patrons more.

The Lyric, the only moving picture theater in the town, has been instructing and amusing the people of Nacogdoches and vicinity for the past few years. Its genial manager finds it lucrative and the motley attendance is orderly. While not much to boast upon in decorations, as we know such theaters in the East, the Lyric serves its purposes. Being equipped with a stage and scenes, this is sometimes honored with legitimate dramatic shows.

I had a very pleasant talk with Mr. C. S. Van Wort, assistant manager of the General Film Company of New Orleans. As Manager J. E. Hennessy was out of town, I missed seeing him. The General Film Company's offices are large and gave evidence of much activity. Mr. Van Wort informed me that the motion picture business is very strong in the Crescent City, continuously increasing, with interests about divided between the Independents and the Licensed companies. Several of the houses use first runs. This office operates over a large territory around New Orleans, using the entire output of the manufacturers.

One of the progressive theaters in that city is the Dreamland, beautifully equipped, using first runs, and good music. During my short stay I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Geo. Krogh, Mr. C. Scully, and other managers. My regret was that I could not give more time to the theaters.

The Independent exchange of New Orleans is known as the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, with a commodious suite of rooms in the Maison Blanche. An interview with Manager A. G. Shear revealed the fact that the Independents have come in for a good share of the trade in the South and by uniting forces have been able to hold their own. The entire output is handled by this exchange, which covers a wide section.

An important factor in the South is the Fichtenberg Enterprises, using Independent material. The Dreamworld and the Alamo are under this company in the Crescent City, while other theaters are found in other large cities under the Fichtenberg control. While the two houses just mentioned are booked as ten cent shows, an entrance card gives patrons the privilege of a five cent admission during certain hours. The Alamo, under the personal management of Mr. Goodman is styled one of the aristocratic houses of New Orleans. With an exceptionally large seating capacity, three reels, two singers, and a three-piece orchestra, an excellent show is enjoyed. The music forms one of its special attractions.

The Selig company had just paid New Orleans a visit before my arrival and from what I gathered the company was somewhat disappointed in what was offered for filming. The producers wanted some river-front scenes. There was a time when the best illustrations of ship loading could be had at that port, but since the recent usurpation by railroads of the freight of the South and Central States, the Mississippi River and New Orleans have been the losers thereby.

I expected to find in the South the electric piano grinding out its airs in a monotonous way in the small towns, but I really saw no excuse for such form of music in the large cities. Especially was I surprised to be greeted with mechanical music in New Orleans—a city noted for its French grand opera, with this same grand opera house but a few blocks away. I realize that all communities must pass through this primative stage with the motion picture, and that the South is not as advanced in this enterprise as the North, but surely New Orleans should have risen above mechanical music in the heart of the city's activity and business wealth.

In Gainesville, Ga., where is located Brenau College Conservatory, one of the largest educational institutions for young ladies in the South, there are two moving picture houses—the Alamo and the Lyric. Here evening shows are presented for the amusement and edification of this town and a large part of the rural districts. The college itself is discussing using some pictures in its large auditorium this season.

On every side I heard a good word for the motion picture industry—its educational, amusement and social values were considered an aim in uniting and uplifting humanity. College professors and those engaged in high literary pursuits, business men and factory workers, parents and children all spoke well of this enterprise which now has become a significant factor in the world's progress. The commercial side is encouraging and consequently new managers are entering the field, with the result that very soon every little town will have its motion picture theater.

I received courteous treatment from everyone and my only regret was that my stay was not long enough to investigate more thoroughly this important field. Therefore, consider these remarks as hurried impressions, which some future visit will make more complete.

P. S.—As for the Moving Picture World, well, everybody knows it and all had a pleasant word for this journal and its helpful management.—W. H.

Chat With Scenario Writers

By the Kalem Scenario Editor.

WHEN the editor of the picture company's scenario department opens his daily mail he is greeted by many old friends. There is the man who received the blow on the head and, as a consequence, had his memory restored. There is the locket containing a picture, which is later the means of reuniting a scattered family. Then there is the automobile which breaks down; the poor but honest young man who finds the capitalist's purse; the rival lovers; the Mexican horse thief and the child stolen by Indians; to say nothing of the gypsy sweetheart, scorned by her lover's parents; the drunken husband who reforms and the popular hold-up artist.

The good-natured and care-free scenario editor, searching and hoping for an original idea, asks these friends to excuse him and politely sends them on their way. Five times out of ten the friend does not possess carfare and notice is therefore sent to his sponsor, requesting the wherewithal to assist this at-one-time-useful, but now much-abused person, to return.

When a new face appears the editor hails it with delight and asks the newcomer to kindly be seated until he can be given careful consideration. His tenancy of the sanctum may continue several days—possibly two weeks. If it is found that he possesses desirable qualifications, he is introduced to a director and frequently secures a job.

Then the editor answers the many requests for information regarding the proper manner of preparing a scenario. He tells the writer that Kalem does not print a circular of instructions; that the idea is the thing and it need only be submitted in brief, but comprehensive, synopsis form, if the writer is not familiar with the technique of scenario construction.

Kalem feels that the writer capable of originating a good idea for motion pictures is able to present it in the simple form necessary for production. While the scenario is preferable, it is not essential.

Someone has referred to the popular pastime of "scenarioizing" the Saturday Evening Post. This interesting publication is by no means the only one which furnishes ideas for the vigilant scenario writer. Well known dramas, as well as plots of former film releases, appear in scenarios with startling regularity. Writers should remember that plots taken from copyrighted books, plays, stories, etc., will usually be recognized and turned down. If they are not, and the manufacturer is unfortunate enough to produce the scenario, a severe penalty may be imposed by law. A recent finding of the courts establishes a precedent which will convict the manufacturer of infringement. A new and much needed law will some day enmesh the plagiarizing writer. When Kalem decides to accept a scenario from a writer with whom they have no acquaintance and there is any question regarding the origin of the plot, a thorough investigation is made.

There is a mistaken idea that crime is the basis of dramatic action. Murders and robberies, as well as cruelty and debauchery, are justly denounced by the Board of Censors. It requires skillful handling to even suggest criminal incidents and they are best omitted entirely. Kalem does not produce scenes of drinking, gambling or domestic infidelity.

The best instruction in scenario writing is a careful study of the pictures themselves. An ambitious writer of intelligence will see that the main characters are few in number and introduced in an early scene; that something immediately occurs to grasp attention and offer an insight into the characteristics of the people concerned; that a situation is not necessarily dramatic because it is true to life, but at the same time the most popular subjects are those taken from modern conditions, containing dramatic qualities. He will also see that it makes no difference whether "the birds are singing in the trees," etc. He should also remember that the patrons of picture theaters will stand for anything except dullness.

If a writer has a manuscript returned and shortly afterward the company releases a play similar to the scenario submitted, he should not accuse the manufacturer of theft until he has made a careful investigation. He will find that in most cases the production was made weeks, and sometimes months, before the particular script was read. Then again, the creations of your brain, strange as it may seem, may have occurred to someone else. Mark Twain has a humorous account of the author who was obliged to destroy a manuscript of "Little Women" when he found that Louisa May Alcott had published a book of the same character. The editor recalls having received in one week three scenarios on the same subject and with the same odd title. He purchased the first one and was careful to inform the other authors of the situation.

No matter how illiterate or poorly prepared a scenario may be, if the editor has waded through it—which he confesses is not often—and discovers a practical suggestion, he does not appropriate it and transplant the "piece of business" but pays the writer for the idea.

When you bear in mind that picture plays are not made in a day and that the cost of a single production oftentimes amounts to thousands and tens of thousands of dollars, you will see—if you are a sensible person—that the price paid for the scenario is a small item compared to the outlay for artists, wardrobe, transportation, locations, etc. With Kalem there is no set price for scenarios. The remuneration is contingent upon the merit of the manuscript.

Like every other manufacturer Kalem is deluged with a mass of unavailable material—repetitions of old ideas, obvious adaptations of copyrighted subjects, plots with neither rhyme nor reason and ideas whose dullness would drive the spectators from the theater. The amateur writer fails because he does not possess the picture eye. He should ask himself "How will this look upon the screen?" and he will then find that it is not flowery language but brief and concise specifications for original action that appeal to the manufacturer.

Too little consideration is given by writers to the producing policies of the film makers. As Kalem has five producing companies in different parts of the world, you will find they handle quite a diversity of subjects.

Kalem is always pleased to consider original ideas from intelligent people. We produce strong Western dramas (without Indians) featuring Miss Alice Joyce; Western comedies and dramas to feature Miss Ruth Roland and the cowboys; military subjects and plays adapted to the environments of our companies in the South; modern dramas and melodramas suitable for production in New York and elsewhere.

Before you send in your next scenario, which must be typewritten, let your mind travel to the firm who is to consider it, having informed yourself of that company's policies and assuring yourself that the subject is entirely original, dramatic and probable. If you do this you will find that the postman will bring you a check more frequently than he does a rejected manuscript.

HERE'S ALL THE RIGGINS.

Mr. J. W. Riggins writes the Moving Picture World from Waco, Texas, of the formation of the Riggins Investment and Promoting Co., which has just been formed for the purpose of promoting things. The officers of the company are J. W. Riggins, president; L. B. Riggins, vice-president and Pacific Coast manager; Paul W. Riggins, vice-president; Miss Robbia A. Riggins, secretary; Miss Jimmie G. Riggins, assistant secretary; Miss Eddie Mai Riggins, treasurer.

The Riggins Company is arranging to establish a film exchange business with a paid-up capital of $50,000, to operate in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana. Special attention will be given to feature films, for which there is said to be a demand in that territory. Other good, new and commercial pictures will be handled. General supplies for picture theaters will also be dealt in. Headquarters of the new company will be at Waco, Texas.

Mr. J. W. Riggins, the president, will be remembered by the trade as president of the J. D. Wheelan Film Company, of Dallas and Houston, Texas.

BUFFALO JONES FILLS CARNEGIE HALL.

Well Known Western Naturalist Attracts Many Notables to Thrilling Lecture.

On the evening of Friday, December 22, on the eve of Christmas, which is considered one of the worst nights in the year for attracting an audience, Buffalo Jones filled the immensity of Carnegie Hall and had the auditors holding onto their seats with his stirring discourse. The skillful feats of lassoing wild animals in Africa were shown by moving pictures to a highly representative gathering of New York's best people. To fill Carnegie Hall is no easy matter at any time, but to draw a full attendance two nights before Christmas is almost a miracle. The lecture ended in an ovation. Among those present were Melville E. Stone, president of the Associated Press; the Guggenheim Brothers, and General Nelson A. Miles, who came all the way from Washington to hear the lecture. He wrote Col. Jones a letter of congratulation, stating that every true American should be proud of such a man and such an accomplishment by an American.

Will Present Big Productions.

Great Northern Special Feature Film Company Organized To Promote the Greater Photodrama—Notable Examples Now Ready.

A NEW company has just been formed to meet the rapidly developing demand for the more pretentious picture play or photodrama, as it has been aptly termed. The title of the company is The Great Northern Special Feature Film Company and its offices will be located at No. 1 Union Square, New York, in rooms about to be vacated by the New York Motion Picture Company.

As is indicated by the title this company will handle the features of the Great Northern Film Company, but will also arrange to take on the product of several European manufacturers, negotiations for which are now pending. Only subjects of two or more reels in length will be handled. The plan of action contemplates securing representatives in several localities throughout the country who will operate on the State, or territorial rights plan, dealing direct with the exhibitor, and exclusive exhibition rights will be guaranteed. Further details will be announced by the company as soon as it is ready for business, which will be during the coming week.

All Pictures Copyrighted and Censored.

Every possible protection for exhibitors and renters will be procured. In the first place every picture will be fully protected by copyright. The copyright law has stood the test and has proved an adequate protection against the duper and the otherwise illegal renter of pictures properly protected thereby. The new company, anticipating attempts to pirate its productions, is fully prepared to prosecute any activities along those lines. In all cases all rights in a picture to be handled by the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company will be acquired by that company, so that copies other than those offered for sale by it will be subject to confiscation on sight.

That all subjects shall be suitable for exhibition in the most exacting community and that they may pass the most rigid inspection by local censors, every picture offered by the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company will be submitted to the National Board of Censorship and only such pictures as pass the inspection of that board will be put on the market.

Exceptional Pictures.

Thus far the subjects selected for distribution by the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company are of a most unusual character. They are the product of the Great Northern Film Company, and their like has not been seen before in America. Here we have plenty of single reel dramatic subjects and, now and then, a dramatization of some well known book or play in two and three reels. But the American film manufacturer has not attempted a specially written three reel picture play, or photodrama. Even in Europe the Great Northern Film Company seems to have taken the lead in productions of this magnitude and phenomenal runs are being reported from European centers on these pictures. For one of these big productions to run four weeks is not unusual; in fact, it is the usual length of time for which they are booked, and authorities have begun to look upon the three reel picture drama as the coming form of pictural play.

The first announcement of the new company will include four three reel pictures by the Great Northern Company under the following titles: "A Victim of the Mormons," "A Nihilist Conspiracy," "The Call of the Woman," and "Love's Victory."

As examples of photography it would be difficult to find a group of pictures, or even a single picture, so uniformly good through its entire length. Great Northern photography is so well known as to need no praise here and it is no exaggeration to say that that company could afford to stake its reputation on any one of the subjects named. Likewise are there excellent effects in staging and scenic accessories that challenge admiration.

All Star Cast.

Of the players—and almost every picture has a different cast—much might be said, but it is enough to observe that they are all stars of the Royal Theater of Copenhagen. This is not easily understood, for the average American has little knowledge of European artists of the stage. Probably it will be clearer when we say that the players in Great Northern pictures occupy the same relative place in the theatrical world of the Continent as do John Drew, Maude Adams, William H. Crane, Ethel Barrymore and the other headliners do to the American stage. It could not be otherwise, for none but experienced actors and actresses could sustain interest in a dramatic role through three reels of film.

In pictures of this character the work of the actor counts for more. While a certain degree of talent is required to depict the stronger scenes of the photoplay, talent of an infinitely greater character is required to bridge over the interim usually covered by a title in the single reel subject and hold the interest throughout. Here it is that the experience and ability of the Great Northern stars tell; at no point in the story does interest lag, though that story is extended over three reels—nearly 3,000 feet of film. In a picture of this length it might be supposed that interest would lag and parts would be dull, but such is not the case. Rather, the extended picture makes possible a more connected and logical narration of the story; there is an agreeable absence of uninteresting titles which tend to disconcert rather than elucidate.

Brief Synopses of Subjects.

Just a word about the pictures: "A Victim of the Mormons" (3 reels), essays to depict the activities of the Mormon missionaries in foreign lands, where they carry on the work of securing converts to polygamy among the women. The Mormon preacher is shown working among the people and converting a young woman to his faith. He induces her to accompany him to Utah, but when she is about to embark she regrets her action and attempts to escape, only to discover that she is hopelessly caught in the toils. Her adventures from the time she leaves her home till she reaches Utah and the home of the missionary, are filled with incidents of a thrilling nature. Eventually she is traced to Utah by her brother and fiance, who follow and rescue her from the clutches of the Mormons. Splendid acting characterizes this picture throughout and many of the scenes are of rare beauty. Uniformly good photography marks it as a picture above the average.

Scene from "A Victim of the Mormons" (Great Northern).

Scene from "The Call of a Woman" (Great Northern).

"The Call of a Woman" (3 reels), presents a beautiful story of constancy and self-sacrifice in a woman; also, that in the poorest and most sodden of men, there is a possible latent spark of manhood. A school teacher, annoyed by some loafers, is protected by one of the number who accompanies her home. Believing that the poor fellow has some good in him she takes an interest in his welfare and teaches him to read and write. Propinquity develops a tender feeling and the teacher and her protégé, now a true man, are married, and are very happy. Then there is a period of misfortune. Prostrated by the heat, the man loses his reasoning powers and reverts to his former life of an outcast. Despairing of his reformation, his wife becomes a hospital nurse. Time heals the sick brain of the man and he is able to write a prize winning story, which raises him to affluence. Learning of his prosperity, his faithful wife hunts him up, but he does not remember her, and orders her out of the house. A little later we see him receiving the adulation of his admirers at a banquet; but, when he rises to respond to a toast, he is suddenly stricken and has to be restrained and taken to a hospital for treatment. Upon recovering from this attack the man is again in his right mind and there is an affectionate meeting between husband and wife. The story is carried through the three reels in a manner that cannot fail to interest. As each incident unfolds that interest deepens; the sympathy is aroused, and throughout the onlooker is ever charmed by the grace of portrayal.

"A Nihilist Conspiracy" (3 reels), has a very interesting plot and is full of thrills. A young count in love with a beautiful young woman, happens upon a secret engagement which excites his curiosity. He follows the girl and finds himself in the rendezvous of the conspirators, who threaten him with death if he does not secure for them a list of suspected persons known to be in the hands of the Secret Service authorities. The count seems unable to accomplish the task, but his girl comes to the rescue and, by a clever ruse, gets the list from the chief of the service. Discovering his loss the chief sends his detective out to capture the girl and recover the list. The final scene is a wild automobile chase, in which the lovers, seeking to elude the detectives, seem to meet death in an awful plunge over an embankment. The effect is startling and a fitting finish to a subject that is replete with intense situations.

Scene from "The Nihilist Conspiracy" (Great Northern).

"Love's Victory" (3 reels), is a charming love story and one that might fit many experiences with Dan Cupid. The girl has a cruel disappointment, but she wins eventually, which affords a happy ending to a very well told and pretty love yarn. Here again, beautiful scenic effects and skilled acting lend a charm to a subject that might otherwise be dismissed in one reel.

Space will not permit further reference at this time to a movement that is calculated to revolutionize the making and exhibition of pictures. Indications are that the three reel photodrama will be strong enough to beat down all opposition and take its place at the head of picture productions.

"THE IMP CALIFORNIA COMPANY."

The Imp Films Company's Californian party departed for Los Angeles on Saturday, December 30. The director in charge is Francis J. Grandon and the company includes Margarita Fischer, Harry Pollard, Ed. Lyons and E. J. Le Saint.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

FOUR HUNDRED people attended the Cinderella party given by Wm. N. Selig and Thomas Nash, on New Year's evening, at the Selig studios. The guest of honor, who was prevented from attending by professional engagements, was Mabel Taliaferro.

The guests began to arrive about 7 o'clock in the evening, and at 8 o'clock, in the great studio on the third floor of the new building, "Cinderella," Selig's great three reel subject, was run off. Rounds of applause marked the closing scene in each reel and compliments were showered on Mr. Selig.

After the pictures, the party was treated to several impromptu and highly entertaining numbers not down on the program. The first of these was a song by Miss Myrtle Stedman, one of the leading ladies of the Eastern companies and an accomplished vocalist. Next came the surprise of the evening, when O. B. Thayer, William Mong, Stanley Twist, Eddie Kull, Misses Kathlyn Williams, Adrianne Kroell and Lillian Leighton appeared in a satirical farce that kept the audience in a roar. With the exception of Mr. Twist, who has charge of the Selig publicity department, those mentioned are members of Selig's several companies in the East.

The theme of the satire was a busy day in the Selig office and studio, Mr. Thayer being manager of the engaging office. Mr. Mong was general roustabout of the office; Mr. Twist impersonated Emmet, a former Selig camera man, just arrived from South America; Miss Williams represented the leading woman, who arrives at the studio about 11 o'clock every morning. Miss Leighton was a soubrette looking for a job, and Miss Kroell impersonated that terror of engaging managers—the woman who can do nearly everything that does not concern pictures, and nothing at all that does.

A rapid fire of pointed talk by Messrs. Thayer, Mong and Twist, in which humorous or satirical reference was made to well known people in Chicago film circles, was received with great laughter. After the farce, Miss Kroell sang a solo in fine voice.

The floor was then cleared for dancing. Supper was served at 10 o'clock, after which dancing was resumed until midnight.

The guests were from far and near. All the Selig employees, both in the plant and city office, were present, and all the members of Selig's Eastern companies, now in the city. Some were from Denver, Los Angeles, New York and Cleveland.

The following were recognized among the guests: Mr. and Mrs. George Kleine, Mrs. Wm. N. Selig, Mrs. A. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Ramp, Mr. and Mrs. W. Norwell, Mrs. J. P. Hurley, Mrs. A. Austin, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Klais, Mr. and Mrs. Mock, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Daniels, Mr. and Mrs. H. Gittus Lonsdale, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Hawley, Mr. and Mrs. George Denniston, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Byron, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Lee, Los Angeles; Dr. Fielding H. Thacher, New York; Mr. and Mrs. James Le Boutillier, Dr. and Mrs. W. Sheppard, Miss Elizabeth Cowan, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Toomey, New York; Miss Alice Drake, Miss Ada Henry, Miss Bettie Chade, Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Ewell, Miss Gertrude Cromwell, Mrs. Anna M. Miller and Mr. Woodruff.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The Parkway Theater, on North Clark Street near Diversey boulevard, formerly playing vaudeville exclusively, has turned to pictures. The house opened with the new program on New Year's Day, running Selig's feature film "Cinderella." The house, which was built for vaudeville, is the third largest house in Chicago originally built for that purpose, was packed to the doors, and long lines stood outside waiting their turns. A high class service has been contracted for with the General Film Company's branch at 17 S. Wabash Ave.

F. W. Parsons, owner and manager of the X-Ray picture theater, in Lincoln, Ill., was a caller at The World office last week. Patrons of the house selected its odd name. It was built about a year ago and seats 300 people. Independent service, furnished by manager Plough of the Anti-Trust Film Exchange, Chicago, is used. Two reels are used daily, with daily change. Mr. Parsons stated that he was playing to capacity business. He also owns the Lyric in Delevan, Ill. This house was opened last Thanksgiving. It seats 200 people and Licensed service, furnished by the General Film Company's branch, at 429 S. Wabash Avenue, is used. Mr. Parsons reports good business at this house also. "Frontier Days at Cheyenne" has proved a big winner for Mr. Parsons, who purchased the State rights.

All the employees of the American Film Mfg. Company, except the members of the Western Company, were entertained at a banquet at the Mission Tea Room, 4046 Sheridan Road, one day last week. Full account of the affair appears elsewhere in this issue.

A handsome panel calendar for 1912 has been published by the American Film Mfg. Company and sent to all Independent exchanges. Cuts of the principals of the Western company appear in a square inset, at the top of the calendar, the effect being very artistic.

McGOVERN GOES TO POWERS.

The Powers Motion Picture Company has secured the services of Albert McGovern, for two years director of the Lubin Company. It is during these two years that the Lubin product has come forward to such a notable extent, and to Mr. McGovern's association with the concern must be attributed a portion of that success. Mr. McGovern was for a long time popular over the country as a successful film actor, but he was of greatest value as a director of high-class plays of modern life. In his activities at the Powers Duplex Studio Mr. McGovern is fortunate to come in under Mr. Powers' new policy, which in the course of time will make his productions second to none, he says. The new director goes to work with the co-operation of a staff which has been a long time gathering and there is every good reason to believe why he should make good for himself and Powers picture plays to a noteworthy degree.

Mr. Albert McGovern, New Director with the Powers Stock Company.

WATCH READY OF NASHVILLE.

Among our visitors last week was W. P. Ready, the pictureman of Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Ready is building a palatial photoplay house in the heart of Nashville; it will seat 1,500 persons and be a model when finished. Watch the World for the story of the opening.

Bison's New Home.

Establishes Offices and Factory on West 19th Street—Model Equipment Installed in Modern Fireproof Building.

BISON, or the New York Motion Picture Company, which has maintained business offices in the Lincoln Building, No. 1 Union Square, New York, for some time, and a factory elsewhere, has leased the entire second floor of the modern business building at 251 West 19th St. Here, under the direction of the factory manager, Mr. Willat, has been installed a model factory equipment capable of producing many thousand feet of completed pictures daily. A battery of the latest model Bell & Howell perforators and printers have been running without intermission since setting up, and a busy force of operatives have had their hands full taking care of the product on its way through the developing and the finishing processes.

The area occupied is about 10,000 square feet, well lighted by full plate-glass windows in front and an open court in the rear. About three-fourths of this space is devoted to the manufacturing department. The rest—two offices and an ample space surrounding the elevator entrance—will be devoted to office uses, providing sufficient room for the purpose. The business offices are separated by wood and glass partitions finished in mahogany. Fireproof partitions separate the various manufacturing departments. In the drying room, three large, motor-driven reels provide rapid drying facilities. This, and other departments, are connected with a mechanical ventilating system which effects a complete change of air every few minutes. The air first passes through a system of filters and is then forced into the several rooms at a considerable pressure.

An exhibition room, about ten by twenty feet in dimensions, equipped with a Simplex projecting machine, provides comfortable facilities for the examination of pictures. There is also ample space reserved for the joining, burnishing and shipping departments. Altogether, the Bison people will have as complete and convenient a plant as could be desired.

It is expected that all departments of the Bison company will be snugly installed in their new home by the time this issue of the Moving Picture World reaches its readers.

MAE HOTELY.

When in the Lubin photoplays you see a comedy old woman, a shrew or a suffragette, that is Mae Hotely, the star character actress of the Lubin stock company. Miss Hotely is a French woman born in Paris. Educated at the convent of Notre Dame, and now by adoption a thorough American; as an actress she favored stock work in which she acquired wide experience. She is a clever horsewoman and fond of out-of-door sports.

Modern Melodrama

Strong Characterization and Brutal Frankness Mark the Photoplays Which Win Favor from the Audiences.

By C. H. Claudy.

One expects melodrama on the screen. The public likes it, theater managers tell me, and a good melodramatic headliner by a popular company seldom fails to get a full house. Good plots well enacted, will continue to add to the patronage of the silent playhouse, but what a tremendous difference it makes in the results if the plot be good or poor, even if the same capable company be employed. Fine companies and stars have "got by" on the speaking stage with poor plays and will again, but, deprived of color, of the personal element to an extent, and of speech, it seems that a poor vehicle is too great a handicap for even the best of motion picture actresses and actors to cope against.

To particularize, I have seldom seen a more poorly put together plot than "Through Darkened Vales," a recent Biograph release. In my opinion it is a libel on physicians for one of them to be shown as refusing to perform a sight-giving operation because the patient has no money. It is a travesty on surgery to show a higly expensive operation performed in five minutes, with no nursing afterwards. Another unnecessary complication of the plot is where the poor clerk also becomes blind (curious coincidence) after having given up his life's savings to pay for the operation on the girl who scorned him. Other elements in this plot strengthen its weakness, yet the company is the Biograph Company, and the hero and the heroine the same who star in no uncertain manner in

"The Battle."

I take off my hat cheerfully and with it sweep the ground to the Biograph management, the producer and the actors engaged in this, the best battle picture of Civil War times I have ever seen. The general impression is one of force and sincerity, and any photoplay that makes the cold chills chase up and down the back of the supposedly fishy-hearted critic and evokes cheers from the audience, has certainly something in it to touch the primal emotions.

The plot is old, and some of the scenes are stagey. That is undeniable. We have had "boys" who turned coward at the first flash of a gun and hid, girls who scorned them into bravery and the doing of an heroic deed, before now—and will again. We have also had soldiers and battles, time and time and again, but, if exception be made of a foreign film or two, there has not been recently any such creditable effort to make a battle scene which looked like a battle scene as this.

In the first of the play we are shown a pre-battle dance. I take it the producer knew what he was about, yet it does seem as if there was a wee bit too much hoydenish action and undignified jumping around for the formal dances one associates with the days of '61. But there was nothing to criticise in the departure—the long, long lines of soldiers marching down the road, the waving cheering townspeople, the crowd of children, the cavalry coming after—indeed, the film was shut off and the scene changed while they were still coming. It may have been that the film was cut here, but its effect was most artistic. "We haven't time to show you the whole army" it seemed to say for the producer, "we have to get to business. But the army is there, as you will see."

And we did see.

They burned plenty of powder, and used white smoke bombs with a royal disregard of expense, while doing all this, the young hero-to-be gets terrorized at the sight of battle and hides—choosing his sweetheart's room. The battle takes place near her home. And right there the little lady who played the sweetheart (the same one, I believe, who was so miraculously blinded and restored in the other film) gave evidence that either she, or the director for her, had brains. Did she weep, did she sympathize with this pitiful bundle of frightened humanity who had once been a man? She did not. She looked surprised, and then she laughed loud and long and heartily—half hysterically, half scornfully. And then her laughter left her and left her mad and she flew at that thing she had loved and called a man and tore at it and beat it, and ordered it from her presence; as well done a bit of acting in a very old and hackneyed situation as I have seen in many a day. I shall look for this young lady in the very next Biograph picture and find out for myself whether there is more originality like this beneath her pretty face.

Well! As you know by this time, the coward turned hero. But he did not merely wave a sword and cheer his men to victory, but went on a daring expedition after powder—started back with several wagons full, had to have them driven over fires lighted on the road by the enemy and lost them all but one by explosion—which was very well done, and finally drives the remaining wagon, smoking but safe, within his own lines. And then the silent guns speak again, there is a charge of the breastworks, a repulse and a waving of the flag, lots of smoke and running figures, and I for one felt as if I really had been taken back for a moment or two to those stirring times that made and unmade men in a twinkling. Hurrah for Biograph!

I haven't the heart to say much in criticism. A military man who was with me when I saw it made the suggestion that there was a little too much exposure of men behind the trenches, who of course knew they couldn't really get hit. The ending of the drama was a little more theatrical than is strictly natural. Mistakes will happen, and little things sometimes be overlooked. But the whole thing was big—big with the bigness of the conflict it was taken from, a liberal education to see, a triumph for the company producing it, a fine example of acting on the girl's part and a sterling exhibition on the "boy" officer's part and, once more—Hurrah for Biograph.

I have seen, to my sorrow,

"In the Grip of Alcohol."

I don't like such things. I don't believe the motion picture playhouse the place to see gruesome, heartbreaking tragedies. I wouldn't want my little boy to look at that set of films. But, that it teaches a terrible lesson, and may perhaps be a terrific force for good, I am not prepared to deny. It is sordid, disagreeable, and one is inclined to let the feeling of disgust and rising gorge make one forget to mention a finished piece of acting. The man who goes from respectability to delirium tremens carries out a hard part most wonderfully in both acting and make-up. The woman, his wife, is tragedy herself without a particle of staginess and the whole is a wonderful portrayal of a bitter-root theme. It can hardly be popular, but it is a C. P. G. C. film which will make a reputation.

I turned to Selig's

"Blackbeard"

in the hope of something lighter in vein. Behold, a piece of brutality as terrible in its way as the alcoholic one just seen. But "Blackbeard" is also well done—is full of action, and if it is brutal and a picture of strength and manhood gone wrong, why, I dare say, it is a fithful picture of piratical times. There is no denying the fact that many a producer, in a desire to spare his cast or his audience, pictures fights which are gentle, and brutes who are merciful. But not this Selig director. "Blackbeard" is a pirate, he acts like a pirate, his fellows act like cut-throats and they handle their prisoners as if they were pirates. There were bruised arms in the cast that night, I am sure! I doubt that pirates would suffocate women, however—not that they would be merciful, but that they would rather keep them alive. However, that could hardly be shown, could it? And I doubt very much that three pirates, swinging at the yard arm, when virtue triumphs and the pirates are overtaken and mastered, is as brutalizing as it sounds—one is so glad to see them get what is coming to them, that one forgives the terror of the hanged man—and those three swinging figures show but for an instant. It is well done, and deserves attention—only, Selig, why pick out brutal things to write picture plays about?

Now, you did something in your

"New Superintendent"

that you couldn't spoil even with a foolish kink to the plot. Your new superintendent looks all of a man; his fist fight with the bully was "bully," and your burning oil tanks were a fine background for the play. Of course, you could have had the new superintendent come into the play much more naturally than you did—factory owners don't pick up friends and place them in big jobs like that without experience, just because such friends ask for jobs, and your superseded superintendent was a little too much of a caricature to carry conviction. But the winning of the respect of those workmen by that fight, by the bravery the new man displayed and the fact that the fire was a real fire, and the fight, as far as could be seen, a really and truly fight, with no blows carefully hit under the other fellow's arm, would redeem a much worse plot than this one. If we must have fights and battles and murders and hangings, by all means let us have them look real—and that is why I have to hand it to Biograph, Selig and C. P. G. C. for these three dramatic films—the elemental conflict of human passions is not marred by an apparent physical gentleness which stamps

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

FROM J. C. Rathbone, resident manager of the Exeter (N. H.) Opera House, operated by the Goldstein Brothers Amusement Co., comes an interesting collection of advertising matter, most of it decidedly good even where no account is to be taken of the conditions under which it was produced. Mr. Rathbone writes:

> I find your department a valuable and live addition to the Moving Picture World and hope the same may be continued. The enclosed program-dodgers are not models by any means. They are simply examples of what may be done in a hurry. Poor as they are they have put one bad business on a paying basis. We have no daily paper here, so that the flyer is about our only means of exploitation. Our films get in about 11 a. m. Copy must be in by one to insure any kind of a job. Two hours is a short time for me to read up on the subjects, going through four or five months accumulated bulletins, dope out a program and at the same time make it attractive and artistic. The World is always first aid and last aid as well. A brief synopsis of subjects is far more useful than a long criticism. New ideas that your column suggests are always welcome, as lightning won't strike more than a half-dozen times in the same place. Repetition sometimes gives force, but in films and dodgers it gets fierce.

This department is designed to appeal to just such men as Mr. Rathbone, live wires who are always looking for hints. The interchange of the ideas of the adepts is not only useful to themselves, but it helps to set in line the newcomers who are timid about undertaking an advertising campaign, but who may be helped to greater prosperity through the example and success of others. Intelligent advertising is the most certain cure for bad business and it is a mighty lucky house that connot be helped.

Taking Care of Bulletins.

Since this paper, in its Stories of the Films, gives the synopsis of all the releases, the bulletins are useful only because of the large cuts most of them carry. In an earlier issue a card system was recommended as the best way of keeping track of material, but where this is not followed a simpler, if not quite as convenient, scheme may be put into use.

Get a cheap invoice or scrap book and into this paste about every third week the Calendar of Releases printed weekly. This gives the films for four or five weeks back and by pasting into the scrap book in regular order the release date of any film may be ascertained with small delay. Do not paste in the entire sheet, but give several pages to each of the companies. If you have a hundred-page book give the first ten pages to the Biograph, for example, the next ten to Edison, the third to Essanay and so on. By pasting the section of the calendar into its proper place you soon have a running record of all releases.

When your films come in and you know the titles and makers, turn to your lists of those makers and back up until you find the title. Note the date and look up the date in the World of a week or two before. This is not as complete as the card system, but it will answer.

As your bulletins come in, file them by dates and you can quickly turn to the manufacturer's bulletin desired, instead of having to look through the entire collection. The bulletin may be filed on paper hooks or long nails driven into the wall at an angle, after which their heads are cut off and the end filed to a point. Book bulletins should be filed by punching holes near the back and running cords through. Where minutes count, this system will save hours in the course of the year.

Some of the Advertising.

The samples submitted vary in form and style, though last Spring there appears to have been a run on a four-page folder with pages about 5 x 6¼ inches. The front carried the name of the house and the line, "The home of good things in the picture line," in well-displayed type. There was a stock cut that might have been improved upon, possibly by the use of a trade mark cut of some sort possessed of individuality. The back page was given over to things to come. This outside form can be printed up ahead, leaving only the inside pages to be rushed through the press.

The sheet is distinctive and if it had been printed upon some distinctive color of paper, the size and color would advertise the house even before the type could be read. With the back page for argument and general booming, such a program serves a double purpose.

The reading matter is well worded and the offering made to sound attractive and inviting. One of the back-page arguments is novel and may serve others with adaptation to local conditions. It reads:

CAN YOU BEAT IT?

A young man noted for foresight and common sense, and who will no doubt some day be a Bank President, has solved the problem of the High Cost of Living.

We submit his figures and invite your inspection.

Some Other Catchlines.

Here is another good argument in the days of high cost of living. He asks: "Did you ever stop to think that the price of everything has gone up except your entertainment? That still remains one price, 10 cents, and today we are giving better quality and quantity than ever before."

That's a telling point that is backed up by facts. In another circular it is announced that Holy Week "will be observed by a marked elimination of the frivolous, the motion picture exhibit being of a strong elevating and educational nature." "Seven good reasons" for attending the performance are found in the titles of as many photoplays, and "Today's one best bet" is a "Film d'Knockout" by the Biograph. The Edison "Aida" was lavishly boomed and a Vitagraph night is advertised on an envelope which covers a souvenir card portrait of Miss Florence Turner.

For Thanksgiving two turkeys were provided, one of these being given Thanksgiving Eve and the other at the Thanksgiving matinee. From Monday onward duplicate numbered checks were issued and these numbers were drawn from at the performances named. As the winner was required to be in the house at the drawing, good business on a bad night was assured.

Exeter is no metropolis and you have to drag your audience in, but if you can interest your clientele in your advertising you've got them interested in your pictures. A line with a pull in it is better than a page of drivel, and while several of the companies now offer real aid to the alert manager, it is not well to trust entirely to what the manufacturer offers. Do it yourself and you'll have it done right.

A Program-Magazine.

To show that the Mission has no monopoly of hustle in Salt Lake City, the Liberty sends in its program-magazine. The house makes a change of program on Monday and Thursday and in a clean-looking little publication offers the stories of all the films to be run and some miscellaneous matter. It carries advertising matter to more than cover the cost and devotes the two middle pages to advertising some coming attraction.

The weakest point is found in the front page. A drawn design would more than pay for itself in the improvement in the appearance, but even without a special sketch the front could be bettered. A half-tone, with an excess of black background set in the center of the page divides it into thirds and gives it the appearance of an inside advertising page. A larger cut of the name of the theater should be made to cross the page where it now occupies but half the space; the following line, "The Motion Picture Palace," should be run below and a date line and volume and serial number to be used the same as in weekly publications. The cut should be thrown to the inside or a lighter border provided and the display in general should be made more nearly to resemble a popular priced publication.

The theater uses two styles of script for the title, though it has a good device title in that form of script in which the continuation of the "L" forms the tail of the "y." This should be used wherever the name of the theater appears. Some effect of display might be gained by setting the casts, where they are used, in six point, to gain contrast and the printer should be given instructions to set the heads in uniform style with the titles in capitals and the underline in upper and lower case. Most of the companies will furnish half-inch trade-mark cuts at cost and these can be used with much the effect of an initial by setting them into the first few lines of text.

No letter accompanies the sample, but we gather that it is the first issue that was sent. It's a good start and should work into a valuable weekly aid to business. Of all the forms of advertising the story of the film and the portraits of the players are the most permanent.

Thought He Saw It First.

Mr. H. L. Langdon, of the Scenic Theater, Ironton, Ohio, a part of the Lyric Theater Circuit of Charlestown, West Virginia, writes:

> Like most all M. P. men, I am a constant reader of the Moving Picture World, and I cannot say enough good for it, for I certainly get a great many ideas from your department and also from the projection department. I see that Brother Chaney has a self-supporting program. I thought I was the first, but I guess I am not. I put mine out over the town three times a week. They prove to be a good ad for me and the advertisers are pleased. A little later I intend to get up a more elaborate publication, but got out this cheap one to see how the scheme would work. I shall be glad to send a copy to any exhibitor who will send return postage. Success and lots of it to The World.

The program is printed on good news paper, four pages, each twelve inches square, with a four-inch column. It is all rapid press work, but clean of its kind and not unattractive. It is business-like in its appearance, the extra advertising is well set and an advertisement here stands a better chance of getting into the home and staying there than would the individual advertising of each merchant. This is one of the best talking points for the advertising solicitor. It saves money for all concerned.

The Scenic makes three changes and three of the pages carry the stories of a program apiece, the back page being given over to features to come and chat of the week's bill. The publication is not pretentious, but it is a start toward better things and a capital means of getting something of the sort started. Exhibitors who desire a copy should address H. L. Langdon, Scenic Theater, Ironton, Ohio, and enclose a stamp. Don t paste it to your letterhead, but wrap it in a bit of oiled paper and clip it to the sheet. And in writing thank Brother Langdon for his courtesy. It's only a line, but when a chap is going out of his way to be nice show that you appreciate his aid.

And we do not believe that Mr. Chaney ever claimed to have the first self-supporting program. We featured it because it was the best small program we had found (and it still is), but there are many others who have used this form for a year or more.

Some Class Here.

Murphy and Davis, who have the opera house at Mt. Sterling, Ill., appear to have advanced ideas on advertising. Barring a fondness for Old English type, they show some good things in a couple of recent issues. They use four and eight-page booklets, 3⅓ x 6 inches, on high-grade paper and careful press work. They do not overload their front page with useless matter, but gain their effect through the quiet elegance of the work. The samples sent might have come from some ultra fashionable stationer.

The eight-page folder for "Colleen Bawn" is done in green ink, announcing that "The Kalem Company Presents the 'Colleen Bawn' in Motion Pictures." The presentation line is in ten point, the title in twenty-four point and the last three words in eight point, a nice balance of values.

The first inside page is devoted to a sketch of the history of the play, the second relates to the making of the picture and in order come the cast, an excerpt from this paper, an advertisement of "The Two Orphans" and an undated announcement of other big features. The text is on a par with the appearance of the booklet (which is wire stitched) and in its completeness is as good a bit of high-grade advertising in all points as we have seen in a long time.

The Christmas program is announced in a four-page folder with a sprig of holly clipped to the sheet with a wire paper clip. The first page gives the title of the house, the line "Christmas Day Program," and the scale of prices. The third and fourth pages are devoted to the three reels which form the program and the second page contains this announcement:

> Especially for Christmas, we have procured a program of uncommon merit and one which we believe cannot fail to please everybody. We have also arranged for the added feature of a matinee at 3.30 Christmas afternoon, besides two shows beginning at 7.30 and 8.30 in the evening. The matinee program includes the same three pictures which will be shown at night—"Auld Lang Syne" (Vitagraph), "The Battle" (Biograph), and "A Modern Cinderella" (Edison). This combination of subjects gives the heart throb of sentiment, the thrill of patriotism, and the laugh of comedy. It will help you to spend a merry Christmas and an enjoyable holiday. Matinee admission, 5 and 10 cents; evening, 10 and 15 cents. With the season's good wishes,

> OPERA HOUSE PHOTOSHOW.

Mt. Sterling doesn't appear to be a very large place, but it is using "big town stuff."

Something New in Contests.

The popularity contest has been done before, but the Unique Theater, Grand Forks, N. D., offers something new in this line, as this paragraph proves:

> Manager S. S. Baldwin, who has taken the Unique Theater, will on Monday, December 11, start a voting contest which promises to create a sensation in Grand Forks. Manager Baldwin will take a moving picture film of the city of Grand Forks to be shown at the Unique Theater and exhibited throughout the State, also the film will be exhibited in the middle and eastern States. In addition to showing the principal streets, mercantile establishments, churches, schools, fraternal buildings, industrial plants, railway depots and yards, public buildings and miscellaneous points of interest, individual prominent persons deserving special recognition will be photographed.
> To avoid showing any partialty in the selection of those who are entitled to distinction at home and abroad, the management of the Unique will allow its patrons to say who the favored ones shall be. Three ladies will figure prominently in the moving picture, also three gentlemen. Of course, the pictures taken on the streets will photograph a large number of people, yet this only carries out a part of the picture as designed by Col. Baldwin.
> Every person purchasing a ticket will be given a blank slip of paper with space for six names, three ladies and three gentlemen; the patron has the privilege to write six names of those whom they wish to confer the honor of representing Grand Forks in the moving picture.
> They must not duplicate the names on the slip and the names must represent the best type of womanhood in Grand Forks. A person can vote every time they attend the Unique.

The only condition is that the names shall represent one each from the social and educational or commercial element, while the third choice of each sex is not confined to any particular class.

Playing Up Personality.

The standing of the contestants will be thrown on the screen at each performance and it is probable that the papers will be interested in the idea; indeed, the circular sent suggests that the type was "lifted" from some paper since it is column width, which does not balance with the size of the sheet used.

But this is a case where the appearance of the sheet does not count. The scheme itself will hold attention, for nothing could appeal more strongly to local pride than the filming of familiar views and leading citizens. It's safe to say that half the population will ring in on the picture somewhere, and interest in the nominees will run high. We hope that Manager Baldwin will report results for the benefit of others.

Booming "John Bond."

The Star Theater, Hamilton, Ohio, sends a number of vest pocket programs for the week with some good catchlines. Some issues of the daily papers show that they are making the fullest use of "The Awakening of John Bond," with a double column article on the Edison feature and the announcement that a local physician will lecture the film. There is a special editorial article and preliminary booming in the programs. One advertisement carries the catchy line. "Children, bring your parents," and there is a lot of truth in the semi-facetious phrase.

The exhibitor who gets a release like "John Bond" or any other feature and who runs it as a regular release without any extra advertising is cheating himself, and advertising does not merely mean a larger ad and some special circulars. It's special schemes that count. Get the local doctors or the Medical Society interested, take it into the churches and the schools. Play it up strong and keep it going and you'll get an extra trade that will last. Make a noise, but make the right sort of noise; don't merely shout; shout something worth listening to.

A NEW LUBIN LEADING LADY.

Miss Helen Marten, better known in the professional world as "The Gibson Girl," is the latest addition to the Lubin Stock Company, and hereafter will be seen playing comedy and ingenue leads, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Hotaling.

Miss Helen Marten.

Miss Marten, without doubt, is one of the most popular young women in the professional world, having gained an enviable reputation while posing for Charles Dana Gibson, who featured her very strong in all of his sketches from life, from which he gained a reputation and international fame. In the Spring Maid beauty contest in the New York World early this year, the first prize was awarded to Miss Marten.

The coming releases of the Lubin Company, in which this young lady works, will give the reader a better knowledge of her ability.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE CHILD OF THE FUTURE.

Judged by the child of the early nineteenth century, the child of the twentieth century will seem a marvel. Born amid the many advantages of the times, with electric light, telephonic connections, automobile conveyance, wireless telegraphy and aeroplane postal service, crowned with cinematographic educational possibilities, the present-day child stands upon that rung of the ladder as its beginning which was the topmost heights of its ancestral climb. With such a marvelous beginning, what reasonable expectations may not be looked for from such a "product of the ages"?

To be "rocked in a silver cradle" or "fed with a golden spoon" was once considered the highest possible advantage of birth; to-day it is a question if such conditions may not be considered the most disadvantageous. To be surrounded with opportunities is the best for every child, making no difference between rich and poor, giving each alike the same start in life. The ability to use those opportunities will in future be the test. Opportunities were formerly only within the power of the wealthy, the last half century has somewhat equalized these conditions, and in but a short time it will be proven that all opportunities are entirely equalized and the advantage will be in favor of those who best use their opportunities.

One of the greatest of these modern equalizers is the cinematograph. The writer may cite as an instance an example which came under his own notice. The children in a wealthy family spent half of each year in travel, as a result it was found that they learned geography and history with travel, so easy and naturally that their school text books were useful only to supply connecting links, while they were, in these subjects, always ahead of other scholars and that with pleasurable ease, while the others had to make their study a labor. The cinematograph is now not only the equivalent of the opportunities of travel, but more than the equivalent, in that it gives more universal travel in but a fraction of the time required in actual travel. Thus the moving picture taught child will have the advantage of every opportunity. It is no exaggeration to say that we are rapidly approaching the possibilities of a "year in a day" and the "child shall become a man in his youth" not as a monstrosity, but as a naturally well equipped personality, equal to the times and ready to meet the demand of opportunity. This must not be mistaken as meaning a premature maturity, such a conclusion would be injurious and false, but an earlier arrival at a state of knowledge so exceedingly comprehensive that the child of the future shall receive in youth the possibilities only open to the average life of a man in the past.

The question will naturally and logically arise, if this be the child of the future, what will the man of the future be?

To answer this will require an article under that heading which shall be forthcoming. Meanwhile it is worthy of the study of all who are interested in the education of children to be acquainted with—and also keep pace with—the means which are rapidly bringing about these greater and greater possibilities. A study of applied cinematography should be a self-imposed duty upon every educator, otherwise within a few years he will find himself unequal to both his task and the times. It is a notable truth known to all in the moving picture fraternity that from the highest manufacturer, down to the humblest operator, they have universally been compelled to lift themselves up to meet the educational demands made upon them; in similar ratio, educators will also be compelled to make themselves able and capable to meet the requirements which cinematography will make upon them, for the purpose of meeting all conditions forcing themselves in producing the child of the future.

ADVANCES.

In New York City the police and fire authorities are busily engaged in an endeavor to formulate plans for the better protection of children in the schools where moving pictures are shown. The growth of the work is such as to command the help and support of these and other authorities in a manner little anticipated but a short while ago. Legislation for the development of the moving picture exhibitions along educational lines is fast becoming a common function for all legislative bodies. It is no longer a question of "to be or not to be" concerning the pictures, but having "come to stay" it is receiving the best attention of all responsible authorities who are thereby fostering and encouraging a good work.

It is a recognized fact among film makers now that the holidays of the year must receive their best attention. It matters not if the occasion be national, political or religious, it must receive at their hands not only proper recognition, but the best possible application of their highest efforts. Thanks to this demand some of the best pictures have been produced. Independence day brought forward some of the most helpful and instructive national pictures which combined education and patriotism. Christmas has blended history and religion in many acceptable productions. Other occasions might be named, but they are already sufficiently familiar to our readers it is only necessary here to commend these facts and to anticipate, with the natural advances in cinematography, that future occasions will be met by still more worthy and acceptable results.

Reports of the Christmas holidays record a large number of private moving picture exhibitions in the homes of the wealthy as part of their usual Yuletide enjoyment. In the years now fast becoming the "long ago" the stereopticon was considered a necessary part of both public and private Christmas exhibitions; its sameness through lack of an impossible development caused it to become monotonous, and so it passed into "innocuous desuetude." This can never happen to the cinematograph, and its frequent uses at this season of the year records its own value in both a private as well as public and seasonable entertainer. From a study of the pictures used at these private functions, it is most interesting to note that those of an instructive or mental as well as a pleasure-giving value were in the majority, the humorous taking a second place with little or no room for the melodramatic.

NOTES.

The picture newspaper is continuing to make us more intimately acquainted with European rulers and at close range. Truly the world is "growing smaller by degrees—and wonderfully less." To pass from Russia to Australia. back to England and over into America is but the work of a few moments. Those who do not read this illustrated paper fail to imagine the loss which is theirs. The writer of these notes makes it almost a religious duty to read every "issue" (not release) and proves thereby an increasing knowledge of world events impossible to chronicle in print, or even if read, they are not impressed upon the memory so indelibly as the picture.

Far-away Australia, as one of the most modern countries, shows itself commendably advanced in both the appearance of its cities as in its governmental departments. The funeral of a cabinet minister is the especial occasion of pictures from the antipodes.

The annual event so dear to Londoners known as "The Lord Mayor's Show" is for the first time exhibited to the "cousins" on this side of the Atlantic. Much of the interest of the occasion is lacking through absence of any descriptive matter concerning the "guilds" for which this annual procession is famous. The central attraction of the Lord Mayor's Golden Coach drawn by six matched horses is very plainly shown, as are also several of the "ancient and honorable" representations; an event entering upon its eighth century of annual repetition like this is very interesting.

At her residence at 9 Lexington Avenue, New York, Mrs. Abram S. Hewitt entertained at a Christmas party one hundred and fifty guests, the majority of whom were children. Moving pictures took the place of the amusements of former years.

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

THE COPYRIGHT MATTER.

Register of Copyrights States the Attitude of His Office. Small Protection as "Dramatic Productions."

SOME weeks ago we announced that we had queried the Librarian of Congress relative to the attitude of the Copyright Office toward the entry of scenarios as dramatic compositions in the light of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court that a motion picture was a stage production. Apparently there were others who made the same inquiry, for the Assistant Register replied that it would require some time to look into the matter on behalf of the writer and others, but under the date of December 21st, Thorvald Solberg, Register of Copyrights, writes as follows:

> In response to your inquiry of November 29, I beg to say that after a careful reading and consideration of the case of Harper & Bros. against the Kalem Company for the infringement of "Ben Hur," it does not seem that the decision would really change the status of scenarios for moving picture plays. A scenario is not a dramatic composition, but is only an outline, more or less full, of a play giving details of the acts, scenes, stage business, etc., to indicate what the play will be like when produced. A distinction has always been maintained between a scenario and a dramatic composition, and therefore it is not believed that merely calling a scenario or work of this character a "dramatic composition" will ensure copyright protection. It is believed that the safest course is to print and publish, and then register as a book, so as to eliminate the question. If after printing and publishing there is a protectible dramatic element in the work, it would be secured by taking the steps prescribed in the statute.
> The copyright office has been very liberal in giving weight to any dramatic elements which were contained in scenarios sent in, and whenever it has seemed that there was the least chance that the designation "dramatic composition" was maintainable, has made registration. But most of those offered for registration are merely descriptive and do not present the characteristics of a completed drama, so that it has seemed wiser to warn each applicant of the risks that may be run in attempting to rest upon registration of the production as a dramatic composition.
> We cannot authoritatively answer your last question, but we may point out that the case before the court related to a published drama in which a statuory copyright was claimed.

The "last question" to which reference was made was a query as to the protection afforded an author who might copyright his scenario in the form of short fiction.

The reply to this question emphasizes the end of the first paragraph of the Register's letter referring to the "steps prescribed by the statute."

In brief, suit was not brought for the infringement of the copyright of the book, but for the dramatic arrangement made from the book and copyrighted as a play in the interests of Klaw and Erlanger, its producers. This is a point which has been overlooked in the discussion of the decision.

To ensure full protection, first do your scenario into literary form as a book, enter this for copyright and from it make a dramatic play, which also must be copyrighted. Then, if some manufacturer of motion pictures produces your play in dramatic form and you've got the money to last up to the United States Supreme Court, and you can prove that it was your play and not one from similar basis that was done, you stand a chance of collecting.

That is the status of the copyright matter at present.

A lawyer, who writes frenziedly of the need for copyright, has sought to educate the writer in copyright matters, but unfortunatey his declaration that any one could copyright a scenario at a small cost was backed up by legal theory rather than actual experience. The law seems to offer small protection, at present, and it would appear that even to the legal minds the intricacies of the copyright law are not clearly understood.

From the Register's letter it would appear that he makes no distinction whatever between the scenario for a motion picture and the scenario of a play, though the former is more complete in action in that it indicates every essential action, rather than the more important happenings only. It is barely possible that had the motion picture production been called a photoplay from the start this confusion might not have existed, though even then there is no classification to cover the photoplay. In reply to the Register's letter the following has been sent:

> I beg to thank you for your letter of the twenty-first instant in reply to mine of November 29th. May I once more trespass upon your courtesy, not on my own account, but upon the behalf of some two or three thousand persons who are now engaged in the production of photoplays and who, under the present provisions of the copyright law are left entirely without protection.
> The writing of photoplays or, as they are more generally termed, scenarios, is a development of the last three years and the demand for these photoplays has given rise to a distinct and pronounced literary form which has its own rules of technique clearly set forth, its own prescribed formula and which differs in many important essentials from the scenario of what your office correctly understands as a dramatic composition.
> Under present rulings these photoplays must first be copyrighted as a book, which I understand to mean at least pamphlet form and not merely galley proofs bound together, and must then be dramatized if full protection under copyright laws is to be obtained. A short story will be accepted in galley proof if intended for publication, such as the stories copyrighted by the McClure and other syndicates.
> Both of these forms is a matter of expense out of proportion to the possible returns. There are probably 500 scenarios written each week of which not more than 50 find acceptance. Probably 25 would be nearer the mark. Payment ranges from $15 to $50 for such work with the majority of the payments under the $25 limit. To comply with the law and enter as a "book" would be too severe a tax upon the author, who might be able to sell but a small percentage of his product.
> These are the facts. May I ask if there is no latitude whereby your office may, without further legislation, establish a class of photoplay or motion picture scenarios for the acceptance for registration of the typewritten form, although no specific protection is provided for in a law framed before the present demand for such photoplays? Since copyright protection is for the encouragement of literature, and photoplays are rising steadily toward that end, surely some protection shoud be afforded without undue expense.

It is unlikely that a favorable reply will be received, but should the reply indicate that legislation is needed, an effort will be made to present such an amendment to the copyright law as will permit entry, and the scenario writers will be asked to interest their respective Congressmen in its passage.

The Critic and the Writing Cuss.

Here is part of a personal letter from a man who didn't know he was writing for publication:

> Even the Mirror knocks my ———. Darn it! And they'll all say ——— is good stuff. The Mirror says the author didn't use all the possibilities of the plot. I'm damned if I'm going to spend two weeks thinking up possibilities enough to fit out a 20-edition novel, and then sell the work of genius for $20. Trouble is the film critics use the same perspective as a critic of literature, and expect a $20 story to equal a dollar-a-word serial. If a man writes something new, it's "improbable," or he didn't use all the possibilities." If he rehashes old stuff, he's as bad as the man who writes cowboy stories. What the critic wants is wishy-washy yarns that are easy to write and easy to criticise. Most of the favorable criticism I've got on my yarns I've got on the conventional run. I've got 'em pasted in a book to prove it. When I can get $50 apiece from more companies than one it'll pay to spend time on elaborating a story so as to suit everybody. Until then it don't pay. I got $20 from ——— for ———, which was a new idea and a good one. A few days later ——— sends me $25 for a Western yarn that I thought of in a night and wrote the next day. Go to. Or rather, drop a word of this in the Scenario Department, and tell the critics to go back to the hod. I ain't grumbling because I had a story knocked, but because I had a real story knocked, and I've had some junk praised as real stuff. 'El with them critics.

The writer overlooks the essential fact that The Mirror critic is not supposed to go behind the picture on the screen. He finds that the author has not developed the scenario to the full of its possibilities, and thereby he had fulfilled his critical functions. It is not to be supposed that he knows that the story brought only $20 and that the author refused to extend himself for that sum. He sees a picture on the screen that does not bring all the humor that the idea contains and he says so. It is all he is supposed to be interested in and all that he should be asked to be interested in.

But this is not a defense of The Mirror criticisms—it doesn't really need defense—but is used to show the point of view of a man who should know better and probably does, most days of the week. Now and then his trolley gets off the wire and he thinks that the business is going to deminition bow-wows and he doesn't stop to think that perhaps he might help it head the other way if he would sometimes give $22.50 worth of thought to the $20 story.

Just to be frank, $20 is a scandalously small sum for a story that may cost one hundred times that in the making, but the law of supply and demand prevails and if there is a greater supply than there is demand the price will stay low.

One great trouble with the scenario business lies in the fact that the untrained writer, the man who could not get a fiction story accepted at any price, can write as good a scenario as the man who can get from $25 upward for his short stories as does the writer of the above.

The untrained man is glad to take $20 for his story in the rough and since the editor can get a certain supply of $20 stories, he is going to offer $20 wherever he thinks it will be accepted, and so long as the $50 chaps will take the $20 they will get no more.

The answer is plain. Give the editor a higher grade of story. Think up $35 or $50 worth of idea and sell the idea for what it is worth. If the editor can get a $50 idea and knows he can't get it for less than $50, there is more than a chance that he'll pay the fifty.

The commonplace stories are not praised by our own writers and The Mirror's because they are commonplace, but because any director can put on the commonplace stories from the script furnished him, but the exceptional idea may interest without being clear, and it may be that the production still further muddles the theme. Then the critics write that the author has not fully worked out his idea and the author comments on the eventual end of the critic and the world is no longer a place of peace and joy for anyone.

Why not put a price on your pet scripts, not too high a price, but a price that will pay you for the work done? Then do your work to the best of your ability and stick out for the price on the proposition that the laborer is worthy of his hire. Don't merely figure that you can't get better than $20 or $25 and so, what's the use? Do your best and make the editor recognize the fact with a check.

The business has progressed but little beyond the point where the editor used to buy a script and write his own scenario from the synopsis, but the day for technique is coming and the man who exploits the fullest development of his idea in sound technique is going to get the large checks and credit on the screen.

Don't be greedy, but do good work and then ask commensurate pay and you'll help not only yourself but the business in general.

Keep Away from Criminals.

Here is a line from a typical letter:

> "The enclosed has just been returned by the ——— Company. Personally I think it is as good as any that I have had accepted."

The enclosure was the story of a holdup, showing the planning of the crime, the actual holdup and the "getaway." It was a story of action not badly planned (though it required that the hero be a practical horseshoer), but it was wholly and entirely about the crime and what followed, and the criminal had a more important part than the nominal hero.

The writer is but one of several hundred who turn almost instinctively to crimes and criminals as offering the most favorable material for exciting subjects. Perhaps the first story concerned a crime but contained an idea so good that some editor was willing to spend half a day getting it into such shape as would be passed by the censors and so the novice has some precedent for writing stories of crimes until repeated rejections bring final discouragement.

The handling of a story of a crime is one of the most delicate bits of craftsmanship and should be left to the trained technician, but since this advice is little likely to be heeded, perhaps a few suggestions as to censorship will not be amiss.

It is not alone the National Board of Censorship that objects to scenes of crime. There are cities where a rigid police censorship absolutely prohibits the portrayal of any criminal action, whether passed by the National Board or not, and to these the editor must also defer, unless he would have the product of his company shunned by the exchanges in the territory under these police jurisdictions.

The National Board may pass the hint of a murder if it is well done and essential to a story not directly founded on the murder, but these police boards are more literal. If it is a scene of crime it comes out of the film so long as the film is being shown within the city limits. It may be replaced when the film goes out of town but must again be cut if it is again shown in the city.

As each cut means the loss of two "frames," or pictures, and possibly more, according to the skill of the splicer, this means a gradual cutting down of the film. In the city entire scenes are eliminated without any explanation whatever and the "strong" picture closely approaches comedy.

It is for this reason that the average editor fights shy of the inexpert recital of criminal actions when he can get material of equal interest that is either better handled from a technical viewpoint or which is not dependent upon crime. Now and then some situation will tempt him to revamp a story, but this seldom happens and it is a far better plan to frame stories that do not concern crimes, or which merely hint at some criminal deed without detailing every action so that the blubbering small boy in some juvenile court may sob out that he was tempted to commit a robbery because the pictures showed him how to go about it. He's a gifted little liar, but it makes an effective plea and the motion pictures are produced for other purposes than to provide incorrigible small boys with a ready-made defense; so keep away from the criminal side and you'll be less apt to get your story back.

What the Bison Wants.

We give below the substance of a letter from Richard V. Spencer, Editor of Scenarios for the Bison company. It is well to remember in connection with this letter, that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD recently reported the deal whereby the Bison Company engaged the entire forces of the Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch Wild West show and added this large organization to the company already in the field. As it is probable that the show will take to the road in April or May, the scenarios should be sent Mr. Spencer as quickly as possible, being addressed to the Editor in care of the Bison Company, 1719 Allesandro Street, Los Angeles, California. This is in the Edendale section and this last should be added in the left hand corner of the envelope for the guidance of the postal authorities.

Mr. Spencer writes:

> "From January 1st, onward, the Bison Company intend putting on some very big spectacular stories; some of them we would like to have go two reels, provided we can get suitable stories. These scenarios should be on Western subjects of a spectacular nature—the biggest and hardest kind of stories to write and still keep within the bounds of plausibility and originality.
> "I would like to have you announce, through your columns, the fact that we are now paying the highest prices in the market and that in addition we are making arrangements to give the authors credit on the screen for their work. We now have the largest stock company in the world—350 people, so you will see that nothing is too big for us.
> "I would like to get in touch with some of the more successful writers in the business."

INQUIRIES

F. F. B.—Miss Mabel Normand was the Betty in the Vitagraph's "Betty Becomes a Maid."

C. O.—Address the Vitagraph Company, 116 Nassau Street, for the price of the postcards in sets. The company advises us that these are for sale. We believe it is the Feature and Educational Film Co. that is to make releases in Cleveland. We have no advice as to Miss Gladys Field's present whereabouts.

J. H.—It was Miss Ruth Hartman who played the Mexican Girl in "An American Insurrecto," in the Kalem production. Our inquiries into the personalities of the players does not extend to questions of descent, so we'll have to pass that up.

J. B.—The father in "Willie's Conscience," is Jack Hopkins. Leo Louis was the boy.

B. C. D.—It is not necessary to write a letter to go with a script and there is no accepted form. If you want to write, merely state that you hope that they will find the script available to their use. The editor has small time for reading letters and it is better to merely send the script. He will know, without being told, that it is offered for sale. If you do write, send the letter in the same envelope with the script, and not under another cover.

D. P. F.—Jack Hopkins and William Louis were the two men who came to town in Lubin's "A Gay Time in New York." Miss Mae Hotely was the mother of one of them.

LITTLE MARY ADMIRER.—Write the Curtis Publishing Co., 138 Lafayette Boulevard, Detroit, Mich., for the information you seek. Address simply New York City for the other, but what's the use?

DORA.—For the second and last time, Chauncey Olcott is not making pictures. You are thinking of Sydney Olcott, with the Kalem Company. He is now on his way to Palestine, with the rest of the O'Kalems, and Palestine doesn't seem to be the right destination for any bunch with a name like that.

BEVERLEY.—A photoplay in sixty-seven scenes is either a two-reel subject or a flivver. We incline to the latter opinion. Go over it again and see if you can't get the real action into twenty.

B. J. E.—The report that Miss Lillian Walker has left the Vitagraph is off the same piece of cloth as the tale of Mr. Costello's death. Both are still busy with the Vitagraph.

V. M.—The Technique of the Photoplay will come from the press early in January.

A. L. J.—We cannot quote standard prices for film rental, but usually the price is based on the age of the newest reel, unless two new reels are run in daily service. You can get service all the way from $5 to $50 a day. Write the General Film Co., Fifth Avenue Building, New York, for Licensed service, or the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co. for the Independent product. The latter address is 111 East 14th Street.

"JETHROM."—The Biograph Company does not announce the names of its players and we know no good reason why it should—or shouldn't.

C. L. W.—Miss Lawrence has left the Lubin Company, and before she went she announced that she was going to make a tour in her automobile and then run over to see if Europe has been moved. That's the best we can do to locate her, and we have no idea where a letter will reach her.

T. G. P.—We do not know where you can obtain the Beulah Binford pictures, and wouldn't tell if we did know.

E. E. P.—Miss Marion Leonard was not in a collision with a railway train last summer or any other time that we know of. Read the Gem advertisements.

T. P. B.—Some companies are more liberal than others in their payments for scenarios, but the Licensed companies do not pay more than the Independents. It's a matter of company, not combination.

V. M. A.—Miss Elsie Glynn and Jack Hopkins had the leads in Lubin's "A Nearsighted Chaperone." This picture, you may be interested in knowing, was made complete within twenty hours.

S. K.—Henry Walthall has never been a Vitagraph player the we know of, but he has played with both Biograph and Pathe. He is now with the Reliance Company, and has been for some time.

O. H. B.—If you will point out the Edison film in which Miss Alice Joyce had the lead, we would all like to see it. She is a Kalem player and not a member of the Edison Company, present or past.

F. B. Y.—Miss Gertrude Robinson is the Reliance leading woman to whom you seem to have reference. The European players are not known by name here and questions as to C. G. P. C. and Gaumont must remain unanswered.

J. E. S.—Restate your question so that it may be understood.

A. R. W.—Miss Gwendolyn Pates had the lead in Pathe's "A Puritan Courtship." Sydney Ayers was Slick in "Slick's Courtship." G. M. Anderson is the director of the Essanay Company he heads, and we believe that he writes most of his own plays.

G. M. T.—We have no record of an American company working in South Africa. Many of the Selig plays have their scenes laid in that country, but most of these were made in Florida, and the rest near Chicago. No Selig player was ever eaten up by lions. Miss Kathlyn Williams was badly scratched by a leopard during the making of "Lost in the Jungle," but it was an accident, and the leopard apologized.

P. H. B.—Charles Clary was the hypnotic detective in Selig's "The Inner Mind."

MAUDE.—The Thanhouser studio is in New Rochelle, N. Y., but not all of the pictures are made there, as they sometimes send out a field company.

T. R. G.—King Baggot was the villain in Imp's "Through the Air," because an aviator was the hero. It was a sure enough airship; one of the features of an amusement park across the Hudson from New York last summer.

BIG CHIEF.—If your question is propounded sincerely, it is evident that you do not watch the pictures as closely as you say you do. The Pathe, Vitagraph, Thanhouser, Bison, Selig and other companies, have full-blood and half-blood Indians on their payrolls. This in part accounts for the greater fidelity of the Indian pictures.

AMY.—There is practically no chance to get a position with a photoplay stock company unless you can show experience in pictures or on the dramatic stage.

W. H. K.—Your question is too long to be answered here, but will be taken up fully in the scenario page later, perhaps next week.

D. S. C.—Jack Standing is not working for any photoplay company, so far as we know.

ADMIRER.—The Thanhouser Kid has no other name for picture purposes. She is just The Thanhouser Kid.

CURIOUS.—The Vitagraph's Costello children are the little daughters of Maurice Costello. Adele de Garde and Kenneth Casey are not also Costello children, nor are they brother and sister.

S. S. M.—If you submit a photoplay script under an old title, the story will not be thrown out. The story itself is the guide, not the title.

F. B. H.—You seem to have lost your bet. When a camera is run slowly the picture on the screen will show rapid action instead of retarded movement. You see sixteen pictures each second on the screen and machines are, or should be, turned to give this speed. If the camera takes but twelve pictures of the scene being played, you will get one second of action in but three-fourths of a second. Quick turning, on the other hand, makes for slower motion.

A. W. L.—No chance whatever.

R. V. H.—Miss Florence Lawrence and Arthur Johnson had the leads in "A Rural Conqueror." (Lubin).

S. F. J.—The Motion Picture Story Magazine does not offer a market for scenarios. It is interested in these only after the production has been made by some company and arrangement is made with the company; not with the author.

A. C. S.—We've missed this question the last couple of weeks. No company admits strangers to the studio; not because they are afraid to let the public see how pictures are made, but because visitors are in the way. It's more or less irritating to have a stranger walk across the field of the camera right in the middle of a 200-foot scene, and many players, who have faced audiences of one or two thousand, will grow self-conscious in the studio under a single pair of strange eyes.

"The Prosecuting Attorney"

Strong and Realistic Melodramatic Subject from the Selig Studios.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

ON January 11, 1912, the Selig Polyscope Co. will release "The Prosecuting Attorney," a full length film produced by Colin Campbell and the Eastern stock company. The subject is melodramatic, but not of the lurid type. There are many strong situations that stir one by their realism, and there is a well-connected plot that holds one's interest with ever-increasing force until the final scene fades out.

"The Prosecuting Attorney" will not rank with the great films turned out by the Selig Company, but it can rightly claim the distinction of being admirably enacted, well staged and finely photographed.

The characters in this silent drama have been exceptionally well cast. The title role, in the care of Charles Clary, shows talented conception, and the quiet restraint of manner in situations of stress, which legal study and training bring to a well-poised mind, will be appreciated by all who admire intelligent acting. Miss Kathlyn Williams gives a strong characterization of Nina Brooks, the one-time associate of Joė Brooks, swindler, blackmailer and convict. The varying moods in the checkered career of that victim of circumstances are simulated with convincing art. Frank Weed appears as Joe Brooks, and in this "heavy" part he succeeds well in bringing out the resolute daring, brutality and depravity of the man. A word must also be said about the fine work of William H. Stowell, in the role of Inspector of Police Wheeler, and of Miss Greenwood, as Mary Moore.

The story of "The Prosecuting Attorney" will be familiar to many. Joe Brooks, a well-dressed swindler, in some way or another has gained control over a pretty girl, Nina, whom he compels to assist him in a "badger" game. The police suspect him and lay a trap. One of their number is selected to pose as the intended victim. He proceeds to the room of the hotel which has been selected by "Joe" as the scene of the blackmailing scheme. The result is the arrest of the swindler and his innocent accomplice. They are tried and found guilty, the man being sentenced for ten years in the penitentiary and the girl for two.

At the expiration of the girl's term we see her come out of the gates with a hard, defiant look on her face. But a good angel is near, in the person of Mary Moore, who conducts a mission for the reformation of unfortunate women. She persuades Nina to accompany her to the home, and there the girl soon learns that life is worth living and that the uplift of human souls is worth striving for.

Henry Lewis, prosecuting attorney in the case of Joe Brooks and Nina, is a member of the board of directors of the mission and, on one of his visits, he meets Nina. He recognizes her, but she fails to recollect him. The attorney had never forgotten her face and the signs of good in it, since the trial. Soon he calls again and reveals himself and his love for her, but Nina, feeling unworthy, repels him.

Soon again they meet. He had previously written a letter in which he told her that her past was her own. Mutual vows are exchanged, and the wedding takes place a few weeks later.

In the midst of her happy home life Nina, when driving with her husband one day, discovers Joe Brooks on the street. He had escaped from the penitentiary the night before and has been endeavoring to find Nina. He catches sight of her at the same instant that she sees him and follows the carriage.

That night, when her husband is preparing a law case in his study, Nina is disturbed by a noise at the window. She pulls the curtain and the wicked face of Brooks is seen peering in. Next we see him enter through the door. His object is blackmail. She refuses him money. Hearing the steps of her husband, approaching from the study, she orders Brooks from the room. While husband and wife are talking Brooks again enters. Nina tells her husband that the ill-visaged, poorly-clad creature is Brooks. The attorney orders him from the room and commands him to wait in the hall.

the news that a convict had escaped from the penitentiary the night before. He now recognizes the picture of Brooks in the accompanying illustration, and immediately phones the police. The convict listens outside the portières and resolves in revenge that Nina's past shall be revealed to her husband. Again he enters and attempts to speak. But he catches sight of a revolver in the hands of Nina, who has grown desperate, and flees from the room. A shot is fired as he passes out.

When the officers arrive, they are told by the attorney, who holds the pistol in his hand, that the man they seek is "in the room out there." As we see them with their backs toward us, looking at some unseen object, we know that the bullet shot by Nina had reached its mark.

AMERICAN FILM COMPANY BANQUET.

President Hutchinson Gathers His Assistants and Employees About the Festive Board for a Heart to Heart Talk.

On Wednesday, December 27, the employees from all but the producing department of the American Film Manufacturing Company, met at a banquet tendered them by the company. There were about sixty, all told, and many were the regrets expressed that the producing company in El Cajon Valley, Southern California, could not be present.

As all departments of the American are thoroughly systematized, President Hutchinson, who presided, called in turn upon various department heads for short talks. The policy of the American was thoroughly discussed and plans made for 1912. All employees were asked to give their opinion on the work and to work in harmony. President S. S. Hutchinson, after the courses had been cleared away, rapped for order.

"We have come together to-night," said Mr. Hutchinson, "for the purpose of getting better acquainted among ourselves and for the purpose of promoting a better spirit, founded on mutual regard and an understanding of the principles on which the American stands. This is the first annual banquet. We are really celebrating our first year in business. The management of the American Film Manufacturing Company is planning another banquet and housewarming at the opening of our new factory, which, it is predicted, will eclipse all previous efforts in this line.

"It was only a few years ago that the motion picture business was looked upon with something akin to contempt by other so-called legitimate businesses. The progress made has been phenomenal. We can now take a pride in our vocation and the fact that we have established ourselves on a high plane in the business world. We are educators, if you please. Press and pulpit have arisen in favor of the motion picture. Its pedagogical powers are becoming recognized among educated men and women. It is only a short step from our present position to that of the public school; and surely you will admit there cannot be a nobler kind of work.

"As I said before, it is only a little over one year ago that this company was formed. How much progress we have made during that period is best attested by the fact that we are to-day manufacturing a brand of pictures selling among the best in this and foreign countries. Our London and European branches have outstripped our most sanguine hopes. The popularity of our productions there is marvelous and the wonder of the trade. Our sales in Europe to-day, including all American and European makes, are among the first ten and considerably toward the front of that first ten.

"We are anxious for each and every member of this organization, whether a part of the office, factory or producing departments, to appreciate the fact that we are all working toward a common end for a common purpose. We want to make American films not only the best in the Independent ranks, but without peer among all motion picture manufacturers."

Mr. R. R. Nehls was then introduced by President Hutchinson. He said in part: "In my opinion, the purpose of this dinner is not only to get better acquainted among ourselves but to promote a better understanding among the various departments. It is up to the laboratory force to put forth its very best efforts on all American products. The office is dependent on the work of the laboratory and must assume all responsibility for carelessness on the part of the laboratory force. After all, a substantial business can only be built on merit, and merit in the motion picture business is largely a matter of much care and attention to detail."

Mr. J. R. Freuler, Secretary and Treasurer of the American and head of the Western Film Exchange of Milwaukee, was then called upon. Mr. Freuler told a number of excellent stories in his inimitable way, and one of them, centering about his own advent into the motion picture business, was relished by his audience. The genial and smiling Mr. Freuler was one of the most popular figures in the evening's entertainment, and those of the American force who know him, were glad that he could be present and those who were not acquainted with Mr. Freuler, were equally glad of the opportunity to make his acquaintance.

TURNCOATS.—Many complaints have reached the Editor, during the past two years, concerning men who have proven false to the trust reposed in them by fellow members of operators' unions, exhibitors' associations and exchange men's organizations. Many times we have been requested to publish names of individuals who have proven false to the obligation assumed on entering the organization, but this we have refused to do for various reasons. However, it is perfectly in order that we, at this time, call attention to the matter in a general way. It would seem almost unnecessary to point out the fact that men who join an organization, hoping to receive benefits, and then, at the first sign of trouble, prove false to the trust reposed in them by their fellow members, show woeful lack of principle. The very least thing that could be said of them is that they lack courage. There can be no explanation of their act, other than pure, unadulterated selfishness or cowardice. Without entering into any discussion of the possible wrongs within the organization itself, or the possibility of occasional wrong acts it may perpetrate, we may consider the case of the individual who deserts his colors and goes over to the opposition in time of trouble.

When a man joins an organization he is presumed to be old enough to know exactly what he is doing. If he does not know, the lack of knowledge is absolutely no excuse, since it is his privilege and his place to find out before he joins. When he does join he voluntarally assumes an obligation to be true and loyal to his fellow members and to abide by the will of the majority. If he finds things to be not to his liking it is his privilege to drop out any time he may wish, provided it be in time of peace. If, however, the majority sees fit to take some action which means war; if he is called on to take his part in a fight to uphold the edicts of the organization and he then drops out to save his own skin, he is forever after branded as a man unworthy of the confidence of any decent man. This holds true, I care not if the organization be an operators' union or an organization of millionaires, provided the action by the organization be within its rights. It applies the more strongly, however, to organizations of labor, since there the act of the traitor usually injures a comparatively weak body of men just at the time when they need every particle of strength they are able to muster.

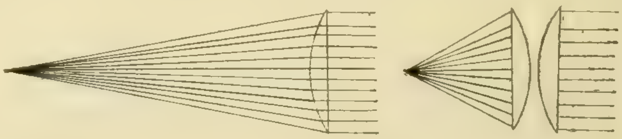
All the world hates a coward—a man who is willing to save his own hide at the expense of that of his fellow man. It is certain that no true man loves a weakling of this kind. Even the employer himself has—he cannot help but have—a contempt for the man who proves false to his fellow workmen. This would hold true even though the employer himself be opposed to unions. Moreover, he cannot but know that the man who will prove traitor to his organization would not hesitate to betray him also, did occasion arise. The true man is true in all things. One is not false today and true tomorrow. Show me that a man has deliberately deserted his organization in time of trouble and I would as soon think of trusting a mule not to kick as to be confident that that individual could be depended on in any important crisis. Either join an organization determined to stick through good report or evil, or else stay out of it altogether. The traitor is abhorred of men. He is the byword of earth. He is neither beloved nor respected, even by those whose cause his action benefited. Benedict Arnold was tolerated by the British, but he was utterly despised. He died an alien, neglected, and in deepest poverty and misery. Such is the inevitable fate, in greater or less degree, of all those who seek to gain personal profit by betrayal of their fellow men.

FILMS AND THEIR CARE. Mr. G. C. Lowman, Madison, Neb., writes: "Was especially interested in your answer to Harrisburg, Pa., (week of Dec. 9), regarding care of films. I suppose I am a 'crank' on that subject, in fact I have been told so by many so-called operators. But I know this much, that it pays me to be so. I spend many a long hour every change day in the booth inspecting the films. I own the Crystal Theater here and I will say that it is one of the finest equipped of any theaters anywhere in a town of this size. I do my own operating, and I believe it is as near perfect as possible. Good projection is the very mainspring of a theater, and I feel more satisfied when I attend to it myself. Now as to the films, of course I use commercials, you know what that means. My films are 60 to 90 days old. They look as though they were almost as many years. How an exchange can afford to let a valuable reel of film get in such a condition is beyond answering. Why don't they employ persons to inspect those films who understand projection and the running of films, instead of a bunch of girls? To give you an iea of how I work to put them in running condition, will say that on change days I receive my films about 8 o'clock in the morning. I begin on them right away, and, taking one hour for dinner, I get them ready to run by two o'clock in the afternoon. And I want to tell you those are long, weary, tedious hours. It makes one sometimes feel discouraged with the business. But as I said before, it pays me to do that work, for then my films run nice and smooth, no jumps over thick splices, no jumping out of frame, and no stops of any kind. I have an especially made sheet iron box to keep the films in and a compartment filled with wet sponges under them. If every person who handles film, both in exchange and theater would take such care of the films it would lessen the work for all of us and things would be more pleasant in general. I am using direct current, 220 volts. I have a Powers No. 6, sixty foot throw and have a 'home-made' rheostat of the usual kind, and have it fixed so I can adjust it to any number of coils. I think my current bill is too high. I run on an average of 2½ hours each night and my electric bill is $25 per month. Don't you think that is too much? What would you advise me to do? My fuses at lamp switch are 40 amp. The city electrical rate is 8 cents. Would it pay me to buy one of the well-known current savers which are advertised?"

You are certainly eminently correct in observing that if all cared for the films properly, or even half way decently, there would be far less grief for all and not so many fiascos on the screen. But they don't and as a consequence all have to suffer. Using current at 220 volts through a rheostat is extremely wasteful. You actually use about 45 volts, or maybe 50, and waste 170 to 175 in the rheostat. Now suppose you are using 40 amperes. Allowing the arc voltage to be 48 you are then consuming in the actual production of light 48 × 40 = 1,920 watts. You are consuming from the line, however, 220 × 40 = 8,800 watts; difference consumed (wasted) in the rheostat, 6,800 watts. Rather expensive isn't it as it all registers on the meter? You will see what I have to say concerning D. C. current savers in answer to a similar query on page 1069, Dec. 30th issue.

TWO CONDENSERS.—Chicago, Ills., writes: "Will you kindly explain the optical reason necessitating the use of two condensing lenses; also could not a double convex lens be used with same effect? I know, by experiment, that two lenses are necessary but do not understand what optical principle is involved."

Yes, a double convex lens would give approximately the same effect, except that by reason of the convex side being next the arc there would be much more light reflected from the surface and lost, especially near the edges of the lens. Moreover, it is likely the double convex lens would break more readily than the single plano-convex lens, and one double convex would, I believe, cost much more than two single lenses. The optical principle involved is simple.



At A we see a single lens. You will observe that while it converges the rays to a focus, the point of focus is some distance from the surface of the glass. At B we see a combination of two lenses. A lens will bend rays a certain amount, dependent on the (A) refractive index of the glass of which it is made (B) the curvature of its surface. The greater the curvature the greater will be the bending of the rays. The point of focus in B is, you will observe, much closer to the lens than at A. Now the arc must be at a point a slightly greater distance from the lens than the point of focus, in order to converge the rays of light at the aperture. There being two lenses in B, each of which bends the rays an equal amount, it follows that, as we see, the point of focus is nearer the surface of the lens, hence the arc will be closer than it would be with one lens, in order to converge the rays to a spot of given diameter at the gate. The further the arc is from the lens the greater the loss of light, and with a single lens fully one-half the light would be wasted on the interior walls of the lamphouse. But for the fact that lenses of heavy curvature have a great deal of spherical aberration it might be possible to use a single condensing lens of very short focal length. Such lenses are not practical, however, for the reason given, unless they be corrected for that fault and that would be out of the question with condenser lenses. To sum up: the single lens cannot be used because the arc would be too far away from the lens, with consequent great loss of illumination.

MOTOR WATTAGE.—Minneapolis, Minn., writes: "Am operating my own plant. Have a generator pulled by a motor. Generator is 110 volt D.C. and delivers 40 amperes at the arc. How much current should my motor consume?"

As the current is delivered at 110 volts, the generator output is 110 × 40 = 4,400 watts. Not knowing the efficiency, I cannot answer accurately, but it is likely that it will not exceed 60% very much. That is to say 40% of the power will be consumed in the motor and generator by mechanical and electrical friction. If there were no loss the motor would consume 4,400 watts, the output of the dynamo. Taking 60% efficiency, however, as representing the actual working basis of the set, your motor is consuming 7,340 watts. You would do well to install a dynamo of lower voltage, say 65 or 70. Taking the loss in the rheostat and in the set itself it is a rather expensive proposition. You have a loss of about 2,600 watts in the rheostat and a loss of 2,940 in the motor and generator, total, 5,540, while you are using only 1,800 watts in the actual production of light. With a 65 volt generator you would only be wasting 800 watts in the rheostat. The total generator output, for the same amperage would only be 65 × 40 = 2,600 watts and your motor would only consume about 4,400 watts, a total saving of nearly 3,000 watts.

KINEMACOLOR IN CALIFORNIA.—San Francisco writes: "The Kinemacolor Co., of California, opened at the Alcazar Theater, San Francisco, Nov. 27th, and has been doing capacity business.

On December 1st a Midnight Matinee was, by compliment of Messrs. Cramer and Steele, managers of the Kinemacolor Co., and Mr. Geo. Davis, manager of the Alcazar Theater, arranged for the Operators' Union. Invitations were issued by the operators to all owners, managers and show people in general. A splendid audience responded and it is doubtful if the Kinemacolor was ever shown before an audience of critics larger than this, as every one in the theater was in some way connected with the moving picture or theatrical business. Round after round of applause greeted the specially beautiful parts and a hearty cheer given for the Kinemacolor Co. at the finish. It is understood that the California Co. will establish a chain of houses devoted to Kinemacolor in the larger cities.

OUR SUGGESTION WORKED.—Pittsburg, Pa., writes: "I tried the experiment you suggested (p. 986, Dec. 23d issue). I placed a piece of paper between the two front lenses and found the picture to be greatly improved, although I did exaggerate the angle by about 20 degrees. The paper ring reduces the light to a slight extent but not enough to injure the picture materially, and the definition is much better. Will appeal to the Department hereafter when I want reliable information."

Glad to know that the scheme of stopping the lens down slightly worked out. The reason for it is that the outer edge of a lens is its weakest part and if there is any lack of definition (out of focus effect) it is likely to be caused by the rays passing through the outer edge of the lens.

PLASTER SCREEN.—Attica, Ind., writes: "Do you consider a plastered wall to be a good screen on which to project pictures? In your opinion what proportion of ultamarine blue should be mixed with the white coat material to produce the best results?"

A white plaster wall is an excellent surface on which to project pictures. I doubt if the addition of ultamarine blue to the white coat would be of value. Blue is mixed with white calcimine in order to take away the yellow tint, but there is no yellow tint to plaster of paris. Therefore, I think the blue would do no particular good, although possibly a very little would not do any harm.

SCHOOL MEN.—New York City writes: "In Dec. 23rd issue appears a query from New York regarding wire trouble. He must be one of the school men. It is such men who keep competent operators from securing a position at a decent salary."

As to whether the man in question is a school graduate or not, I cannot say. I do not believe, however, that the school graduates cut any figure in the situation. I very much doubt if they have any particular effect one way or the other. As a matter of fact, I very much doubt if one school graduate out of every ten really gets into the business and becomes an operator. Those who do, however, are in a position to become better operators than the old timers who have not had the benefit of technical knowledge; that is, provided that the school course is all that it should be. The one great weakness of operators, taking them as a whole, is the lack of technical knowledge pertaining to electricity and optics. I have talked with operators who had, to my certain knowledge, been operating for a number of years, yet who knew practically nothing at all about the action of electric current, resistance, and the other things which come within the scope of an operator's work. Presumably the school supplies this knowledge. However, in most cases it is supplied in a perfunctory and totally inadequate manner. If the man in question is a graduate of any school, that school must be a joke of the jokiest kind, for he knows practically nothing about electricity or its action.

MINNEAPOLIS OPERATORS ORGANIZE.—H. M. Peterson, Sec. L. U. No. 219, I. A. T. S. E., 2407 4th Ave. South, Minneapolis, Minn., writes: "At the last meeting of our local I was instructed to inform you that the Minneapolis operators were organized and as there is an over supply of men in this part of the country, to ask you to warn those who may contemplate starting in this direction to remain away. It has been a long up-hill pull getting organized, and we, of course, must look after the home men first. We are bending every effort to bring about a city examination for operators. The local is progressing in fine shape. It has received the hearty endorsement of both the Independent and the Licensed Exchanges. We would be glad to hear from sister organizations at any time."

Glad to know that the Minneapolis men are preparing to transact their business in a business like way by effecting organization. Operators who are thinking of going into the northwest will do well to take note of the conditions in Minneapolis and steer their course around that city. I wish the new organization every possible success. Trust they will proceed cautiously and carefully to better the conditions of the Minneapolis men.

SUGGESTION.—Findlay, O., writes: "Regarding New York's trouble, issue of December 23rd, would suggest he cut out one set of mains and put in a three-point circuit, and put the exit lights on a separate switch. I am not a professional operator, but have worked in the operating tank some, and did electrical work in a few places."

No, Findlay, it is a cinch you are not a professional operator when you talk about an operating "tank." As to New York's trouble, I would advise him not to attempt any wiring himself, but, as I before intimated, to get an electrician to straighten out his trouble.

USELESS.—Atlanta, Ga., sends in a somewhat lengthy communication, calling attention to the uselessness of using too much oil on the machine, also to the actual damage done by excessive use of oil. While everything Atlanta says is perfectly correct, still we have dealt with this matter so frequently, fully and recently, that we hardly feel disposed to consume space in its re-telling at this time. He says, among other things, that Mr. Henderson claims the make of the machine he uses (Power's No. 6) requires more oil than any other machine. For Mr. Henderson's benefit I will say that aside from the oil casing the motion picture machine bearing was never made that required more than one drop of good oil for its perfect lubrication. Of course if you use an oil as thin as water, that is something else again. But if you use a good grade of light dynamo oil, one drop is amply sufficient and the Power's No. 6 takes no more oil than any other mechanism having an equal number of bearings.

EDENGRAPH MOTOR DRIVE.—Kellogg, Ida., writes: "Would like to have your advice concerning the installation of a motor drive for my Edengraph machine. Can I set the motor on the left side of the lamphouse and cut two notches in back side of casing next the fly wheel? When framing up, the fly wheel moves up and down. Would the belt become too slack or too tight, as the fly wheel moves in framing? I don't see why this would not work all right, but would like to have your advice before installing. To my way of thinking the Edengraph is a great machine and puts up the best picture of any of them. We are up to date in every respect."

I have not an Edengraph machine at hand, therefore, will have to reply from memory. According to my recollection of the machine, what you propose to do is drill two belt holes in the casing in the lamphouse side, one opposite the top of the fly wheel and one opposite its lower edge, cutting a groove, of course, in the fly wheel to carry the belt. This would work all right if there is nothing in the way, except that you would be obliged to have a slot in the casing instead of two holes, since the belt would necessarily travel up and down in framing. If the shaft of your motor sets on a level with the fly wheel shaft when the framing carriage is at the center of its travel, and the motor pulley is removed not less than 18 inches from the fly wheel, I don't think there would be any trouble about the slacking or tightening of the belt while framing. However, if there is you can easily prevent that by means of an idler pulley sufficiently heavy to give the belt proper tension, running the belt slack, of course. Glad to know you are up to date and trust you will continue to keep up with the procession and produce "the goods" on the screen.

NEW YORK EXHIBITOR IN 'FRISCO.—Our old friend Frank C. Cook, a New York exhibitor, who has been traveling for the past few months, writes us from San Francisco: "Several times during my present trip through the 'Wild and Wooly,' have intended sending you a few lines. Have been completely lost, however, through failure to procure a copy of the World. Accidentally I recently saw one and the jump I made for it would have done credit to an able bodied flea. I eagerly read and re-read it from start to finish, and now that I am again in touch with civilization, will extend my best wishes and the compliments of the season.

"A few words by way of comparison of the Western picture houses and those in New York may be of interest. To begin with, there is really no comparison to make, for as we all know New York is far behind the balance of the country in the matter of motion pictures and their projection; and this reminds me that if the confiscatory and malicious ordinance proposed by the Board of New York Aldermen is passed, then poor old New York must sink still lower and be satisfied with its dark, dirty store shows of 300 or less capacity. How absurd! And who and what are the interests behind such legislation? One doesn't have to guess but once. In common with other New York exhibitors, I am wondering where it will ever stop—not perhaps until we are all closed up so that those who control affairs can drive the people into their big houses.

"Will free American people stand for such outrages much longer? Is there no limit to the endurance of their patience? Are we, in free America, to allow them by force of might and political pull to deliberately close our business, in order to benefit some big men higher up, who own a chain of theaters? Surely the World, which always fights our battles, will not allow this to be done without adequate protest. I expect to reach home in a few weeks and will then look you up. Meanwhile, I wish you a merry Xmas and a happy and prosperous New Year."

Well, friend Cook, no one intimately familiar with affairs in Gotham, will, I think, undertake to seriously dispute the fact that your charges have considerable grounding in fact. It is to be doubted if any other one business under the canopy of Heaven has been made the subject of so much asinine, idiotic and utterly absurd legislation as has the motion picture theater. It is the poor man's show and is usually owned and operated by a poor man. Having made that statement, it would seem almost a waste of good ink to add to it by saying that anything connected with the poor man is due to get it in the neck at every possible opportunity. The proposed legislation is worse than foolish, since, in several ways, as usual, the cart is placed before the horse. The trouble in securing really proper legislation is two-ended. In the first place there are many rampant reformers who want something but do not exactly know themselves what it is they want. Many of our New York brand of reformers would like to surround each individual with a glass case, tightly corked and filled with sterilized air. They are so goody good that they are good for nothing except to make a nuisance of themselves. They go to the extremest kind of extremes. They have discovered that the motion picture theater is comparatively helpless, therefore it offers to them a most enticing field for their endeavors. With glee they jump on the poor man's show and proceed to pommel it, because they well know it cannot offer adequate defense. They cheerfully allow the children to roll in the filthy gutters of the East Side, but they positively must not enter one of those "terrible" moving picture shows lest their morals be "contaminated." According to them, the motion picture show is a "sink of iniquity," a frightful den of vice and a recruiting place of the Devil. They make no manner of audible protest at the publication in the newspapers of every form of vice, with full illustration, diagram and minutest detail. They allow the most suggestive "dances," in which the performer is from half to three-fourths naked, to be pulled off on the stage of the "regular" theaters. They raise no howl at the positively dirty stunts pulled off on the "burlesque" stage. Holdups, safe-cracking and even murder is nightly depicted on the stage of the "regular" theaters and not one word do we hear from the reformers, though many children are in the audience. But the motion picture theater—oh my! Maybe they are exercised because it contains practically none of these things. But be that as it may, we have the extremest reformer to thank for much of the crazy (that is the only name for it) legislation proposed.

But for all this, no honest man will deny that there is room for improvement in the motion picture theater field, and no one would object to reasonable, sensible laws looking to that end. This brings us to the second cause, viz: lack of a compact, strong exhibitors' organization to combat the evils which do exist, as well as to look after the interests of the business in the matter of legislation. Since the present danger has arisen, the exhibitors have suddenly become active. They are now industriously engaged in an attempt to lock the stable door, after the horse is half way out, with an active, able-bodied robber tugging at the bridle. The World will do what it can but it cannot undertake to perform duties left undone through sheer inactivity of the exhibitors themselves. The one pathetic part of the whole thing is that, while there unquestionably are certain reforms which might well be made, it is a fact that such exhibitors as would be affected by the legislation necessary to bring about those reforms, strenuously oppose any change. They well know it is these very things which give ground for the activities of the extremest reformer but they are unwilling to remedy them and strenuously opposed to being forced to do so. It follows that the entire industry within the City of New York must suffer. Just what the final outcome of the present spasm will be cannot be prophesied at this time. The proposed laws (there are two or three sets of them) contain some good, much foolishness and much that is distinctly bad. That some of the foolishness and some of the bad will become law is to be expected, but it is to be hoped we will succeed in heading off at least a portion of it and that the final outcome will not be as bad as you fear.

I was disappointed that you did not make the comparison of which you spoke. It would have been interesting. When you return I trust you will favor us with an article setting forth the difference, as you saw it, between the eastern and western motion picture exhibition. In closing I might add that in the foregoing I have not intended to deny the possibility of the "higher up" men having something to do with assisting in the matter of legislation designed to embarrass the small houses. That is a very large, life-sized possibility.

WIRE TROUBLE.—N. C. (name of town suppressed), writes: "Am having a little trouble with my No. 6 asbestos covered stranded wire leading from Ft. Wayne Compensarc to the lamps. We use two Edison one-pin machines and run three shows a day, three licensed reels, six to 18 days old, to the show. The wires get so hot before one reel is run that you cannot take hold of them, still the compensarc is barely warm. My connections are clean and make good contact, for they are gone over carefully every Wednesday and Saturday. Use Webb's Terminals at lamps. The wires do not get hot anywhere else. The current is 110 volt 60 cycle; it is very unsteady. During the day they use a small generator, but a much larger one is employed in the evening, but the current is still not good. Considering the current trouble, we get a very good picture, projecting the same upon a silver screen. In the December 16th issue, Princeton, N. J., complains of picture climbing when he runs a little fast. I have experienced the same trouble and find the cause to be the four screws that hold the framing carriage up. They had worked loose and the increased speed set up a greater vibration of the framing carriage, causing the carriage to drop down, which would cause the picture to appear to be climbing up on the screen. Have also found this trouble to be due sometimes to worn sprockets and bad patches in the films. Mr. Frank Lewis, Secretary Local Union 181, must be a very busy man these days. During the past month I have written him two letters, inclosing postage, asking information as to becoming a member. To date have had no reply. Possibly we operators in the small towns are not considered worthy of bothering with. However, if some of the city men would travel about a bit and view the projection in some of the smaller towns they might realize that not all of the good operators are in the cities. No one thinks more of the Moving Picture World than I and there is another World fan here, too."

As regards the wire; as I understand you it gets hot through its entire length from the compensarc to the lamp. This would indicate one of two things, viz: either the wire is not No. 6, but No. 8 instead, or else it has been in use a long time and has developed excessive resistance. I have known of such cases as the latter. I think very likely you will find that wire is not No. 6. It is also within the range of possibilities that it is not good wire. Wire ratings are based on the copper being of a certain standard of purity. While I do not think it probable, still it is possible, that you have got hold of some cheap wire that is not up to this standard, therefore develops excessive resistance. In one of these three things your trouble will be found, for the very simple reason that it cannot be anything else. As regards the picture climbing; it is, of course, possible that if the framing carriage becomes too loose, that is too easily moved, the added friction of the film at high speed, coupled with excessive vibration, would cause it to move down. However, if the picture comes back into place when the speed is reduced then the trouble does not lie in the framing carriage, but in the tension springs. We would suggest to Brother Lewis that letters of the kind mentioned should be answered. We think his failure to do so must have been an oversight, due probably to the fact that the Baltimore operators have been on strike.

A PECULIAR ACCIDENT.—On the night of December 15, Willie Rhodes, a 16-year-old boy, was instantly killed by an electric shock while operating a machine in the Dreamland Theater in Portsmouth, Va. Kirk Seay, another boy, was also badly shocked, but was recovered. The Rhodes boy was employed as operator at the Dreamland Theater. When he started the machine, or rather attempted to start it, he was instantly killed. Supposedly there was a short circuit or some kind of connection between the secondary and the high tension wires. It is said that several thousand volts passed through the boy's body.

Whether this regrettable accident would have been avoided had a man of experience and ability as an operator and electrician been employed, we cannot say; however, the manager who employed a sixteen-year-old boy as operator, regardless of the danger to the boy himself and to the audience, shows himself to be totally unfit to hold a position as theater manager. The place for a sixteen-year-old boy is in school; but regardless of whether he is in school or not he has no right place in the operating room. A youth of such tender years certainly cannot have any considerable knowledge of projection, optics or electricity, or have any experience of amount sufficient to justify his employment in a position of so much responsibility.

CHANGE OF MANAGEMENT.—Los Angeles Picture Repair Co., 238 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, has leased its plant to Mr. W. L. Wright, who was for two years manager of that company. Mr. Wright will continue the business as before and will also manufacture accessories pertaining to the moving picture business, from his own designs.

FOCAL LENGTH.—El Centro, Calif., writes: "Would like to know how to figure focal length of condensers; also projection lens."

I would suggest, El Centro, for your own benefit, that you send $1.50 to the Moving Picture World for a copy of the Hand Book, in which all such things as this are fully explained. Pin a sheet of paper on the wall opposite the window. Hold the condenser lens with its flat side towards the wall and in such a position as brings the resulting picture into the sharpest possible focus. Measure the exact distance from the wall to the flat side of the lens. Next turn the lens around with the convex side towards the wall and repeat the operation, measuring again from the flat side to the wall. You will find there will be a difference in the two measurements and the measurement from the wall midway between the two surfaces is the focal length of the condensing lens, thus: supposing it measures 6½ with the flat side to the wall and 7 inches with the convex side to the wall, then the true measurements of the lens would be 6¾ inches. To measure the objective lens proceed as above and focus the picture sharply on the paper, measuring from the paper to a point exactly half way between the front and back lens. This gives the equivalent focus The measurement from the paper to the back lens gives the back focus.

CANADIAN TOWNS.—Mr. George W. Orme, Washington, D. C., writes "In answer to your request I send herewith list of towns in Canada tha have no shows. Have had quite a number of requests for this information; therefore, expect to see these places taken quickly. Will contribute more to the Department when you are not so crowded for space. Am starting on a trip to extend as far south as Tampa, Fla. Names of towns are as follows: Thorold, Ont., current 133 cycle 112 volt; population, 8,000 to 9,000. Port Dalhouse, Ont., 2,600 volt current; population, 6,000. Port Erie, Ont., 2,600 volt current; population, 4,500. Ridgeway Ont., 4,000 population, not wired, but Niagara cables run close by. 2,600 volts. Merritan, Ont. 10,000 population. A theater was under construction when I was in this city, but the town will stand two shows easily, Bridgeburg Ont. No current. Being played twice a week at present. Can stand continuous evenings.

The following towns are good for one night stands, with gas. Population 400 to 800: Scotia Junction, Ont.; Edgerton, Ont.; Maple Lake, Ont. Orillia, Ont.; Grarenhurst, Ont., Allendale and Bracebridge, Ont."

We are obliged to Brother Orme for the list of towns and it is certainly interesting in view of a letter which follows. Somebody is evidently badly mistaken. However, a little use of the mail by the interested parties wil clear the matter up.

NO CITIES IN CANADA WITHOUT THEATERS.—Mr. George Farncombe, proprietor, Lyric Theater, Minnedosa, Man., Canada, writes: "In the December 2nd issue I notice Mr. George Orme states there are dozens of towns in Canada having a population of from 4,000 to 8,000, in which there is no moving picture theater. I would like to know on what part of the globe Mr. Orme thinks Canada is located. I defy him to name one town in all western Canada, of even 2,000 population which is not the proud possessor of a picture show. Eastern Canada is the same. I know of no town in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia with a population of 1,500 or more that has not already got a show, and I have investigated this matter fully. I trust this will find place in your valuable Department and be the means of letting our American friends know the situation as it really is in this country."

In the language of the immortal Teddy, I haven't a word to say—no a word. Friend Orme makes good by naming certain towns. The other friend says it's not so. I would like to know who is right. It is possible that Mr. Orme has not been in Canada recently. If there are theaters in any of the towns he names we should be glad to hear from them to the end that this matter may be cleared up.

MACHINE FOR SALE.—Georgia (name of town suppressed) sends in $1.50 for a Hand Book, and writes: "I try to avoid trouble by keeping my Moving Picture Worlds on file. When some difficulty arises I am thus enabled to refer to a similar trouble someone else has had, and for which you have given the remedy. I have an old Edison Exhibition, two-pin machine, which is considerably worn and has not been used for several years I can sell this machine for $35 by having it repaired and changed to a one pin. Will the machine work satisfactorily after the change has been made, and what would it cost?"

You are very wise in keeping the Moving Picture Worlds on file. I have called attention to the advisability of doing this a good many times If in addition to this you make a index of the Projection Department, you will, now that you have the Hand Book, be in possession of a very valuable fund of information concerning all the different difficulties the operator encounters in his work. The two-pin machine can be changed to a one pin A great many have been thus changed and have proven satisfactory. Write the Thomas A. Edison Co., Inc., Kinetograph Dept., Orange, N. J. They will quote you prices.

EXAMINATIONS.—Oskaloosa, Iowa, writes: "An applicant to L. U No. 534, I. A. T. S. E., insists that our questions are too difficult, and that some of them were correct. We therefore decided to ask you to make out a set of questions which you think a first class operator should be able to answer."

As I have stated before, I do not think it advisable to have any set list of questions, since they are likely to become known to applicants, who are thus enabled to look up the correct answers. In the issue of July 29, page 205, will be found a list of questions, any of which should be correctly answered by any operator of ability. Any operator who has experience; who has bought and studied the Hand Book and followed the Projection Department closely ought to be able to answer any one of these questions, or all of them. I have sent the list to the brother by mail.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE IMP PLAYERS.

The Imp Films Company, 102 West 101st Street, New York City, are issuing a set of photographs of the Imp players: King Baggot, William Shay, W. R. Daly, E. J Le Saint, Ed. Lyons, J. W. Cumpson, H. S. Mack, Farrel Macdonald, Margarita Fischer and Grace Lewis. The set of ten photographs will be mailed to any address for 50 cents.

AN ARTISTIC CALENDAR.

Among the various remembrances of the season the Moving Picture World has received an artistic calendar from the American Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago. Upon the mount is reproduced a group of the leading members of the American stock company of players in photogravure. It occupies a prominent place upon the walls of the editor's sanctum.

"CURING A RECKLESS STUDENT" (Gaumont), December 29.—A story of student life in the seventeenth century, perhaps, told in a very gracefully acted picture. It sets forth the pranks of a poor student who seems to be a leader in escapades which cost more than he could afford and also shows how the poor father and the instructor taught the lad a lesson. A picture of Rembrandt, called the "Lesson in Anatomy," is followed in this scene and pictured marvelously. The father was the dead man, so the son, one of the students, supposed. It affected him deeply. The picture is dignified and a very acceptable offering.

"THE RANCHMAN'S DEBT OF HONOR" (Melies), December 28.—The ranchman incured the debt in a game with a crooked gambler. The gambler is asked to dinner and meets the ranchman's daughter Mary and Pete, her lover. He is smitten with Mary, and later by her, when he courts rudely. He uses the advantage that the debt gives him to force the ranchman to make Mary marry him. But the ranchman is enabled to pay the debt and send the gambler off by a stroke of good luck. It is not a vital story and it is also poorly photographed.

"A ROMANCE OF THE CLIFF DWELLERS" (Edison), December 29.—The setting of this story will immediately attract favorable attention. It is unusual as well as accurate and affords a reasonable impression of the life of primitive people. The story deals with the desire of a chieftain for a certain young woman from another tribe, and, in common with the custom of that time, he carried her away by force. Her lover interfered and during the struggle on the edge of the cliff the girl kills her captor with an arrow. Following the old law of a life for a life, the lover is taken and tortured, previous to being executed. To protect the maiden he remains silent. The girl, learning of his situation, goes to his assistance and confesses her part in the killing of the chieftain. She is condemned to take the plunge over the falls at dawn. The lovers are separated, she is laid in the bottom of a canoe, covered with pine boughs, and drifts slowly to the edge of the falls, where it plunges over. As the canoe poises for an instant on the brink before going over, it forms one of the most intensely dramatic scenes of any film of the week. The audience watches with baited breath, as the frail craft takes its final leap.

"A DOUBLY DESIRED ORPHAN" (Vitagraph), December 29.—A pretty little love story told around a widower and a widow, both of whom wish to adopt the same orphan from an asylum. The matron, a woman of unusual intelligence for one in her position, suggests that they marry and then they can both have her. Accordingly they repair to a minister and the result is a happy family of three.

"A BIRD IN THE HAND" (Essanay), December 29.—Here is a little comedy which is not spoiled because the same thing has been done before. Unable to obtain a turkey Jim decides to pawn his suit, and with the proceeds buy the turkey. While he is absent his wife pawns the other suit and also buys a turkey. Not wanting two turkeys Jim gives his to the Salvation Army and his wife with equal charity gives hers to the janitor. Thus Jim is out two suits and two turkeys. In the midst of their lamentations, a box arrives containing a luscious bird. To make sure of keeping it they nail it to the table and Jim mounts guard with a huge musket to prevent its disappearance.

"THE COWBOY'S ADOPTED CHILD (Selig), January 2.—This theme of a mother's abandonment of her child because she is too poor to provide for it, and later, in a dramatic moment, finding it again, has been used several times before, but there is much freshness in the way it is used in this melodrama with a humorous turn. The spectators laugh at the doings of the punchers who found and adopted the kid and they laughed at the way the younster took his handling; it was sympathetic but awkward; they also laughed at the dark cook, who is a sort of Williams kind of coon. The story is interesting.

"HE, SHE AND IT" (Selig), January 2.—A series of comic pictures following those little sketches that sometimes run across the top of a page of "Life" for instance. Perhaps these were suggested by Life's "Cupid Number." A story told by hands and wash lines.

"IN THE CLUTCHES OF A VAPOR BATH" (Vitagraph). December 29.—A "Bunnygraph" in which a fat man to please his wife tries to reduce his weight. Working in the gymnasium, he gained five pounds in one day, so he ordered a vapor bath cabinet and was brash enough to start it going. We only see his head sticking out of it. A sneak-thief enters; but the fat man is in the bath and helpless. There is plenty of fun in his facial expression as he entertains the thief, who for a joke puts a derby on his head, but leaves him tied up in the cabinet for he can't open it. His wife brings home some friends to tea and the fat man is in the cabinet, in the parlor. They don't understand why he won't let them in and think he is crazy. When the doctor comes the fat man has smashed the cabinet.

"THE MAID'S DOUBLE" (Kalem), December 29.—A very dramatic and absorbing story dealing with a dishonest maid and a young society girl who is just returning from Europe and is to meet her fiance at the railroad station. These two young women look exactly alike, or, at least, the skilful conduct of the picture is such that the spectators can't see anything unnatural in even the girl's fiance taking the thief for his sweetheart. They both were in the station and the detectives got the wrong one. This climax is convincingly approached. The suspense is perfectly sustained and gradually grows very intense. The scenes, taking them separately, are realistic and very delightful. Beautiful stage sets, beautiful gowns and furniture and graceful, pretty players, in the feminine half of the picture, are among its distinguishing features. And it is a rattling good story, fresh and pleasing.

"UNCLE HIRAM'S LIST" (Edison), December 30.—A story of a country town and chiefly of two real characters who lived there. Uncle Hiram, the village censor, kept a "skunk list," and it kept him busy recording the failings of his fellow townsfolk. Uncle Hiram's strength lay in the fact that whatever name went down on the list, all except the name's owner could see the righteousness of having it there. But Uncle Hiram wasn't always a good judge. He got Jimmie's name down there for cowardice. Jimmie was sensitive and he made good as a brave youngster to prove himself no coward. It is gently pathetic how Uncle Hiram came to Jimmie's bedside and changed the position of his name to a place amongst the heroes. If the story isn't very convincing, it has a strong human undercurrent of reason. It also has many delightful sketches of rural life. By the way, one wouldn't mind seeing what happened to Uncle Hiram when he got the name of everybody in the village down on that list. To err is human, you remember. It oughtn't to take him very long to fill it out and then there'll be no one left to enjoy it. What is going to happen to Hiram?

"A RED CROSS MARTYR" (Vitagraph), January 2.—A tragic story which, in the main, gets across powerfully. Its scenes are laid in Tripoli and its hero, an Italian officer, and its heroine, an Italian gentlewoman, are shown in the first scene as engaged. War is declared. The officer is ordered to the front. Later the girl volunteers as a Red Cross nurse. In the last scene, a military funeral, these two are lying together on a gun carriage, united in death. She had been shot down by the treacherous Arabs while attending the wounded. He came to his death while high above the Arab position in an aeroplane, hurling distruction down upon them. These scenes showing this are very effective. One would pick them out as Vitagraph scenes anywhere; they have the same quality that made the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" a fine picture. The picture is a large one, containing cavalry, infantry, artillery, etc., and also large numbers of Arabs.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S ADVENTURE" (Essanay), December 30.—A first-class Western cowboy picture, although Broncho Billy is a bit too much of a palladin to get over wholly; he can write on the back fence with two pistols at once and his shots make the letters jump right out. He stops at an inn in this picture and becomes a matchmaker, or rather helps Cupid out of difficulty. The girl's father, the inn-keeper, didn't care to have lovers around; he needed the girl's help, so he discouraged all callers. He shot the best of them. Then Billy took a hand, two hands in fact; for with one he covered Dad and made him give the wounded cowboy shelter, and with the other he kept the other boys from giving Dad what they thought he needed. The wounded man got well and, thanks to Billy, Dad gave in. It is a likeable picture.

"A ROYAL ROMANCE" (Gaumont), January 2.—A picture dealing with one of the numerous love affairs of Henry IV, King of Navarre and later of France. It is the story of the flower girl, not historical at all, but pleasingly romantic. It has settings quite in keeping, old, historic castles, gateways, gardens, etc. These are very well photographed, although the coloring is not so perfect as in the best painted pictures. The actors are graceful and pleasing and the picture is dignified. It will be popular.

"ELEANOR CUYLER" (Edison), January 2.—A picture of R. H. Davis's popular story, carefully made and well acted. It makes a very pleasing story. It is a love story of the higher social circles in New York City and tells how a young writer meets a society girl and how the chance meeting ripens into friendship and the friendship into something more. The course of true love didn't run any too smoothly; that makes the picture, that tells us about it, very interesting By the way, in passing it is interesting to remember that, when the story was written, there were no "Votes for Women" advocates in high life. Miriam Nesbitt creates a very pleasing atmosphere around the heroine, Eleanor, and Marc McDermott makes a first rate literary man. It is a very good and desirable picture.

"FATHER AND THE GIRLS" (Lubin), December 29.—A comedy showing the difficulties likely to meet a middle-aged father of four grown-up daughters if he be matrimonially inclined. The girls reluctantly call on the widow whom their father is looking at. She offers them cigarettes and wine, which makes matters worse. To shock their father the girls pretend to follow in the widow's footsteps. He comes into the library and it looks as though they were all four drunk. He blames the widow and quarrels with her just as the girls planned to have him. The widow is eliminated and things go on as before. It is a pretty picture, slight but very amusing in parts.

"THE MAIL-ORDER WIFE" (Essanay), January 2.—An intimate picture telling a love story that ends very satisfactorily with the unexpected meeting again of two lovers foolishly parted and lost to each other. The backgrounds are mostly interiors, mostly in the home of two bachelor partners who are working a farm in Indiana. The action takes place mostly in their kitchen and sitting room, of which we see very well photographed corners, just enough to make us think we are in the room. We also get a glimpse of an office in Chicago, where the heroine, a stenographer, opens the mail order of one of the farmers. He gives a large order, then he adds that he also wants a wife. She considers a while then she corresponds and a few weeks later comes out with the purpose of marrying one of the farmers, but finds in the other her long lost, but still loved, sweetheart.

“DRIVING HOME THE COWS” (Kalem), January 1.—There is a touch in this film which will go straight to the heart of all the older people at least. It tells of a boy who went to war without his parents’ consent, after driving home the cows. The news of his death is received at the lonely farm which has already given two sons to the conflict. Sometime later the sorrowing father when he goes for the cows meets them coming and behind them sees the son he believed dead. He was only badly wounded and has returned to the friends who loved him. The empty sleeve will help in rousing the sympathy of the audience.

“THE BABY AND THE STORK” (Biograph), January 1.—The youngster in this who picks up the new baby and returns it to the stork from whence he is told it came. only carries out the desire of other youngsters under similar conditions. The earnest way in which he trudges off to the park with the baby in a basket and presents it to Mr. Stork is as amusing as it is real to him. The surprise of the parents when they discover where the baby has gone is genuine. It may be that the older brother is not so entirely neglected after this protest.

“A ROMANCE OF WALL STREET” (Vitagraph), January 1.—Love sometimes cuts a figure in Wall Street out of all proportion to the attention he is supposed to attract there. In this instance when a rejected suitor undertakes to ruin his successful rival the girl’s godfather comes to his rescue and the instigator of the deal is left penniless. Some of the ways of Wall Street are clearly illustrated. More than one man has been ruined by similar tactics.

“OBJECT, MATRIMONY” (Lubin), January 1.—Two elderly people insert advertisements in a marriage bureau publication. They are answered by two younger people who flee when they see whom they are likely to secure for life partners. There is considerable sport in the flight, though it ends with the younger couple distancing their pursuers. The young folks look up a minister and as they are about to enter the house the older couple come down the steps. The flight begins again, but they explain that they are married. There are many laughs in the picture.

“THE OYSTER INDUSTRY” (Lubin), January 1.—An interesting educational film, illustrating the oyster industry from the planting of the beds to the canning and shipping of the oysters. The last scene represents a gentleman partaking of a succulent bivalve with every evidence of satisfaction.

“THE COWBOY ARTIST’S JONAH DAY” (Kalem), January 3.—Here is a lively comedy with a cowboy who imagined he was an artist in wrong from the beginning. He undertook to make a sketch of a handsome girl and when she resents it he resorts to a subterfuge to meet her and become acquainted. After several unsuccessful attempts he is assisted from the house on her father’s very substantial boot. While the story is somewhat flimsy, the way the actors work it out makes it funny and entertaining.

“TRUE TO THEIR TRUST” (Eclipse), January 3.—The high moral teaching, the inculcation of the necessity of faithfulness to one’s trust, is so palpable in this film that it needs no diagram to explain its purpose. A lighthouse keeper falls sick. The machinery that turns the light becomes disarranged. His children turn the light all night, and as they go, almost exhausted, to their father in the morning he dies conscious that he has been faithful to his trust.

“A COTTON GOODS FACTORY IN FRANCE” (Eclipse), January 3.—A short, but interesting, industrial, illustrating the manufacture of cotton goods, from the cotton field to the finished cloth. All the varied processes required in manufacture are accurately shown.

“THE TWO FLATS” (Edison), January 3.—There was trouble between an Irish widow in the upper flat and the Italian widower below. Their children, returning from school, become acquainted without knowing the proximity of their habitations. Some little tokens sent by them fall into their parents’ hands. They are accepted as peace offerings and the whole combination of circumstances results as it often does in such cases. It is very good comedy, built upon a simple theme.

“FOR MEMORY’S SAKE” (Essanay), December 28.—A picture of sentiment, contrasting the quiet home life with the trials and vicissitudes of those whose business is to act upon the stage. Jim’s sweetheart left Springfield to go upon the stage. Fifteen years pass and she has become but a photograph and a fond memory. Jim’s sister Leone, now grown up, also hears the call of ambition and the foot-lights and she too goes to New York. She is shown as having a very unpleasant experience. Jim’s old sweetheart, who, it happens, is also in the company, saves her from the, clutches of a crafty manager. Perhaps it is better not to show such scenes. As a consequence, both actresses are discharged and this leads to a homecoming with a renewal of old ties and affections. The acting is poor.

“THE SOLDIER’S RETURN” (Lubin), December 28.—A not very original melodrama designed to show the nobility of a young man in a country village who, on the soldier’s return, could release the girl who had promised to wed him, because he saw that, if she had known that the soldier was still alive, she would have refused his proposal. This climax is lead up to fairly well, although the acting is unusually poor for Lubin pictures; these same players have done much better work. There are scenes of military life, a battle scene and hospital scenes and also scenes of country life in America, the country store and its porch and the interior of the heroine’s house.

“THE VOICE OF THE CHILD” (Biograph), December 28.—A picture in which a child’s call to her mother, who was on the point of eloping with her husband’s false friend, averted a tragedy. The picture’s worst fault is that it seems hurried. Because of this it even loses something of the dignity it might have had. Apparently it was the fault of neither the camera nor the projector. Perhaps it came from a desire to keep it from dragging as it would have if played at a slower pace, being overburdened with scenes some of which were not necessary. This hurry also seemed to hinder the acting. One of the most pleasing players, personally, of the Biograph Company took the leading role as the wife. Her work has often shown a very commendable excellence. But in this picture, and even at some of the critical points, she seemed to lose grasp of the situation and failed to get depth in her interpretation by smiling. One commendably acted part is that of the maid. The child is very pleasing, although one feels that the producer was at fault in permitting her to give a melodramatic touch to the scene where she sees the “friend” putting the photograph of the husband’s stenographer in the pocket of the coat the wife and mother is about to mend. This provoked a laugh and was, indeed, very amusing, but it didn’t belong in this particular picture.

“PAID BACK” (Selig), December 28.—An acceptable picture. Yet it is fair criticism to point out that hate is a sterile emotion and that art that deals with love and forgivness makes a deeper and more lasting impression than that which pictures vengeance to us. Art was born to give the soul wings and a sky to fly up into. It is not hampered in dealing with evil; but the best use of shadow is to set forth the bright colors. The first scene of this picture gives us a father who disowns his daughter because she will marry a man whom he dislikes. With praiseworthy economy of our attention, the scenes that follow show this young women widowed with one child. Later, she is greyhaired and her son has grown to manhood. She is dying and her last request to her father for forgiveness is brutally denied. The son and grandson is a reporter. Through him, a charge of bribery is brought home to the old judge, his grandfather. The judge pleads with him for mercy; but he shows to him his last harsh note to his daughter: “No, you have made your bed and must lie in it.”

Independent.

“THE TRINITY” (Imp), January 4.—The trinity is made up by an artist, who makes his home with his old friend, the village taxidermist, and his niece, a ward left to him by the death of his brother. The dramatic interest comes with the advent of the niece and the fear that her coming may separate the two friends. The niece and the artist fall in love. Then the taxidermist is afraid that he is going to lose them both, but they promise to live next door and to look out for him always. It is a well-acted, intimate picture of home life, very pleasing in sentiment and will doubtless be well liked.

“THE BLOOD VENGEANCE” (Ambrosio), January 3.—This is the second D’Annuncio play to be pictured by the Ambrosio people. In both cases the closely knit quality of the Italian poet’s scenarios is apparent, yet the story of the former, “Jario’s Daughter,” was more interesting. This picture deals with little else but murder and suicide; but the lighting and settings are well chosen and the effect is an eerie, literary atmosphere that is very commendable. A little bag of squirming, poisonous aspics is brought into the palace of the hero of the picture by his sister. She intends to murder a woman with whom her brother is infatuated and has been invited to do this deed by her mother’s ghost who has asked vengeance on her murderess. She finds the woman dead, killed by the man. The horror produced by the bag of snakes is tremendous.

“MR. FATTY’S ADVENTURES” (Ambrosio), January 3.—On the same reel with the above this laughable trick-film comedy is very welcome. If an automobile runs into Fatty, so much the worse for the automobile.

“TAMING A HUSBAND” (Majestic), January 7.—A comedy that might have been suggested by a Lubin picture of some months ago. It was reviewed at length on page 993 of M. P. World of December 23.

“THE PASSING” (Thanhouser), January 2.—A picture that in its scenes alone is very pleasing, but that, in its deeper meaning, makes a different and far stronger appeal. It shows the mother of a single child, a son. Her husband is frivolous and doesn’t care for her. The son dies. The woman is very much alone after that; but she sees the spirit of her child and when she is happy can even play with him. As the child would have grown, so she sees this spirit who is her companion in happy hours growing up. There is an unusual, but beautifully spiritual idea behind this. It’s a very valuable picture. It is a contribution to the cause of moving pictures. The mechanical work in the picture is very skilfully done.

“MIDWINTER TRIP TO LOS ANGELES FROM PASADENA” (American), January 1.—This delightful travelog gives us the midwinter sights seen by the tourist who takes the motor car trip between the two cities in Southern California. It includes a trip up Mt. Lowe. For a few feet in this part of the film the pictures are a bit trying to the eyes, but most of the film is clear and very good indeed. The motor car carries the traveler out of Pasadena by Marengo Avenue, lined with pepper trees in beautiful, thick foliage, and then takes him through a park-like country. He also will see some tremendous mountain views. The tour will also show him an ostrich farm, an alligator farm and a pigeon farm, where he will see half a million pigeons being fed. It is an instructive, entertaining picture, one well worth while.

“THE MISADVENTURES OF A CLAIM AGENT” (American), January 4.—The claim agent, in this picture, had charge of government lands, it seems, and made a record of each as it was taken up. The picture is a character comedy of which the claim agent, an amusing countryman in love. is the center. The girl preferred a young miner who had just opened a claim. The agent got jealous and tried to jump the claim, but was foiled by the girl. The picture doesn’t drag, but it isn’t up to the best “Americans.”

"TAMING WILD HORSES FOR USE IN 'FLYING A' PICTURES" (American), January 4.—An instructive picture that is also lively. The wild horses give the cowboy actors some real work to do.

"THE TENDERFOOT'S SACRIFICE" (Nestor), January 3.—There is a horseback runaway in this picture that, for speed and nerve on the part of the players, leaves nothing on the real thing. The tenderfoot and the ranch girl were out riding. She had been warned not to ride that horse; it had been locoed, but went out none the less. The horse bolted and did it in the best style. The tenderfoot tried to catch up. He had almost done it, but in trying to catch the girl he fell from his own horse at full speed. A moment later one of a bunch of punchers, who also were following, did make the rescue, pulling the girl off the crazy horse. It is for this man's sake that the tenderfoot makes his sacrifice, which is really common sense. The girl loves him, but he is dying of consumption. He tries with a good measure of success to make the girl despise him. Some may think that he overdid it a little, but it doesn't greatly matter. The picture is acceptable.

"DESPERATE DESMOND FAILS" (Nestor), January 6.—This picture falls slightly below the last before it in both fun and interest, but it is neither dull nor stupid. Its most amusing feature is Desmonde's devil wagon that can appear in the middle of a beautiful meadow, where the fair Rosamond and Claude are chasing butterflies and, after the fair one has been captured, disappear in a cloud of smoke. Claude, even with soldiers to help in the chase, would have had much trouble tracking the villain had it not been for cigarettes with D. D. printed on them that served as a clue to lead him. Desperate takes refuge among Indians and is discovered, but even then he would have escaped with the fair one in the moving tepee (wait 'till you see it) had not a forest fire hemmed him in. But he is foiled.

"OSTRICH FARM NEAR PASADENA, CAL." (Nestor), January 6.—This farm has been pictured several times. This is an instructive and amusing item, however.

"AN UNLUCKY PRESENT" (Nestor), January 1.—A story somewhat out of the ordinary and, although not literally a life portrayal, there is something in the motivity of its characters that has its counterpart in life. It's a love story; a story of a quarrel. The man was a young lawyer and the girl a very pretty manicure girl. The disturbing element was the lawyer's first client, a rich woman, who made the sweetheart jealous. The lovers had made up and the lawyer promised to send her a present. It had been long expected. He, with great difficulty, bought a diamond ring, and put it in a box of candy. The girl, seeing only the candy, in great disappointment threw the whole into the fire. There was an unpleasant time for both lover and sweetheart for a while. The fire, however, was only of wood, and the diamond ring was found in the coals. There is a pretty "making-up" scene. It is a prettily-acted picture, also well set and photographed.

"GETTING HIS MAN" (Bison), December 29.—A picture of Western bad man and sheriff, but one with more freshness and novelty than usual. The sheriff got the man, wanted for bank-breaking, and secured the stolen money. The man was handcuffed in a room of the hotel while the sheriff waited for a chance to take him to jail. The sheriff began to gamble at the faro table; presently he had lost all the money he captured. This pleased the bad man greatly. He made a compact with the sheriff to get the money back by stealing it and kept his promise, although it cost him his life and he might have escaped. This is a decided improvement over the conventional Western scenarios. The picture is well conducted, although there are two scenes in it in which the bad man rolls down a steep embankment. It is speedy and very interesting.

"IN THE DAYS OF THE SIX NATIONS" (Republic), January 7.—A Colonial story in two reels, telling Cooper's story, "The Last of the Mohicans." The narrative is followed closely, both as to characters and to incidents, and the picture is drawn on a big scale, its frame the North Woods. It isn't stinted at all; the Indians are numerous and so are the troops. Fort Edward is shown; it is the same as in this company's recent release, "The Pride of Lexington." The chief characters are Major Heyward, the general's two daughters, the psalm singer, Hawkeye; the two Mohicans and Magua, the treacherous guide. The portrayal of so worthy a story in this artistic and lavish way is highly commendable and it is to be hoped that the Republic Company will find it profitable enough to encourage others. It has some minor faults and one or two anachronisms which are not very important.

"OLD PAPERS, OLD SOUVENIRS" (Eclair), January 4.—A picture of French business life, with a slight plot, which is made clear and is pleasingly acted. The manufacturer found his cashier stealing from him and compelled him to sign a paper admitting it and also the debt. Years passed, the manufacturer was dead, and his son had fallen into the hands of this dishonest cashier. The mother discovered the old slip of paper and made it uncomfortable for the cashier. It is melodramatically acted, but is effective.

"CHARLIE TAKES HIS HOLIDAYS" (Eclair), January 4.—A comic trick film with a touch of burlesque. Charlie accepted an invitation to take dinner and then to see some fireworks. He touched the fireworks off before the time and they sent him home in a basket.

"DIVORCONS" (Eclair, American), January 2.—Sardou's play furnished the scenario for this very pretty picture, very acceptable in both settings and in the acting, especially in the leading lady's part, which is taken by a very pretty player. The thread of the story can be easily followed. The picture makes a very commendable offering.

"HIS NEW WIFE" (Imp), January 1.—A country-village farcical story of two comical characters, Ebenezer Skate and his new wife. Eb's wife got drunk on cider. The elder was coming to call, so Eb wheeled his wife out to the barn in the wheelbarrow; she was very fat. A small boy saw the wife being wheeled out and spread the report that Eb had murdered her. He had just got rid of the elder when the sheriff came with the "boys." They knew what the matter was, of course. The picture is commendable in several ways. It is well designed and well acted. It also has the atmosphere of a certain kind of country story in a marked degree. Country stories of this kind are apt to have a certain inoffensive coarseness.

"PLAYING THE GAME" (Imp), January 6.—The game was golf and the invalid, who had been drinking hard, was told to play it for exercise by the doctor. He played it in a very comfortable way, from a wheelchair, in which he was pushed around the links. It is amusing.

"BACK TO HIS OLD HOME TOWN" (Imp), January 6.—A comedy in which Abner, a real farmer, unfortunately resembled a moving picture actor who chanced to miss the train that Abner caught. The results at the next station were only the beginning of difficulties, and of the richest kind of fun. It is, believe this reviewer, a comedy that will make audiences laugh very heartily. It is very good indeed.

"TWO OLD MEN" (Reliance), January 6.—A picture for human beings, one that such can like thoroughly with no drawback. Its theme is the friendship between two old men, both musicians, whose rooms were next to each other in a poor boarding house. Each heard the other's playing and so they became acquainted. The picture's value comes from the quality of this friendship, which is very fine and human. It is a picture that will make a very wide appeal and will be popular with all sorts and conditions of people.

"OUR POOR RELATIONS" (Solax), January 5.—Probably the only people who haven't poor relations are those of us who have no relations at all or are poor ourselves. They are the gall of social climbers. The object of this excellent picture is to show the selfishness of the ambitious ones whose sole aim is to be a big success. The strength comes from the wisdom of the scenario writer, but it would have been of scant avail without competent interpretation and the freedom from exaggeration and sentimentality that makes this picture a strong work of art. The story is heart-gripping and the acting, simple and true; the scenes, skilfully chosen and made, and the lighting which, of course, includes photography, since we are criticising results, add to it and bring it home to our humanity at every point. The Solax Company is beginning the new year extremely well.

"THE BLOOD OF THE POOR" (Champion), January 1.—There are some very good things in this picture; the man who takes the part of the poor Jewish father does excellent work. These scenes, dealing with this poor family, are very pathetic; they would have been heart-breaking if the scenes, on the other side, in the rich man's family, had been more truthful as to the thread of action running through them, the story weaving the two classes of scenes together. The picture of the wedding party at the rich man's is very lively and interesting.

"THE KID OF ROARING CAMP" (Champion), January 3.—The kid was a very pleasing little girl, the miner's daughter. She was still young enough to play with dolls when her father was killed by his own blast. Two days later, her mother died; she was alone in the wilds. A stranger passed and helped her bury her mother, and took her with him to Roaring Camp, where she finds a woman who will look after her, and friends. It's an acceptable picture but the first part is better than the rest. The acting of the mother and child in the early scenes has a homely strength that is better than anything else in the picture. There is not much that's cheerful in the picture.

"ARTISTIC EARTHENWARE IN THE MAKING" (Lux), January 5.—A fascinating picture of pottery making and finishing, also decorating. It is a very instructive film. It also contains specimens of the work of different periods. It is as good as a lecture.

"THROUGH THE AGONY COLUMNS" (Lux), January 5.—The agony columns were the columns of the newspapers. The young married couple had fallen out. By means of the "personal" columns of the Paris papers they each made an appointment to meet each other. The joke pleased them so much that they made up. The quality of the picture comes from the personality of the two leading players, which in both cases is very pleasing. The photographs are commendable.

"THE TEMPTRESS" (Great Northern), January 6.—The Great Northern leading lady has partrayed, in this remarkable picture, the character of an unscrupulous, passionate and wilful woman and has done it with much strength. It is a very tragic picture. The seductress tried to attract her husband's young secretary, who was the father of a family and had just been through a period of neediness and lack of work. Refused, she falsely accuses the young man and has him discharged. His wife, who is sick, is killed by the letter the enraged husband sends to him. He attempts to kill the seductress, but is stopped by his child. The picture ends with the young father and his little girl kneeling beside the bier of the dead mother. It is a very commendable picture.

NEW LUBIN PRESS AGENT.

H. A. D'Arcy, formerly press agent for Liebler & Co. and the Shuberts, has been appointed manager of the publicity department of the Lubin Film Company, of Philadelphia.

LEVI COMPANY PURCHASES PATENT RIGHTS.

Fred A. Appelbaum, secretary and treasurer of the Levi Company of New York, was in Chicago December 30th and closed a deal with the American Motion Slide Company, by which he purchased the exclusive privilege of using the patents of the Spiegel motion slide in manufacturing song slides that will move with lifelike action. Mr. Appelbaum says his company will begin making the slides as soon as he returns to New York.

The American Motion Slide Company, with Mr. Spiegel as general manager, will continue to make the Spiegel motion slides for advertising and announcement slides.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

NIAGARA FALLS A "BACK DROP" FOR PICTURE.

The Thanhouser offices announce that they have received the first negative produced by their special Niagara Falls company, and will put the reel on the market as a regular release Friday, Jan. 19, under the title of "A Niagara Honeymoon." This is the company that was sent to the Falls with the best plots on hand at the Thanhouser studios, to play them with the "World's Greatest Cataract" as a "back drop." The first release is a comedy-drama.

Scene from "A Niagara Honeymoon" (Thanhouser).

Its locale is all the way from New York to Niagara. Beginning in the railroad depot in the metropolis, the story takes you to every point of the famous Falls. The situations are worked out in the spots that have been snapped by a million "still" cameras. And these spots are "caught" as only a motion camera could catch them. One happy scene has the Horseshoe Falls as a background. Another the American Falls; another, Prospect Point; another, Whirlpool Rapids; another, Goat Island; another, the Suspension Bridge. The reel will cause a sensation in houses numbering lovers of nature amongst the patrons.

THANHOUSER FILMS "DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE."

We have long known that Thanhouser had designs on Robert Louis Stevenson's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and therefore were not surprised to learn of its scheduling on that producer's list of "Greatest January" releases. The day is Tuesday, Jan. 16th. The production is made in a single reel, but the Thanhouser offices announce one, three and eight sheet lithos for it, since it is essentially a feature picture. This "paper" is obtainable at any Sales Company exchange.

Scene from "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" (Thanhouser).

The present production of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde is not one that is calculated to inspire horror or dread in the spectator. Of course, much appears that will convey emphatically the terrible change that the drug wrought in Stevenson's wonderful character, but the emphasis is made with a finesse that is typical of the New Rochelle manufacturer. The picture well shows how the evil in Jekyll's nature oblivated the good, and will renew attention in the fine problem that Stevenson presents in this famous story.

"A MAN'S A MAN" (Solax).

For centuries the popular impression of the Jew has been gleaned from the material, the unrelenting and the uncompromising figure of Shylock as portrayed by Shakespeare in the "Merchant of Venice." Up to very recently the stage-Jew was the only type which furnished universal amusement. Vaudeville has had its own way of showing him and the legitimate has had its way. Burlesque has had still another way, in which it portrayed the unfortunate brethren of Israel. Although each of these branches of amusement apparently attempted to represent the Jew with fidelity, not one of them saw possibilities in showing the Jew in another way than in long whiskers, derby hat down to the ears and hands moving like the fins of a fish.

Within the last few years what has been commonly as the mirth-provoking stage-Jew has been gradually disappearing from view and in his place has come the new type of Jew—the American Jew—the Jew who is doing his share in American business, society and politics. No longer are Jews being represented in the old ways, but they are showing him in his new environment, where his manhood, his sentiments and his convictions are not burlesqued, but are idealized.

Scene from "A Man's a Man" (Solax).

In the Solax production of "A Man's a Man," which is to be released Friday, January 19, a Jew is represented as a man and not a subject of ridicule. The poor pedler, although he is wronged by a thoughtless and happy-go-lucky mixer, not only forgives, but is big enough to protect the offender from mob violence.

The production shows one of the finest managed mob scenes seen on any stage. There are nearly seventy-five people in the mob and they are all good supers, all there for a purpose and strengthen the ensemble. They are led into the Jew's home to lynch a man who has run down a child. The man is in hiding in the Jew's home. Although it is his own child who has been run down, the Jew protects the offender.

There is an interesting counter-plot which brings out strongly the emotional and tensely dramatic values of the entire production.

"IN THE NORTHERN WOODS" (Imp).

The beauty of snow scenes as subjects for the moving icture camera is well brought out in this film, which takes or its theme the treachery of a half-breed who forms one f a group of logging campers, working in Canada.

The half-breed bites the hand that succors him and later ttempts to insult his benefactor's wife. Caught redhanded, is life is spared, but he escapes hanging only to fall by the ullet of an indignant member of the camp upon whom the alf-breed turns his rage.

Scene from "In the Northern Woods" (Imp).

The story deals with some rugged but picturesque phases f Canadian life. The film is replete with the atmosphere f the subject; the villainy of the half-breed; the tenderness nd heroism of the wife; the manliness of the logsmen; all his is vividly portrayed.

An Imp drama is always remarkable for the powerfulness f its acting; and "In the Northern Woods" is no exception o the rule. The release date is Jan. 11.

"THE LOAFER" (Essanay Western Drama).

"The Loafer," a coming Essanay release, is a fine exmple of the wonderful technical skill possessed by its proucer. As a dramatic composition the scenario is almost perfect model of construction and one which the scenario ontributors to the various film companies would do well o study and analyze.

The story has to do with the curing of a town loafer. oe Simmons, the loafer, has enjoyed a lazy existence for he better part of his married life and is perfectly contented o let his wife make the living, even at the expense of her ealth, while he loafs about the village grocery, swapping stories with other of the less industrious citizens of the own. It is not until his wife, worn out through hours of drudgery over the washtub, is taken sick, that the citizens decide to take action. Although they have repeatedly hreatened Joe with a good horse-whipping if he does not get to work, Joe has taken little heed to their warnings.

He is brought to realize the seriousness of the thing when one day he returns home and finds the following note posted on the door of his shack: "The people of this community want you to go to work and not let your wife and child work themselves to death."

However, Joe pays no attention to the warning and it is a week later that he is visited by a half dozen masked men, dragged out of his house and severely lashed until he promises to get to work. When he is released,' however, he is blue with rage, and shaking his fist at the mob, shouts: "If the time ever comes that I find out the leader of this mob I'm going to kill him!"

Next morning, after a night of misery, Joe resolves to get to work. He is busy fixing up his rusty farm implements when he is visited by Jim Wrayburn, a neighbor, who is leading two work horses. Jim makes known the reason for his visit when he hands the reins of the horses to Joe and tells him that the horses are a present and that he wants him to get to work and make a man of himself.

Years pass by. The whipping that Joe had been given has indeed made a man of him, for he is now prosperous, the wealthiest man in the county. Starting out to town one morning he is accosted by Bill Lewis, a ne'er-do-well, who has not been known to have done any work for the better part of his life. The cringing loafer causes a feeling of revulsion to Simmons, who tells him to be off and earn his bread like other men. Bill turns away, but stops long enough to ejaculate: "Yeh got money now an' stuck up, but you don't remember the time I helped to horsewhip you!"

Simmons for a moment is stunned, then with a cry of rage he throws himself on Lewis and yanks the cringing man to his feet, and forces from him the information that Jim Wrayburn was the leader of the gang. Simmons has never forgotten the horsewhipping and his oath of revenge has never been abrogated. At last he has learned the leader of his humiliators of years ago and will have revenge.

Jim Wrayburn has not been so financially successful as the man he horsewhipped years before. Indeed, at the moment that Simmons has set forth to revenge the horsewhipping, Jim is threatened with being ejected from his home. A mortgage, long overdue, is about to be foreclosed.

Outside, Joe with the shotgun, enters the gate as the old lawyer with the mortgage is leaving the house. A moment of explanation and Joe asks to see the paper. The mortgage is handed to him and after scanning it carefully he goes down in his pocket and brings out his purse, purchases the mortgage and goes into the house.

It is not with any feeling of great relief that Jim learns that Simmons, the wealthiest, stingiest, the always grasping neighbor, has bought the mortgage. He is sure that Simmons bought it for the sole purpose of a good investment and his surprise can be imagined when Simmons hands him over the paper with a scribbled note pinned inside. Before he has time to read the note Simmons slips out of the room. The note reads: "Given in payment for the good a whipping and two horses did for me."

"The Loafer" is a full reel production and will be released Saturday, January 20.

THE SUN MURDERS.

The accompanying weird illustration represents the dramatic value of a scientific fact, as utilized by the Powers Duplex Studio staff in a production called "A Mystery," which will be released early in February. Mr. Powers has taken advantage of this production to plant the moving picture one step further in the hearts of the public. This he accomplishes through a unique idea in construction. The story runs along interestingly until the last scene, in which circumstances force one of the characters into a peculiar frame of mind; her next move is conjectural, and just at this point an announcement is flashed which offers to the audience a prize of $500 for the letter that best tells how the heroine should proceed, and why. There is no question that this will make the patrons talk, and Mr. Powers should receive some interesting returns.

Synopsis.

The good people living in the Solax community, realizing that they have cause to make merry and celebrate before the advent of a New Year, because the Almighty had been so fortunate as to guide their bread-winning footsteps in the direction of the happy atmosphere of the Solax Studio, banked together, like the big happy family which they are, and gave expression to their happiness in the form of a gift to the immediate cause of their good fortune and sunshine. The scenes present a people full of enthusiasm and good cheer. The plot is not a thick one, but the execution progresses smoothly and with "spirit." The events took the leading figure entirely by surprise, and her emotion and her gratitude brought a lump to her throat.

Mme. Blache and Group of Solax Players.

Scene One. The Surprise—Morning.

The good people gathered in the studio and unveiled a pedestal and a bronze figure—a copy from Rodin. The Megaphone then visited the office of The Cause and waylaid her in the Studio. Then Magda Foy, the Solax Kid, revealed the secret, and then the Megaphone makes it more explicit by expressing the sentiments of the Merrymakers and all concerned. (Loud applause.) Madame, overcome with the flattering tribute, is unable to speak. Then up spoke Kid Pirate and threatened that she, The Cause, must herself carry the 200-pound statue home.

Scene Two. "Good Spirits"—Afternoon.

A suspicious noise is heard. Sounds like the sizzling and popping of corks from bottles. The Master of Ceremonies, at the head of the mob, attacks the Studio. The mob finds the tables set and glasses filled. Sounds of sizzling and bubbling proceed. Telltale tears soon begin to appear in many eyes, and lids show an abnormal tendency to droop. Some chuckle and some laugh. All are happy and contented. More speechmaking and applause. (Speech indistinct and incoherent.)

Scene Three. Later—Jealousy.

A near relative to The Cause and a neighbor of us all was jealous of the aforesaid tribute paid to his kin, so, in order that he may not be outshone in hospitality, invited the mob to invade the sanctified quarters of the Gaumont Company, where he showed some wonderful Gaumont productions.

"THE BEST POLICY" (American).

Ever watch a dress rehearsal? Then you remember that the stage director spent much of his time in tearing his hair and shouting, "Give it more snap! Don't die on the scene Action! Action! Action! That's what I want."

Action!—there is the keynote of the American release fo January 29, entitled "The Best Policy." The picture opens with a spicy bit of action and the scenes are carried along with a snap and go to the very last picture.

That it was a study in pantomimic facial expression was the remark of one critic, caused, no doubt, by the fact tha all scenes are staged in dense underbrush and the characters are moved so close to the camera as to practically fill the entire curtain. The story is breezy, decidedly new and novel in thought, and delightfully executed, and is typically Western.

Three gentlemen, looking somewhat the worse for wear are seen forcing their way through the thick semi-tropica growth of Southern California. Caution is expressed i every movement, for, be it known, these gentlemen are seeking rest and freedom from excitement. If the bag of loot the are carrying between them does not ably express thi thought, the subsequent scene showing the sheriff and a determined-looking band of rangers, posting a reward notic for the capture of three train robbers, certainly does. Th dilapidated trio bear the respective and respectable name of Boggs, Briggs and Boswell.

They camped. They slept—or pretended they did. Bogg and Briggs determined to appropriate all they had, thu leaving Boswell free to mend his ways and clear his conscience. But Boswell overheard and, while the older robber went away to place the treasure in a hollow tree, Boswell bitterly upbraided his companion. So, Briggs relenting the pair decide to give the old man the double cross. Proximity of the rangers prevented Briggs and Boswell fron retiring very far into the underbrush; hence old Boggs overhears and decides to double cross both of them. So h leaves the treasure in the tree and places in his vest a fals package. Then Briggs held him up and secured what h thought was the treasure. Finding it all his own and deciding that a whole loaf is better than a half, he sees n necessity for sharing it with Boswell. A chase ensues. Boswell catches Briggs, sits upon him and removes the loo quite handily. And then—horror of horrors—they discove the gross fraud perpetrated upon them!

Meanwhile, Boggs has lodged himself comfortably agains a tree. He draws from his shirt the real loot and examine it long and earnestly, looking up with a pleasant smile jus in time to sight down the wrong end of a gun barrel. Th law catches tight hold of poor Boggs's collar, and Brigg and Boswell are left alone to speculate on the folly an futility of material things.

"The Best Policy" is well acted from start to finish. Th story is largely told in facial expression and the pantomim is considerably above par. The photography is excellen

F. & E. CO. ACTIVE.

The Feature and Educational Film Company's plans fo 1912 have been given out by the president, Mr. E. Mande baum, and already several of them have been put into exec tion. The company will release an average of one speci two or three reel subject a month for State rights sale. Du ing the coming summer a factory and studio will be esta lished at Cleveland, where the general offices are now locate

On January 2, another branch office was opened, this tim in Indianapolis. It is in charge of E. H. Brient, a well-know film exchange man. This makes three branch offices, one i Chicago, others in Detroit and Indianapolis. The next on to be opened will be in New York.

Two State rights men were started on the road the first the year. Jerome Abrams, in charge of the Chicago offic is covering the West and Northwest, while his brother, Be Abrams, from the Cleveland offices, is traveling through th East and South. C. R. Lundgren has been appointed assista manager of the Chicago office and he will be in charge whil Mr. Abrams is out of the city.

The phenomenal success of the Feature and Educatio Film Company's three-reel production "Zigomar" has cause a clamor for booking from exhibitors everywhere and for th benefit of those who do not know where to secure bookin the company suggests that they write to the general office at Cleveland, and their inquiries will be turned over to th State rights buyers. The following States have been sol and exhibitors in these States will have an immediate oppo tunity to obtain booking: Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Ohio, Pen sylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Mississippi, Louisian Texas, Kansas, Missouri, California, Nevada, Oregon an Michigan.

"NEXT" (Majestic).

A comedy that will pass muster as a highly entertaining photoplay, quite original in its idea. It will no doubt strike a popular chord and if it does it can be properly called a barber-shop chord, as the action all has to do with a barber, a barber-shop, a manicure girl and a susceptible young customer with prospects. Tony the barber is badly smitten with the charms of his manicure lady, and is more than a little jealous of young gentlemen customers. Enter the hero, who is the son of wealthy parents. While being shaved he is attracted by the new manicure girl, and it seems to be a case of mutual admiration or love at first sight, much to the chagrin of Tony the barber. Business gets bad and Tony advertises the place for sale. The young customer buys it and takes Tony's job. The new owner's parents find him there in the embrace of the manicure girl, and are shocked at the announcement that the young pair intend to marry. They disown their son, who, nevertheless, marries the girl. Lonesomeness finally gets the better of the old folks and they come back to forgive the young couple, just as Tony is about to set off a bomb in the barber shop. To sooth his wounded feelings, the young man makes Tony a present of the shop and returns home with his parents and his wife. On the whole, it is quite entertaining, although the action seems rather fast and jerky, which can be obviated by running the machine slowly.

MISS ISABEL REA.

Miss Isabel Rea, well and favorably known in filmdom as the "Imp Girl," on account of her long association with that company, paid a visit to the office of the Moving Picture World recently, looking bright and cheerful after a two months' vacation in the mountains.

When asked as to her future plans, Miss Rea's answer was, "I really don't know just yet. At the termination of my contract with the Imp Company, which expired October 31st, I was mighty glad to forget work and get away for rest and quiet. Now that I have had my fill of both, I am again desirous of casting my lot with another good company, and will entertain offers from first-class companies."

Miss Rea, though a young woman, is by no means new the professional world, having had six years' dramatic rience on the legitimate stage before breaking into the moving picture business. She is one of the most versatile actresses working in pictures, and possesses a pleasing appearance and a charming personality. Although ingenué parts are her specialty, Miss Rea has played many leads with surprising satisfaction, which proves her ability as an actress.

MODEL PHOTOPLAY HOUSES IN NEWARK.

The managers of the Model Amusement Company, which operates three picture theaters in Newark, N. J., take especial pride in the fact that their houses, the Belmont Square, the Ideal, and the Royal, are really models of their kind. It is the endeavor of the management of these houses to make them the cleanest, most sanitary and most enjoyable. Particular care is taken that all legal requirements are lived up to, and every possible opportunity to make the surroundings pleasant and the pictures good is grasped. Henry Robrecht is president of the company, and its secretary and treasurer is Jac. Amsterdam.

"IMP" WILL HAVE HOUSE ORGAN.

Announcement comes from the Independent Moving Picture Co., of New York, that it is about to issue a house organ to be called "The Implet." Mr. Thomas Bedding, F.R.P.S., press representative of the "Imp," will edit the "Implet." With Bedding on the "Implet" and Stryckmans on "Film Fancies," look out for an exchange of editorial compliments.

Lao Tze was a Chinaman who died more than a thousand years ago. But his wisdom still lives! He was a wise Chink! Translated, the above bit of brilliant philosophy means:

"Setting the tap-root deep, and making the spreading roots firm, ensure long life to the tree. He who knows how to plant shall not have his plant up-rooted. He who knows how to hold a thing shall not have it taken away."

WISE WORDS!

Make the spreading roots of your business firm, and your business will sprout and spread! Let GEM be the Root of your Tree of Knowledge!

GEM will not only plant the seed, but it will reap the harvest for you.

"He who knows how to hold a thing shall not have it taken away."

Doesn't that apply to Independent exhibitors? Ponder wise old Lao Tze's advice! He had your business in mind when he scrawled those wisdom-words!

GEM WILL GO FAST EVEN IN PHILADELPHIA!

The news from the seat of the Italian-Turkish War is uncertain, but there is nothing uncertain about Gem Quality!

BE HAPPY! YOUR EXCHANGE HAS ORDERED GEM!

It's Marion Leonard, and Sunday, January 21st, this 1912!

TUESDAY, JANUARY 16th

"JACK AND THE BEANSTALK"

CAST.

Jack	Gladys Hulette
His Mother	Miriam Nesbitt
The Giant	Harry Eytinge
The Giant's Wife	Gertrude Clarke
The Fairy	Gertrude McCoy

A fairy tale, as familiar in the homes as a household word, unfolding the adventures of Jack, his triumphant return from the mystic height of the beanstalk with the giant's ill-gotten treasures. The photographic work, in showing the size of the giant and his wife, is little short of wonderful.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17th

(Two subjects on one reel.)

"THE BACHELOR'S WATERLOO"

A Leap Year Story.

CAST.

The Bachelor	Harold M. Shaw
His Waterloo	Mary Fuller
The Bachelor's Friend	Edward Boulden

The heart of a bachelor immune from Cupid's dart, finally succumbs to the irresistible plea of a young and charming woman, who, aided by her friends, takes advantage of a Leap Year opportunity. A lively; fresh comedy.

"A Fifty Mile Ramble Through the Thousand Islands"

St. Lawrence River.

This is a picture taken from the bow of a boat that winds its course along the brimming river and at times passes through the narrow channels in and about the many beautiful islands. Photographically it is superb.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19th

"THE LITTLE ORGANIST"

CAST.

The Little Organist	Bessie Learn
Mrs. Cleves, Her Sister	Miriam Nesbitt
Mrs. Cleves' Little Girl	Edna May Weick
Cyrus Cummins, the Young Minister	Robert Conness
The Deacon	Marc McDermott
Village Gossips	Mrs. Wm. Bechtel Clara Reynolds Smith
The Village Loafer	Charles M. Seay

This tells of the courtship of a young minister and a pretty girl visitor to the town who responded to his call for a volunteer organist. The two village gossips, ever on the lookout for scandal, did their best to make trouble, but happily they were defeated in the end.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20th

"TO SAVE HER BROTHER"

CAST.

District Attorney Nolan	Charles Ogle
Edith, His Daughter	Jessie McAllister
His Son	Harry O'Moore
Jack	Benjamin Wilson
The Sheriff	James Gordon
The Village Jeweler	Charles Sutton

A Western story of continuous interest and out of the ordinary. In order to keep the stigma of disgrace from the brother of the girl he loved the hero himself committed a crime. He is cleared at the end by the brother's confession.

A WORD IN SEASON.

Experienced and intelligent exhibitors know that between New Year's and Easter week is the best time for feature films of the sort of the Pathe "Passion Play," Dante's "Inferno" (Milano production), and "The Crusaders or Jerusalem Delivered." By a singular coincidence every one of the features mentioned is especially suitable for exhibition in and near the Lenten season. To put these features on fittingly and profitably get our booklets "How To Put On the Passion Play," "How To Put On the Crusaders," "How To Put On Dante's Inferno" (Milano production). They contain lectures covering every scene and running evenly with the pictures, musical suggestions and hints as to effects based on experience, together with other valuable matter too great to be enumerated in detail. "How to Put On the Passion Play" is in its second edition and the author has had numerous letters from pleased exhibitors, who have used the booklet to advantage. All these booklets are copyrighted and their author is W. Stephen Bush, whose lectures on motion pictures have attained much popularity, wholly based on their merits. The price of the booklets is nominal, a dollar will bring any of them to your address prepaid.

STATUS OF NEW YORK PICTURE THEATER ORDINANCE.

With the new Board of Aldermen in control at the City Hall, Manhattan, and with a vote already taken which indicated that the Republican and Fusion were in the majority, the fate of the two ordinances affecting moving picture shows before that body, hang in the balance. The White ordinances may never be resurrected, but there is some probability that the ordinances introduced by Michael Furst may again be called to the attention of the Aldermanic body for approval. Mayor Gaynor apparently is very much in favor of this code for the governing of moving picture shows and it seems, too, to be in favor with the proprietors of the different moving picture shows in New York City.

In the last days of the retiring Board of Aldermen Mayor W. J. Gaynor sent this note to the Board of Aldermen in reference to the Furst ordinance: "I transmit herewith a proposed draft for an ordinance regulating moving picture shows. The draft was drawn up by a committee of five appointed by me several months ago. Its chairman, Mr. Michael Furst, will be pleased to confer with any committee to which your honorable board may refer the matter, and make any explanation that may be required. Respectfully, W. J. Gaynor, Mayor."

The two ordinances were on the calendar of the Board of Aldermen for action on the last Tuesday of the session, but they were passed by without any action being taken on them. On the last Friday of the meeting of the Aldermen all the time of the City Fathers was taken up in an endeavor to push through the Building Code, which as everybody now knows was defeated by a close vote and with much disorder in the Aldermanic chamber. This Building Code had many provisions in it that affected theaters and moving picture shows in New York City in regard to interior aisles and construction.

HALLBERG ECONOMIZER USED WITH ALL MAKES M. P. MACHINES.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports many sales of the "Hallberg" in combination with all makes of motion picture machines. Among the more recent, a Simplex with Economizer to Bijou Opera House, Bayonne, N. J. Motiograph with Economizer to H. J. Northrup, Unadilla, N. Y. A special 70-ampere Economizer to be used in connection with Simplex machine at Empire Theater, Richmond, Va. Also spot light, ticket receiver, with other theatrical supplies to the new Criterion Theater, Rutherford, N. J.

THIS IS THE OFFICIAL DOPE.

So many inquiries have been received as to the meaning of "C. G. P. C." that we are permitted to announce that "C. G. P. C." stands for Compagnie Générale des Phonographes et Cinématographes. This is one of the oldest motion picture companies in the world, with offices and factories in nearly all the large cities of the globe and employing about 5,000 people.

ESSANAY.

THE OLD FLORIST (Jan. 15).—An old flower lover purchases a flower stall in a large city when the former proprietor sells out and goes to the West. He makes many friends, among whom are a young boy and girl, sweethearts, who, though not lavish customers, visit Silas' stall every day to buy a few pennies' worth of violets. The old flower seller takes a keen interest in his new-found friends and learns that the two are alone in the big city and that the delicate girl is a consumptive. When it becomes imperative for the girl to have a change of climate, her boyish lover, without any funds of his own, steals from his employer and is forced to serve a short term in prison. At the expiration of his sentence, the former proprietor of the flower stall returns from the West and takes both the young people back to Colorado with him. Here the girl's life is saved and the boy and girl are married.

Edward sets out in pursuit of Tony, bidding his father care for Marion. She seats father in the barber chair. He has received a sharp cut over the eye. She bathes the cut and tenderly administers to his needs. She finally remembers that this man disinherited his son on her account and starts to leave. He holds out his arms to her and asks her if she will not be a daughter to him. Mrs. Robbins comes to the barber shop and gladly learns of her husband's reconciliation with the manicure girl. In the meantime Edward has been busily engaged in pounding Tony and drags him back to the shop. He forgets his rage at Tony in his joy upon learning that his father and mother have taken Marion into the family. He gladly accepts his father's offer to return home, and to the astonishment of Tony, who begs for forgiveness, he handsomely makes him a present of his old barber shop. His father proudly takes his daughter-in-law under his arm, and the reunited family leave for home, while Tony leans back in his chair repeating in bewilderment, "What—Next."

DAD'S WATCH (Jan. 18).—Dr. Billings will not sanction his daughter Mabel marrying her own choice, which in this instance is a tolerably worthy young man, and Jack conspires with a friend to win the old man over by force. Bill, the pal, is an actor of some repute, and the two enter into the scheme with a good deal of zest. It is a pleasant surprise to Dr. Billing to learn that he is invited to take dinner with Dr. O. U. Mastodon, of Washington, and to also meet two well-known professors of the Biffslonian Institute. The doctor is naturally surprised when the professors prove to be of the opposite sex and of a very gay nature. Wine is also served and Dr. Billings becomes unusually jolly. The catastrophe comes when he is left to settle the bill and has to hand over his watch as security. Jack bribes the waiter for the watch and returns it next morning, when he is promised the hand of the doctor's daughter in trade for silence concerning his future father-in-law's escapade of the night before.

THE LITTLE POET (Jan. 19).—Grace Lee, a tall, young woman, has a poet sweetheart who is her opposite in physical appearance, for William Addison Jones is a very small and insignificant sort of a creature even for a poet. Grace's parents have never entertained the idea of her marrying and refuse to even meet the young man. The couple are obliged to elope. Some years later the Joneses find themselves almost on the verge of poverty and are finally forced to write Mommer and Popper to take them back. The answer they get is that while the daughter, and any children, if she has any, may return home, the husband must shift for himself. After some thought this difficulty is circumvented, but in just what manner it will be unfair to tell you.

THE LOAFER (Jan. 20).—Joe Simmons, the town loafer, is warned by the ranch boys that he had better get to work and provide for his family on the penalty of a severe horse-whipping if he does not do so. After repeated warnings the boys take action and Joe is given the lashing he has been promised. Jim threatens that he will kill the ring leader of the band if he ever finds him out, but the boys scoff at the idea. The next morning Jim Wrayburn, the leader in the horse-whipping incident of the day before, calls on Joe and presents him with a team of horses and kindly advice to get to work. Years go by. Joe has become a wealthy ranchman when he learns that it was Wrayburn who had horse-whipped him. Joe has never forgotten the whipping he received and plans to carry out the threat. However, finding Jim about to be turned out of his home, Joe pays off the mortgage and presents it to Jim with a note which says, "Given in payment for the good a whipping and two horses did for me."

GAUMONT.

UNCLE NED'S DIPLOMACY (Jan. 16).—George, a spirted young fellow, falls in love with Nellie, a casino dancer. When his mother hears of the engagement she is very angry. Summoning Uncle Ned, she gives him a large sum of money and asks him to try and buy the "creature" off.

Nellie refuses the offer however, and the excellent uncle, unable to find another way out of the fix, decides to use the money to send George and his sweetheart off to be married.

The old hyprocrite now returns to his sister and announces that the lovers have eloped. Hoping to arrive in time to prevent the marriage, the horrified mother, with Uncle Ned in tow, starts in pursuit, but reaches the church just as the happy couple are leaving.

The mother decides to make the best of the situation and as for Uncle Ned, he thinks of applying for a job in the diplomatic service.

KALEM.

THE DESERT TRAIL (Jan. 15).—Dick was in love with May, but when he asked her to become his bride he was told that she was to be married to his friend Jack who, within the period of a year as requested by her father, was to demonstrate his ability to provide for a wife. Jack, having heard of a vein of gold at the other side of the desert, asked his friend Dick to accompany him. Dick accepted the invitation and after several months of hardship across the desert, Jack found the precious mineral. So far Dick had been faithful to his friend, but one night he was inspired with a desire to desert him, thereby causing his death before the year's end, so taking the burros away which bore the scanty supplies he made his way homeward. Arriving at May's residence he told her that her sweetheart expired on the desert and showed her the gold which Jack had found. The news so affected May that she became prostrated and cried herself to sleep. In her dreams she had a vision of Jack struggling on the sands. When she awoke she told of her vision to Bob, a faithful friend, and appealed to him to go in search of her lover. Bob was not long in arriving at the desert and after searching for some time he found Jack, whom he brought home, where a happy reunion took place and where the villainy of a false friend was exposed.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANT (Jan. 17).—Dimitri and his sister, Amuska, stopped before the gate of the Brokoff estate. Even the sight of life, which knew not hunger and want, was a relief to these impoverished peasants. With no thought of trespassing, they watched the gaiety of the land owner and his family. At that moment a cruel groom appeared and was about to strike the young woman, when Dimitri shielded her with his arms. The Princess Olga, Brokoff's daughter, happened to be riding by when she saw this heartless attack upon the two peasants and quickly came to their rescue, bidding the groom begone. This gained for her the eternal gratitude of the young Dimitri.

A few days later as Dimitri and his aged father were gathering wood, a stray bullet from the rifle of a nobleman engaged in a pigeon shoot, wounded the old man. Dimitri rushed to his father's side and the young man's outcry of dismay brought the nobleman, who merely gave their victim a glance of contempt and passed by in the manner of the Pharisee.

When Dimitri had assisted his father to their cottage, he came upon the highway and met a large party of rebellious peasants, who had prepared a petition, demanding a living wage from the land owners. Prince Brokoff and his friends happened by, read the petition and scornfully refused to consider it. This caused a spirit of anarchy among the peasants who set forth to take the Brokoff estate by storm. In vain Dimitri argued with them the futility of their attack. Finding he could accomplish nothing, he ran quickly to the nobleman's castle and forced his way into the banquet hall, where he endeavored to picture to Brokoff the horrors of the coming rebellion. There was but one listening ear, that of a dignitary of the church, who went to the steps and by his presence, which always had a strong influence upon the peasantry, induced them to depart.

The Princess Olga had already been given an insight into the conditions of the people and now Dimitri's bravery appealed to her so strongly that she persuaded her father to give the peasantry an audience, which resulted in the institution of new conditions.

THE TWO SPIES (Jan. 19).—Vera Cross, a Southern sympathizer, volunteers to carry a message from Gen. Plough at Fort Barancas to Gen. Krantz. Disguising herself as a farmer's daughter Vera starts out to perform her mission. While on her way she meets Ralph Christie, of the Federal Army, who has been sent to learn the strength of Fort Barancas. Although Ralph is disguised as a young farmer, Vera becomes suspicious of him. While traveling together over a short piece of the road Christie protects Vera from an attack of three ruffians, thereby earning her gratitude. As the country seems infested with stragglers from the army, Christie decides to continue with Vera until she has passed out of the danger zone.

At an opportune moment Christie learns of Vera's mission, and she discovers his true identity, while Christie plans to use Vera's dispatch as a means to enter Fort Barancas, Vera determines to detain him by a stratagem. Her plan, however, is only temporarily successful, and he arrives at Fort Barancas before her.

Believing that duty to her country requires exposure of the spy she is about to denounce him, but love proves stronger than duty.

In the final scene we find Christie and Vera standing at the gate of Vera's home, having come to a mutual understanding, and Christie as he departs tells the patriotic Southern girl, "After the war is over I will come for you."

BIOGRAPH.

BRAVE AND BOLD (Jan. 15).—It takes a brave man to sit calmly in a dental chair and have the heartless, unsympathetic Knight of the Forceps project through one's maxillary ivory. Mr. Blowhard is relating his great deeds of daring to a party of admiring friends, when he is seized with a toothache. He spurns the liquid painkiller proffered by his wife, and rushes bravely to the dentist to have the obstreperous molar yanked, but, oh well—

DID MOTHER GET HER WISH? (Jan. 15).—Mamma desired a rich husband for her daughter Nellie, and so Tom, who was simply a clerk, was by no means her choice, though he was Nellie's. Harry Jones was favored until mamma reads in the newspaper that Mr. Brown has become heir to $30,000. This freezes Jones out, so he "gets rich quick" by writing on a newspaper bulletin-board that he has inherited $30,000,000. Jones' stock "booms." However, both Brown and Jones appear with a minister, when mamma receives a letter -"Dear Mamma:—If you wish to see Jones and Brown married—marry them yourself. Nellie"—she having eloped with Tom.

THE OLD BOOKKEEPER (Jan. 18).—The old bookkeeper is the beloved of not only his employer, but the fellow employees on account of his generous, benevolent nature. He believes in the bibical injunction "Give to him that asketh thee." His salary he dispenses in charity, always ready to help the afflicted. His employer goes on an extended auto trip and leaves his business absolutely in charge of a new manager, who immediately finds a reason for discharging the old bookkeeper. The poor old fellow, unable to secure another position, and having used his money in charity, is without that with which to pay his rent, hence he is evicted. Without shelter, he goes to his employer's house to wait his return, which is expected. Here he surprises a couple of burglars and holds them at bay in a most unique way until help arrives.

EDISON.

JACK AND THE BEANSTALK (Jan. 16).—We see Jack and his mother very poor and the project of selling the cow discussed. Jack meets the familiar figure of the butcher who bargains with him for the cow and finally Jack consents to part with the animal for the wonderful beans which will grow up over night until they reach the sky. He takes them to his mother, and, of course, she is heart-broken and throws the beans out of the window.

The next morning the vine not only covers the window, but reaches far above the top of the house out of sight in the clouds, and we see Jack start to climb upward.

Upon arriving at the giant's castle Jack meets the ogre's wife, who towers majestically above him, and after some parley is invited in, on his plea of hunger. Before he can be served the giant is heard and Jack is hidden in the kettle. The giant comes on and then follows the familiar scenes in which the ogre calls for his bags of gold, his magic harp and the wonderful hen that lays the golden eggs. While the giant dozes Jack takes first one of his treasures and then another and carries them to the top of the vine, where he throws them down toward the earth. But when he steals the harp the giant awakens, follows him and would probably catch him but for the good fairy, who, standing at the top of the vine, trips the giant and makes him lose his footing.

Jack arrives safely at the bottom of the vine, shows his mother the treasures and then above them they hear the coming of the giant. Seizing an axe, Jack chops the vine and when it falls to the ground the giant tumbles after it, his immense head nearly filling the stage.

THE BACHELOR'S WATERLOO (Jan. 17).—A bachelor's friend views matrimony with favor, and knowing his sister to be rather fond of the bachelor, endeavors to bring about a match. He invites him to attend a stag card game one afternoon, having previously arranged with his sister and several young ladies, to whom the bachelor is known as a woman hater, to appear upon the scene of card playing as if by accident, in the hopes that he may change his life of single blessedness to that of a Benedict. The friend's expectations are not realized, for the bachelor's discomfort becomes apparent as soon as the ladies appear; he does not enjoy their singing nor does he partake of the wine. He does, however, find great pleasure in the society of his friend's sister, who manages to change his career.

Returning later for his book he finds the young lady alone. Instinctively she feels her love reciprocated and taking advantage of the leap year privilege, makes a proposal of marriage and is accepted.

A FIFTY-MILE RAMBLE THROUGH THE THOUSAND ISLANDS (Jan. 17).—Among the beauty spots of the world that section of the St. Lawrence River which includes the Thousand Islands and the wonderful channels between them, is one of the most unique and picturesque. The boat which makes the famous ramble trip among the islands passes by scenes representing almost every stage in the development of civilization, from the wild rocks and trees which cover some of the islands, to the millionaire palaces with flower-beds, lawns, summer houses, etc. Some of the islands are on the Canadian side of the river and some on the American. In one case the owner of one of the beautiful summer homes has his house in Canada, and a little bridge leading across to a little summer house on a tiny island a few yards distant leads one into American territory. The film ends with a view showing a sunset across the water.

THE LITTLE ORGANIST (Jan. 19).—Mrs. Cleves has been failing for some time so the doctor advises sending her little girl to the country that the mother may be free from care. Little Edna is entrusted to Mrs. Cleves' younger sister Helen, who takes her to a small country town.

When they are attending church one Sunday, the organist is taken ill and Helen takes his place at the organ. Her playing creates quite a sensation and after service she is surrounded by an admiring group. The men are particularly attentive, and this creates no end of jealousy among the women who see in Helen a formidable rival.

One evening, while practicing her music on the church organ for the following Sunday, she is joined by the young minister who has been very much attracted to her. On leaving the church they are espied by Mrs. Glib and Mrs. Sneer, two village gossips. These two take it upon themselves to safeguard the morals of the village and follow them to Helen's house. After the minister has bid her goodnight, they peek through the window and to their great horror, discover Helen romping with a child. The next day at the postoffice the scandal is repeated with vim. Helen, entering upon this scene, is at once ostracized and flees in tears. The minister questions her, but she rushes by him and when he learns from a native the reason for her tearful flight, he at once follows. He overtakes her just in time to rescue her from the advances of the village bully to whom he is obliged to give a sound thrashing. He escorts Helen home and then and there in spite of the gossip, asks her to marry him. Just as she consents, they are surprised by Mrs. Cleves, who has come to bring her little girl back to town.

In the meantime, the minister's conduct has aroused the village and the women demand his resignation. A meeting is called in the little church and here the minister confronts them, but seeing the spite and venom of the women, hands in his resignation. Helen, having been warned of the meeting, hurries to church, followed by Mrs. Cleves and little Edna.

When the gossips' tale turns out to be false there is a revival of feeling in favor of the minister, especially when he introduces Helen as his future wife.

TO SAVE HER BROTHER (Jan. 20).—This story is laid in Colorado and deals with the district attorney of a small Western town, his daughter and his son—a young man whose weakness is due mostly to his boyish forgetfulness of the duties of life and society rather than to criminal instinct.

Seeing an advertisement in the paper of one of the get-rich-quick concerns, and becoming possessed with the desire to make good before his father and sister, he robs his father of three hundred dollars, fully believing that he can return the money in a few days, and also add a great deal more to his income. But ere the money has left his hands, he discovers that the enterprise is a fraud and that his father is now investigating its false methods and is authorized to secure all mail addressed to the company. The boy realizes that his father will discover his theft through this means and so he applies to his sister's sweetheart, Jack Morton, who is a cowboy, for aid. Jack realizes what it would mean to his sweetheart and her father, and to save the family from disgrace, he robs the mail, holds up the stagecoach, and secures the damaging letter. The boy returns the money to his father's safe and all would have been well but for a missing cuff button which eventually places the guilt of the stagecoach hold-up on Jack. He is willing to stand the guilt for his sweetheart's safe, but her brother confesses his crime and Jack is again reinstated.

VITAGRAPH.

FATHER AND SON (Jan. 15).—A poor woman, hugging closely to her breast her infant son, staggers into Sing Lee's laundry. The laundryman hastens to her assistance and slowly she tells him she is sick and nigh unto death, requesting him to place her boy in the care of some home. He assures her that he will care for the child and suddenly she passes away. Tenderly he cares for the child and day by day he learns to love it more and when grown to boyhood, places little Jack in school and toils to support him and give him an education. The boy is very fond of his foster father and often speaks of his kindness to the neighbors, some of whom object to the Chinaman's care of the child and report the matter to the Juvenile Society, which sends one of its workers to Sing's laundry, taking the child away, against the protests of the boy and his good guardian. Jack runs away from the Society and returns to Sing Lee. The case is then taken to court and after listening to the Chinaman's story, the judge gives the youngster back to his foster father.

Some years later Jack, now a successful lawyer, is engaged to the daughter of the judge before whom he was taken as a child. Sing Lee is attacked by a criminal Chinaman, who tries to stab him. Sing secures the knife and pursues him to arrest him. A policeman arrests Sing Lee with the knife in his hand, accusing him of being a bad character. He is brought into court and defended by his adopted son Jack. The judge is the father of Jack's fiancée. Jack tells how Sing Lee cared for him and brought him up to manhood, an honored and desirable citizen. The jury acquits the Chinaman without leaving their seats. Jack's fiancée is in court with her mother. They are astonished. The judge's wife asks him to give up either his foster father or their daughter. Jack replies that it would be base ingratitude to so far forget the sacrifices made in his behalf to deny the man who made them. The judge grasps Jack by the hand and tells him if he were a man to forget the kindness of the Chinaman he would not be a fit husband for his daughter, and he is glad to have him for his son-in-law.

CHUMPS (Jan. 16).—Bunny and Marsh attend a show and both fall in love with a charming danseuse. They send their cards into the Green Room to her, receive an audience and take her home in a taxi. Her father objects to their attentions and forbids her seeing them again. When her father is absent she sends them each a note to call on her. Bunny gets there first with a five-pound box of candy. While he and Lauretta are tete-à-teting Marsh is announced. Bunny hides behind the portières. It is now Marsh's turn. He trips in with an immense box of Jacque roses, which he presents with a great flourish and much to do. He is getting on finely when another visitor comes in. Marsh is obliged to hide behind the lid on top of the grand piano, underneath the cover. The third caller is a very tall, handsome young man. To cap the climax her father returns and the last visitor takes refuge under the sofa. His obedient daughter tries to hold his attention.

This is too much for the three hiders, who make up their minds to beard the lion in his den. Bunny and Marsh fearlessly face the old gentleman and bid him a cheery good-evening. The tall young man looks puzzled. Marsh and Bunny proclaim their admiration for the old fellow's daughter and tells him their intentions are honorable. This is the last straw for the tall young man. He waves them aside and boldly declares he has secretly married Lauretta and she is now his wife. The little fellow collapses and the big one takes his pal in his arms, carrying him from the room in tears, like a bawling infant.

CAUGHT IN THE RAIN (Jan. 17).—Edith Miller, from New York, is on a visit to her friend, Helen Wells, whose people own a large country house not far from Denver. They have an engagement to go motoring with George Roberts, a young Westerner, who is rather struck with Edith. Helen has a headache and cannot go. After some little persuasion she gets Edith to go alone with Roberts.

That evening Jaspar Ray, a convict, escapes from the jail in a little town nearby and is pursued by the sheriff and his men. He manages, however, to hide in the woods and eludes their vigilance. In the meanwhile Edith and Roberts are enjoying their auto ride. Finding her a little shy, Roberts proposes to teach her how to run the motor. She is delighted and proves an apt pupil. He watches her in admiration. Suddenly she makes a mistake and the machine stops. When he inspects it he finds it has run out of gasoline and he starts off in search of a fresh supply.

Jaspar, the escaped convict, takes refuge in a deserted cottage. Roberts, having secured the gasoline, is on his way back when a terrible rain storm overtakes him. He goes in search of wraps and umbrella, comes to the cottage where Jaspar has taken refuge, and enters. Jaspar, thinking it is the sheriff, attacks him, but Roberts overpowers him. Jaspar then pleads with Roberts not to give him up. He tells his story and promises amendment in the future. Roberts is touched by his miserable condition and decides to help him, giving him his clothes and putting on the convict suit under his overcoat.

Frightened by the storm, Edith has followed Roberts. The men hear her coming and not knowing who it is, blow out the light. She enters and Roberts seizes her. She struggles and tries to defend herself, crying out. Roberts recognizes her voice and tells her who it is, and introduces her to Jaspar. They return to the auto, take Jaspar to the railroad station, and give him money enough to make a new start. On the road home Roberts proposes to Edith and is accepted.

TOM TILLING'S BABY (Jan. 19).—A horse shoe is an omen of good luck. Tom, the little bootblack, believes it, so does his sister Susie, and they are very proud of the one which Tom has just found and upon which he pins his faith in starting out for his day's business.

Mamie, the nurse maid in wealthy Mr. Carter's family, and Hodges, the butler, are always jollying and joking each other, and incidently thinking up some practical joke to play on each other. Hodges thinks of one which he considers capital. He awaits his chance to play it on the unsuspecting nurse. The opportunity comes when the nurse has the baby out in the park for an airing. While she is talking with a policeman, Hodges removes the baby, while still asleep, from its carriage and hides it in the bushes, some little distance away. After her tete-à-tete with the cop she discovers the loss of the child. The bluecoat and the nurse start on a wild hunt, without result.

In the meantime Tom happens along the pathway where the little one is hidden, is somewhat astonished to find it in such a peculiar place, but doesn't fail to make a mental note of the butler, who is sneaking away. Tom decides to take the baby home to Susie and adopt it as a member of their household.

The nurse, in tears, tells Mr. and Mrs. Carter of their loss and they insert an advertisement, offering a reward of $5,000 for the return of their child, thoroughly convinced that it has been kidnapped. Tom sees this notice and hastens to the Carter home. Mr. Carter goes with the little fellow and soon returns with the baby, depositing it in his joyous wife's arms. Tom is invited to take dinner with them. While they are at the table, the butler enters. Tom's keen eye at once detects him as the man he saw sneaking away from where he found the baby. The butler is accused of kidnapping the child and taken to the police station, where he tells it was all a practical joke. This explanation does not save him from prompt dismissal from the Carters' employ. With the reward, Tom opens a bootblacking parlor. Susie is his cashier and Mr. Carter his staunchest friend, making the little fellow a prosperous and happy business man.

A GIRL OF THE WEST (Jan. 20).—"Easy money" seems to be in sight for "Scar-faced Bill," a cattle rustler, when he overbears Jones, a ranch owner, offer John Winthrop $500 for his horse, which Jones very much admires. Bill plans to steal Winthrop's horse, deliver it to Jones and get away with the money. Winthrop is very much in love with Dolly Dixon, and is very fond of Polly, her youngest sister, who is an excellent horsewoman and a great friend of the cowboys. She happens to be with him when Mr. Jones makes the agreement to buy the horse. "Dance Hall Nell" stands in with "Scar-faced Bill," who instructs her to follow him when he gets away with Winthrop's broncho and to delay, with her winning ways and cajolery, anybody who follows.

Early the next morning Polly is out for a ride. She overhears Bill's friend discussing the stealing of Winthrop's horse and the carrying out of Bill's scheme. She spurs her horse and starts at breakneck gallop to warn Mr. Jones. On the way she meets "Dance Hall Nell," who tries to detain her. She wrestles from Nell's grasp and a neck and neck race ensues. At times the two women are engaged in a hand-to-hand struggle. Polly manages to break away and outdistance the desperate ally of the horse thief. Bill is carrying out his job and is just getting away with the money when Polly rides up. He grapples with the girl, but she succeeds in discharging her pistol, which is overheard by the ranchmen, whom Bill has just left. They immediately jump in their saddles, rescue the girl from the desperate struggle with the desperado; they make him return the money to Mr. Jones and take him into custody, then continue their pursuit in a wild chase over miles and miles of country until they capture all of "Scar-faced Bill's" pals. Mr. Jones gives the $500 to Polly, who later hands it to Winthrop. He takes Polly and her sister in his arms. Polly is the idol and life of the ranch, loved and petted by all.

THE SECRET WEDDING (Jan. 15).—Adrian, an artist, seeking a certain cliff as material for a painting, inquires of Bessie, the daughter of Captain Whalen, as to the direction. He is attracted to the girl, who gazes lovingly at him as he leaves. He meets her on several occasions thereafter while painting at the seashore, and makes several sketches of her. During this time he becomes much infatuated with her. He invites her to visit his studio. She glady consents, and while there, he would again have her pose for him, this time desiring her attire to consist of but a slight covering so that he may be able to truly represent the graceful lines of her beautiful figure. But the maiden, in her simplicty, feels unable to grant this request. Without urging her further, he shows her the rest of his paintings and then escorts her home.

They soon see each other again, much to the sorrow of Leon, who was Bessie's sweetheart prior to her meeting Adrian, and who now closely watches their movements, hoping for an opportune moment, in which he can harm Adrian. The couple, however, get away without adventure and are married.

Later, the artist, taking one of several sketches which he has made of Bessie at the cliff, draws upon his resourceful imagination and completes his picture. When placed upon exhibition at the Gallery of Arts "The Spirit of the Cliff" proves a winner.

MAINE IN MOTION PICTURES.

The first public showing of motion pictures taken in Havana harbor during the work of uncovering the wreck of the battleship Maine took place at the Herald Square Theatre yesterday afternoon. Some of the films were exhibited before the Maine Monument Committee several weeks ago, but the present reels contain later views.

The series began with the building of the caissons, showed the gradual lowering of the water inside the coffer dam, and the clearing of the parts of the wreck as they were exposed. The pictures showed clearly the force of the explosion that destroyed the ship and the present condition of the vessel.

THE BELASCO.

"The Raising of the Maine."

Motion pictures showing the raising of what remains of the ill-fated battle ship Maine from her watery bed in Havana Harbor form the major part of the interesting programme offered at the Belasco this week. The pictures, which are quite clear, first show the Maine as she lay for thirteen years after the explosion, with but a few feet of her showing above the water line; then in detail views of the apparatus used in raising her, and finally the Maine as she is to-day, the barnacle-covered remains of a great man-of-war.

By a queer coincidence, Captain Waalea just returned from a trip, is met by Leon, who shows him a magazine containing a reproduction of "The Spirit of the Cliff." Leon deludes the captain as to the true situation. The captain hurries home, finds Bessie caring for her babe, and because of her unwillingness to give a proper explanation, orders her out of the house. He then hurries to the gallery and destroys the picture of his daughter in a rage. The artist confronts the captain and an explanation follows. The doubting captain and Adrian return home to find that Leon, in interfering with their mail, has been the cause of all their trouble. They succeed in trapping him, and the father, realizing his rashness, finally comes to his senses and forgives and forgets.

THE COWBOY'S BEST GIRL (Jan. 16).—Alice Marson, an Eastern young lady, becomes engaged to Glen Arnold, a young man just out of college. Girl-like, she rushes to her friend, Lucy Starr, and tells of the engagement. Lucy, who also had designs on Glen, congratulates Alice, but determines to break up the match.

While Alice, Glen and another young man are playing tennis Lucy takes Alice's photograph from Glen's pocket and substitutes one of a pretty actress. Alice finds the photograph and accuses Glen of deceivng her. Glen denies all knowledge of the photograph but Alice will not listen and breaks off the engagement.

A few days later, Glen receives a letter from his old friend and college chum, Carl Graham, asking him to be his partner on a ranch in Wyoming. As he thinks there is no hope of a reconciliation with Alice, Glen glady accepts and goes West.

One day, some three years later, a cowboy rides up to Carl's ranch and hands him an invitation to a cowboy open-air dance. The invitation says, "Yourself and best girl are invited." As Carl has no "best girl" he persuades Glen to dress as a girl and accompany him to the dance. After much persuasion Glen shaves off his highly-prized mustach and dresses as a young woman.

It so happens that Alice Marson is visiting at her uncle's ranch which, unknown to either Alice or Glen, is only a few miles away from Carl's ranch. Alice is also invited to the dance, but her uncle will only let her go if she agrees to dress as a cowboy, so that she will not have to dance with the rough cowboys. Alice agrees and she and her uncle go to the dance.

During the dance, which is a typical cowboy open-air dance, many humorous incidents occur. Alice, dressed as a boy, flirts with the girls, and Glen, masquerading in woman's clothing, keeps all the boys dancing attendance on him. Alice pays too much attention to "Bull" Strokes' girl to suit Bull. Overcome by jealousy, Bull attempts to teach Alice, whom he thinks a man, a lesson. A quarrel ensues. Glen interferes, and during the scuffle loses his wig. Alice's hat is knocked off by Bull, letting her hair fall about her shoulders, thereby disclosing her identity. Alice and Glen recognize each other. Explanations follow and the lovers are reunited.

MERELY A MILLIONAIRE (Jan. 18).—Brewer, a millionaire, and three friends are discussing the coming ball at the Country Club. They propose to go as tramps. Brewer is not over-enthusiastic until one of them bets he's afraid. Finally all agree. Next day after leaving his betrothed at her home, he sees a tramp on the road and fancies he recognizes a resemblance to himself. He stops the auto and calls the tramp up, who reluctantly comes. Brewer gives him his card and gets the tramp's promise to come to the address. That evening the tramp, who has kept his promise, agrees to go to the ball as Brewer, with instructions to be a good fellow and himself.

The tramp arrives at the Country Club in Brewer's auto. The lackeys recognize the machine and think it is Brewer. Ferguson, the club champion, speaks to the tramp, who snubs him. The president thinks it's Brewer, takes him into club room, where they meet the others, who are impersonating tramps. All compliment tramp on his make-up and mannerisms. Ferguson comes in. Tramp resents his way and calls him. Ferguson invites him outside, members try to stop it, but tramp goes. When they get outside Ferguson begins to lay the law down, but tramp goes him one better and wants to fight then and there, much to Ferguson's surprise, who always thought Brewer a bit weak. The tramp when he comes back surprises the members by calling Ferguson a big bluff.

Later, in the reception room the tramp meets Miss Carew, Brewer's betrothed, who takes him outside. She begs him to stop masquerading and to kiss her. She sorely tries him, but his manhood keeps her sacred and he makes excuses and takes her back to the dance. At supper the tramp is presented with the club's trophy as the best disguised, and later as they are all leaving, evades Miss Carew by asking her to call at 4 p. m. next day. The tramp makes a flying leap into auto and escapes. Brewer is waiting for the tramp, who finally arrives, gives the cup to Brewer, is paid and thanked, and with jaunty air leaves. Next day Brewer comes into his apartments, closely followed by his betrothed, who chides him for not kissing her last evening at the ball. Brewer is thankful to the tramp for guarding his honor. Members who have been invited to call at 4 p. m. begin to arrive. Brewer at first is nonplussed, but finally sees through it and orders his man to bring wine and cigars. Ferguson is announced. Brewer is timid and wonders what it means. Ferguson at first is slightly embarrassed, then boldly apologizes. Brewer takes it slightly different to his intentions and shakes hands. Later, under the bridge, the tramp, by his lonesome fire, takes money from pocket, then the rose he begged from the lady, and sighingly mutters: "Gee, but she sure was a peach!"

A NIGHT OUT (Jan. 19).—George Edwards, synonym for "meek," has never been allowed by his wife, to go to a prize fight. But George has a good friend who gives him a ticket to a forthcoming mill, and between them, fix up the "sick friend" dodge for explanations for which he knows his wife will ask. And George goes to the fight, where he has the time of his life. But, poor fellow, he little dreams that a moving picture camera is there, photographing the deadly (?) evidence—his presence.

Several months later, after a hard day's shopping, Mrs. Edwards goes into a moving picture show, where she sees her husband, having one fine time, at the prize fight, thrown on the screen. She becomes righteously indignant, and vows vengeance. A few minutes later, Mr. Edwards receives a visit from his wife, who persuades him to take her to a moving picture show. Unsuspecting, he acquiesces, and she takes him to see himself. Edwards is horror stricken and when taken home by his irate wife, has the law read to him with a vengeance.

THE MORTGAGE (Jan. 25).—Tom does his best to strike oil on his property, but ill luck seems to be his. The workmen become discontended and leave, all save a faithful Indian who swears by Tom. Together they put up with many hardships to keep the plant working.

Meanwhile back home, Anne is commanded by her father to marry old Harvey in order that he will not foreclose the mortgage. In vain she pleads with her father and at last writes Tom with a broken heart that she must marry another.

But shortly before the letter reaches him, Tom at last strikes oil, and a mighty well it is. He seeks a partner and obtains may dollars cash for a half interest. But his former foreman gets wind that there is money in the air and plots to get it. But Tom's faithful Indian again proves his worth by frustrating the foreman's designs and Tom is enabled to board the first train for home.

Scene from "The Mortgage" (Melies.)

The bridal party is at the very church door when Tom gallops up. Anne reads the good news in his countenance and rushes to his arms. When Harvey interferes, Tom thrusts a packet of bills in his face in settlement of the mortgage and gives Anne her choice. And papa and all assembled approve her choice, for everybody loves a hero.

THE SURGEON'S HEROISM (Jan. 8).—Edith, a poor sewing girl, faints at her machine one morning and the kind-hearted superintendent, who is in love with her, asks his friend physician to diagnose the case. The doctor, after making an examination, finds that her trouble is not serious. He is also smitten by her charms and when he calls the next day and finding that she is better, invites her for a short ride in his automobile. The superintendent, who has called at the girl's house just in time to witness the departure, angrily awaits their return. When Edith goes to her room the superintendent proposes marriage. She says that she cannot do more than respect him and in a heated argument outside of her room, he falls down the stairs. The fall necessitates an immediate operation and he is rushed to the hospital at which his friend is the operating doctor, and who refuses to perform his duty. Through the persuasion of Edith the surgeon is induced to commence the operation. As it is in progress a fire breaks out in the hospital and all the nurses flee from the place. The assistant doctor also tries to escape, but the surgeon by locking the door and throwing the key out of the window prevents it. After the operation the firemen carry the patient out of the window to safety. A few days afterwards the surgeon calling to see how the convalescent man is getting on, finds Edith attending to him. She is treated coldly by the surgeon and leaves. Upon being told by the superintendent that Edith will not marry him, the surgeon goes immediately to her home and after explanations, she agrees to an engagement.

KISSING PILLS (Jan. 10).—Much discontent was noticed at Green-Top, the trouble being that the worthy husbands of the town became very indifferent to the longings of their wives for caresses. For a few months after the honeymoon kisses were freely given, but as time passed, every mouth added to the neglect and after a year of married happiness, the wives declared that a kiss on New Year's Eve or on their birthday was all that could be expected.

Professor Newton was a great chemist. He lived at Green-Top and often he would listen to the pitiful longings of the ladies, who complained that osculation was a lost art. He concocted a "kissing pill," but found it a difficult task to place his new product on the market, so he decides that he will stand on the corner of a street and give away free samples. He distributes a number of samples among the people of the town and there is no end to the fun. In one case a young man was sitting in the park with his sweetheart, who refuses to give him a kiss and the young man leaves very angry. While passing the professor on the street and receiving a "kissing pill," he hurries back to the park, where he gives the pill to his lady friend. Did he receive a kiss? Many of them. Another young man who has some samples gives some to a colored gentleman, who is seated on the park bench with his lady love. The colored gentleman gives some to his baby and we have a regular coon-town kissing match. The German, the Italian, the Jew peddlar, the Chinese laundryman, not forgetting the police department, all fall victims of the pretty girls who have been eating kissing pills.

GENERAL DAFT (Jan. 10).—Tom Jordan and Harry Clifford are room-mates and close friends, both attending a military college. Tom has secured a leave of absence for a few days to take a little trip. He is going to pass through the town in which Harry lives. Harry gives him a letter of introduction to his mother and sister and tells him to be sure to call on them. In the meantime Harry's mother and sister have been reading in a paper an account of an escaped lunatic who is at large, dressed in a military uniform and requesting anyone seeing him to notify the authorities. When Tom calls at the house he is immediately taken for the lunatic. The mother telephones to the authorities and great amusement is furnished in the way of humoring the crazy man until the authorities arrive. Much to the surprise of the folks, when the guards arrive they find that he is not the crazy man, but Harry's chum. While things are being explained away in the house General Daft pops in on the scene. He has been following the guards and thinks that it is his (General Daft's) duty to take them back, and he commands the guards to follow him back to the asylum.

THE BLACKSMITH (Jan. 11).—Lottie Brown lived with her father and mother in a little settlement not far from St. Louis. In the village was located Dave, the blacksmith, who was desperately in love with Lottie and whose attentions were not unwelcome to the girl. One fateful day there arrives in the village a chap from the city named Ned Tolliver, who is on a hunting trip and is taken as a boarder into the Brown household.

Lottie falls in love with the newcomer and in answer to Dave's frenzied remonstrance, she breaks with him entirely. Things run along the even tenor of their way till one day Ned receives a letter from a friend in the city, reproaching him for his desertion of his friends and urging him to return. By this time he has tired of his country girl and leaving a note of farewell for her he sneaks out under cover of the night.

The shock overwhelms Lottie who, always delicate, never recovers from the blow. She fades away and in the delirium of her illness is constantly calling for her recalcitrant lover. Dave, whose devotion nothing can kill, determines to bring the city man to her side in the hope that she will be benefited.

He goes to the city after him and forces him to return, but they arrive too late. Bidding Tolliver return whence he came and be thankful that he is permitted to do so with a whole skin, Dave sadly returns to the bedside of the woman he had loved, who cold in death, he could claim as his own at last, with no one to dispute his right.

PAID IN HIS OWN COIN (Jan. 13).—Marguerite Moreland goes for a drive in her runabout. On her way she has to cross a railroad track; the gate is open and a train rushes by, destroying the machine and injuring the young lady.

When the young lady is able to get around with the aid of a crutch, her father engages the services of Herbert Hammersly, a young lawyer, and in the association he loses his heart. A suit for heavy damages is instituted and the railroad attorney pretends to assist the plaintiff. He invites her to automobile rides and dances, which she is ill fitted for, but she consents, thinking it will please him and assist her case. At the trial the lawyer shows his hand and brings witnesses to testify that the girl could not be much injured when she can enjoy the atmosphere of the ballroom.

The case is lost and finally the young lady is restored to health by the aid of a famous surgeon, who performs an operation. The association between Hammersly and his client develops into a strong and beautiful love. After Marguerite is fully restored her beauty attracts the attention of the treacherous lawyer, and he falls madly in love with the girl he has tricked. She permits him to offer her moderate attention, until he can no longer control himself and he proposes to her. Herein is her revenge—she refuses him and scorns him and has the satisfaction of seeing him retire broken-hearted.

HER UNCLE'S CONSENT (Jan. 15).—Professor Pettingill has the reputation of being a woman hater, and above all, a chorus girl being his chief aversion. He has a niece of whom he is appointed guardian, with the understanding that she shall not marry without her uncle's consent. Strolling out one day, he passed the stage door of a theater, and a number of chorus girls prancing out, cause the professor much confusion. Quite innocently, he follows behind one, who on reaching a door of a restaurant, drops some bundles, one being a package of photos. Of course, simply in politeness, he picks the packages up, but the girl being very pretty, the professor cannot resist the temptation to follow her into the lunch room, and invites her to sit at his table. The girl gives him one of her photos, and he conducts her back to the stage door, where he is introduced to one Harry Meyers, a "Matinee Idol." A few days later, the professor's niece is also introduced to Meyers by some girl friends, and an attachment results. The professor and the chorus girl get along very nicely. One day they are strolling in the park and encounter Meyers and the niece. The professor induces his companion to hide behind the bushes and he proceeds to arraign the "Matinee Idol" and takes his niece home. Later Meyers and the niece surprise the professor and his chorus lady. In his embarrassment he rushes the young woman out upon the balcony and fastens the window. It then starts to rain. The niece draws attention to a feather boa on the table and Meyers recognizes it as belonging to Dotty Twinklefoot. Each couple have to admit their attachments, and the uncle gives his consent to the inevitable.

A DARK DECEPTION (Jan. 17).—George Reemly and Peggy Glenwood are sweethearts, but Peggy could not resist the temptation of inviting Count De' Tears to call on her one evening, she having met the count at a reception a few nights previous. She does not love the count, but merely invited him to furnish a little amusement. George calls one afternoon and accidentally picks up a note, which happens to be the one the count had written to Peggy, accepting her invitation, saying he will call that evening. George thinks the count is trying to rob him of his love. He says nothing to Peggy about this note, but that same afternoon he tells his troubles to his room mate, who figures out a scheme whereby he can watch the count. George and his friend persuade the colored butler to follow "them" (George and his friend). The journey ends, after a taxicab ride of several blocks, at the stage door of a theater. Another friend, who is an actor, is now pressed into service, who, with the aid of black cork, makes George up to look like the butler, leaving the butler in the dressing room. After borrowing his livery, George returns to the Glenwood household, just in time to admit the count. George makes it very uncomfortable for the count that evening, and when the count left he went out a different way than which he entered, as George assisted him out of the rear window. George now explains to Peggy that he is not the butler, and admits to Peggy that he was a little jealous. Peggy now sees the humorous side of the situation, and assures George that she does not love the count. They forgive each other and with the engagement kiss, predict a very happy future.

BONAPARTE AND PICHEGRU (Jan. 16).—This story, taken from the intimate history of the life of Napoleon, forms a remarkably interesting drama. Bonaparte and Pichegru were fast friends, but ultimately Bonaparte's regard for Pichegru turned to hatred, owing to some slight on the latter's part. In consequence, Napoleon orders his old friend's arrest, and the Emperor's minions depart upon their unwelcome mission. Pichegru, however, is a wily individual and succeeds in alluding his captors' hands for a long time, passing through various exciting and hairbreadth escapes. Ultimately, however, he is captured and wounded, brought into the presence of Bonaparte, who, standing over his prostrate form, condemns him to death.

HERE AND THERE IN CHINA (Jan. 16).—This interesting film makes a remarkably good travelogue and shows various parts of this country, now so prominently in the eyes of the world. The customs, manners and small trades of the Chinese are interestingly shown and the whole forms a film well worth seeing.

SULPHUR INDUSTRY IN SICILY (Jan. 18.—This film shows, in minute detail, how this important industry of Sicily is carried on, how the sulphurized ore is quarried and how the final commercial product is obtained.

MRS. PUSSY LOVES ANIMALS (Jan. 19).—Mrs. Pussy keeps her house in utter turmoil through her love of animals. Chickens roost on the back of the sofa; a large pig finds pleasure on the parlor rug; monkeys skip merrily from chair to chair and from chandelier to curtain pole. Rabbits, guinea pigs, cats, lap dogs, white mice and calves, gambol in beautiful fellowship around the floor. About the only place Mr. Pussy can find to deposit his weary limbs is the roof, or down in the cellar. Once in a while he tries to sit on the mantelpiece, but is usually aroused by the ourang-outang, who claims this as his particular place. One day, in a spirit of deep, dark-blooded revenge, Mr. Pussy decides to give Mrs. Pussy the surprise of her life, and so he comes home with a wild and ferocious leopard, and turns him loose in Mrs. Pussy's parlor zoo. 'Nuff said!

MANNERS AND CUSTOMS IN MALAYSIA (Jan. 19).—Another fine travelogue which carries the spectator through the quaint streets of this town on the edge of the earth. The people present a novel and interesting appearance in their daily labors, amusements and recreations. Few can see this picture and not come away with greater knowledge of the world and its inhabitants than they did before.

PATHE.

THE SQUAW MAN'S REVENGE (Jan. 17).—A little white child found and brought up by the Indians, finally meets a man of her own kind. He falls in love with her and marries her. The other men in his camp, however, make life unbearable for the little woman, whom they suppose to be an Indian. They threaten to ostracise her husband unless she leaves the camp, and in consequence she runs back to her tribe. Her husband, driven to despair by this treatment from his fellow men, joins the Indians and with them takes revenge upon the little community by destroying the entire settlement.

IS IT YOUR HAT? (Jan. .18).—Mrs. Kidder decides she would like to ride horseback; naturally she procures a riding habit, and when this arrives, with a beautiful derby hat, she decides to surprise her hubby. She does this most successfully, because when she goes into her own room to don her new costume, she leaves her derby on the sitting room table. Hubby returns, finds the hat, gets all tangled up with his own thoughts and in a wildly excited state, bursts from the house in search of the man who fits the hat. This leads him through many weird happenings and finally lands him in the police station, where he is rescued by his wife, who claims the hat as her own.

UNMERITED SHAME (Jan. 20).—A daughter of a fisherman is loved by stalwart toilers of the sea, one of whom is not to her liking. This man, upon being rejected, becomes mean and seeks to injure her in the eyes of the community. While her true lover is away, this cur finds a little baby on the doorstep of Mrs. Stevens' house, and he and Mrs. Stevens take care of it. This is made the most of by her rejected suiter, and things go very hard for the little fisherman's daughter until her betrothed returns, when he loses no time in teaching the community better manners in marrying the little girl of his choice.

ARABELLA LOVES HER MASTER (Jan. 12).—Jimmy Jimson is too attentive to the bright and sprightly maid, and Mrs. Jimson acts with great promptitude and forthwith removes the source of danger. Exit the maid. Madame Jimson then writes to a local employment bureau and requests them to send her a domestic of certain age and disposition. Arabella is the product of this request, and she certainly is perfection itself. Of her age there can be no doubt, and her face bespoke a most serious nature. The face itself was a very serious matter. However, the handsome husband attracts the attentions of the slavey and finally becomes the object of her adoration. Then follows the fun.

BILL, EMPEROR OF THE SAHARA (Jan. 12).—Some people are born great, whilst others have greatness thrust upon them. The latter is the case with cheerful Billy, who is borne off to the Sunny South by a camel, who is anxious to exchange his stable at the Zoo for sandy plains of his native land. Bill's wife follows the ship of the desert in its wayward flight, and arrives there just in time to see her obedient spouse appointed king of that wide domain. His Majesty Bill Snooks, better known to his loving subjects as Billy, thus acquires further dominions. At present he is busy governing the Kingdom of Laughter, where his sway can never be usurped.

AMERICAN.

THE RELENTLESS LAW (Jan. 15).—Having transgressed the law of his country, Jim Dawson is tried, convicted and sent to the penitentiary. After a year in the prison, he manages to escape and the intelligence is flashed all over the country. The relentless machinery of the law is set in motion and the man hunt is on. He is discovered by a posse in the mountains. Running and fighting, he escapes their vigilance and securing one of the horses belonging to the posse, again escapes, this time to the house of the woman whom he had married when he still retained the spark of manhood. During his absence a child has been born. The desperate man does not realize that the child is his and that the woman is his wife. Save me is his plea. The woman sets about cleaning his wounds and feeding the famished man. Then the sound of approaching horsemen is heard and kissing the child, but repulsed by the wife, the hunted man leaps through the window and is gone. Up in the mountains he finds a cave and believes himself secure. Down in the valley the wife waits with a nameless dread in her soul. Up in the mountain road the minions of the relentless law picks up the fugitive trail.

They locate his lair and camp, knowing that without food or water he is as secure as if behind the thickest bars. At last, starving, thirsty and terror-stricken, the maddened man attempts escape. The guns of the posse flash and the convict has paid the toll exacted by the law. Down in the valley a widow with her fatherless child in her arms waits with a nameless dread in her soul.

MAJESTIC.

GOSSIP (Jan. 12).—John Davis, a prominent young attorney, has pleaded his most important case, and a favorable decision has been handed down by "Her Honor," the presiding judge. The decision is, to wit: That on and after a certain date in the immediate future, he is to have and to hold for a period ending only in death, her charming daughter, Dorothy. In fact, "Her Honor" goes further in her kindness and gives a reception to her most intimate friends to make public the said decision.

Loudest in their congratulations and best wishes are Mr. Wm. Smith, a well known bachelor clubman, and Mr. and Mrs. Jones. The day after the reception, John Davis goes to his office and finds himself in a poor mood to dig into musty law books over abstruse decisions. His stenographer, a very pretty girl, is bewildered by the change from his usual crisp businesslike attitude. The day finally ends, and she leaves the office. On the way to her mother's home, she slips on an icy pavement and wrenches her ankle severely. John Davis speeding in his auto to his fiancée's house, passes her. Naturally he goes to her assistance, puts her in his car and takes her to her mother's home and half carries the poor girl, almost fainting with pain, into the house.

Mr. Wm. Smith, taking a before dinner walk, is an observer of the little incident. He shakes his head sadly over what he thinks to be an evidence of the frailty of his young friend John, and makes his way to the club. He is joined there by a crony Jones, who has run into the club for a smoke before joining Mrs. Jones at home at dinner. John Davis comes into the club hurriedly, only stopping to exchange a word with his friends and dashes out.

Smith tells Jones what he has seen only a short time before. Jones declares that Davis is a young scoundrel. Jones, arriving home, confides to his wife the story he has heard at the club. Unfortunately, each party who repeats the story uses their imaginative powers upon the same. Smith has merely told Jones that he had seen Dorothy's fiance taking an auto ride with a very beautiful girl and then leave the car with his arm around the said young lady in a very loving manner. Jones describes how the merry ride ended at the exterior of a well-known road house, and the couple entered therein bent upon a joyous time.

Mrs. Jones feels there is but one thing for her to do—she must tell the story to Dorothy and her mother, despite her husband's protestations. Mrs. Jones tells them that it is the talk of the clubs of the city—how John has been riding gayly about the city with a beautiful young girl, etc. Dorothy promptly breaks her engagement with John. She storms into his office, throws her engagement ring upon his desk and almost hysterical from grief starts to leave. John catches her at the door and fairly forces her to explain. She will not listen to his protestations of innocence and leaves him.

John's legal training comes to his rescue. He proceeds at once to gather in all the parties to the crime. Dorothy is also gathered in and John deposits the entire party in the home of his stenographer. The facts are made clear to Dorothy and she turns repentant. The three gossips seek to shift the blame. Dorothy restrains John from assisting the men in the case out of the room and tells him that she wants to go to his office at once. The little ring is finally discovered there, resting peacefully at the bottom of the inkwell and the young couple move upon the presiding judge for an earlier date to be set.

HIS FATE'S REHEARSAL (Jan. 14).—Hazel Nelson, three years married to James Dillon, finds herself late one night waiting in terror her husband's approach. During the first two years of their wedded life she had found him all that a girl could wish for in a husband. Then he inherited a fortune and was unable to withstand temptation. He fell into the company of a set of fast young clubmen and began to drink heavily. The most charming of men while sober, became when drunk a savage beast. He was quite unconscious in his sober moments of his conduct while drunk.

The young wife had come to fear actual harm to herself or her baby, and fled to her father's home for protection, but in a few days returned to him. Her father, a celebrated physician, had raged and stormed at her husband. His daughter was an only child, and the thought drove him to swear that he would take the law into his own hands in dealing with her husband.

The father was summoned by a charity call to the wretched hovel of a poor creature insane from alcoholism; he gave what relief he could and sent her to the hospital. She had been unable to provide for her baby, who had died from sheer want. The physician gazed about the wretched little home, and wondered if his daughter would ever sink to this.

At this point he was interrupted by his daughter's maid, who had been searching for him, and who told him that her mistress needed him. He hastened to his daughter's home and found Dillon in a drunken stupor, and his daughter and her baby locked in her bedroom. While listening to the girl's pleadings of her husband's virtues to shield him from her father's wrath, the physician evolved a plan. Wife and stupified husband, under the influence of an opiate, were taken to the wretched hovel, which the physician had just left. While his daughter dressed herself in some old rags found about the place, the father made a like change in her husband's attire. Then dating a note three years ahead, addressed to his daughter, to the effect that as she had sunk to her husband's level he, her father, would no longer help her and was done with her. He gave her instructions as to her part in the grim little comedy to be played. The physician then left the hovel and awaited results.

Dillon finally awoke from his stupor, looked at his surroundings and his clothes and then started in horror as he saw seated at a table his wife, unkempt, unclean, and drinking heavily. He demanded an explanation and she showed him the note from her father.

Horrified, he listened to his wife's almost insane ravings. He asked for the child, and she laughed and said, "as if he did not know," and pointed to the other room. He went in and found only a faded wreath, with the word "Baby" upon it. He staggered back, and insane from grief, fell at his wife's feet, begging forgiveness, for what he had evidently brought her to. She only laughed the more and told him that she knew what to do, and taking from her dress a small vial, before he could stop her, drank half the contents, and fell prostrate over the table. He seized the half empty bottled and saw that it contained a deadly poison. Racked with remorse, he gladly finished its contents and fell beside his wife.

The physician waiting outside, entered quickly, and as the bottle had contained only a weak opiate, soon brought his daughter to consciousness. The still insensible husband was again dressed in his proper clothes, and taken to his home. He awoke to find himself alone in his usual surroundings. His joy when his wife answered his call can be readily imagined, and when she showed him the baby sleeping quietly in its crib, he took her into his arms, almost weeping with happiness and swore he had received a lesson, whose effect would last until his life ended. The father, listening from another room, smiled happily, and left the house, with the conviction that his child's future happiness and safety were assured.

NEXT (Jan. 19).—Tony Guardio, the handsome barber, is bewailing his lack of trade, and there comes to him Marion Trevor, a very pretty girl, who asks to open a manicure stand in his barber shop. Tony cannot see where her customers are to come from, but impressed by the girl's charms, he consents.

One of Tony's regular customers, a young gentleman of a wealthy family, named Edward Robbins, after once looking upon Marion, readily consents to be manicured. His effort at conversation with her inflames Tony to jealous rage. Edward goes home, but can think of nothing but the girl. His father is greatly alarmed over his condition, but the boy tells him that all he needs is occupation. He returns the next day to the barber shop laden with roses, which he sends in to Marion. Next day he returns on the same errand and is confronted by a sign on Tony's shop indicating the place for sale.

Edward decides to become a business man. Edward makes a proposition to purchase the shop. The transaction is no sooner completed than Tony tells the manicure girl that he will open another shop and requests her to join him there, but Edward makes a stronger bid, and the girl decides to stay. Tony scowls and leaves the shop.

Edward is jealous of the attentions of a fat traveling salesman to Marion, and asks her to marry. She consents, but their bliss is interrupted by his father, who has dropped in for a shave and finds his son in barber regalia and kissing a pretty girl. Edward tells his father that she is to become his wife, but the old gentleman does not receive the news in the same spirit, and applies some epithets to the girl, which her fiance resents. His father gives him the choice of being disinherited. Edward demonstrates his decision by taking the girl into his arms, and his father storms out. They are married and happy, but soon reduced to their last penny. Meantime Edward's parents are longing for their son. His mother finally prevails upon father to see if he cannot effect a reconciliation.

Tony, the barber, has made efforts to induce his manicure girl to again work for him, and when he learns that she is married he secures a small bomb to wreck his old barber shop. Edward's father has made his way there to make peace with his son. The old man enters unexpectedly upon Tony, sees the bomb and struggles with the Italian. Marion, hearing the noise, rushes on as Tony knocks father down and escapes. She picks up the bomb and hurls it out the door.

CHAMPION.

FATHERS AND SONS (Jan. 15).—Oliver Byron, a wealthy merchant, has only one son, Dowd Byron, whom he dotes upon. Dowd is employed in his father's counting-room, and one day he succumbs to temptation and pilfers the strong box. The father detects him in the act and relentlessly hands him over to justice.

Now we come to the home of Wilson Roberts, and here we get a glimpse of an American middle-class family at its best. The elder Roberts is a bookkeeper, but unemployed when we first meet him. Young Roberts is starting on a journey to take up a very lucreative offer. A little later the father obtains a position as bookkeeper in the counting-house of Oliver Byron.

Byron grows to like his bookkeeper, and one Christmas Day he accepts his invitation to dine with him at his home. That same day Robert's son comes into his father's office, and is introduced to Byron, the employer. Byron is overcome, for he is overwhelmed by the thought of being without a son!

At the Roberts' home the table is spread with all the good things of the season. The father enters. Then into the house, surreptitiously, the son brings a companion, a poor, forlorn wretch, and hies him to his room for a change of raiment. Now Byron arrives and is seated at the place of honor. Grace is being said, the son and his new-found friend having just taken their seats, when suddenly Byron's eyes fall on the face of his own son.

A frenzy takes possession of him and he heaps denunciations upon his son; but Roberts, his host, pleads with him, and just then the baby girl puts out her little hands to the obdurate parent and adds her pleadings. The heart of the father melts, the tears well from his eyes, and his arms clasp around his only begotten son, who, in humble supplication, had cast himself at his feet.

A TALE OF THE SNOW (Jan. 17).—Alice Mason was as pretty a lass as could be found in the Northwest, and albeit her mother was sour and shrewish, she begot her attractiveness from her father, big, bluff, good-natured Jerrold Mason. Upon Alice Mason, Walter Burk, big of frame and handsome, had long cast sheepish eyes. This was to the liking of her mother, who had long wanted her married off and away, but Alice had not given it a thought. So, one day, when Walter, presuming on his good standing with the old lady, caught hold of Alice and kissed her, he wasn't prepared for the resounding smack across the mouth bestowed by Alice. He, maddened for the moment, then felt ashamed and asked her pardon, and left, downhearted.

By a mischance blow, Jerrold Mason cut an ugly gash in his foot while chopping a tree, knee-deep in the snow. Greatly in pain, he started for home with great difficulty. His appeals for help came to the ears of his wife and daughter, and they bravely set out to find him, exhausted, and drag him to the cabin. Then Alice ran for assistance, the assistance of Walter Burk; but the poor girl sank exhausted in a deep gully, to which kind providence directed the footsteps of Walter.

She was carried by him safely to his cabin to recuperate, when a greater calamity overtook them. A mountain of snow overwhelmed the cabin. Through this snow Walter started at once to tunnel, Alice bravely and resolutely coming to his assistance. At last sunlight burst through upon their efforts and they went forth to continue the journey, knitted closer together by the bonds wrought in their common danger.

The father was suffering on his cot, administered to by his faithful wife, whose tongue, after all, was her only fault. But he cried in his agony for his daughter, while the mother also cast anxious glances toward the door. At last both watchers were rewarded, as Alice burst in and threw her arms around the neck of her father, which brightened him up amazingly. Walter kneeled and examined the injured limb, and Alice, kneeling also, unconsciously encircles Walter's neck with her arm, the father smiling approvingly.

REPUBLIC.

RETRIBUTION (Jan. 20).—Desirous of having all his friends know that he had made a successful real estate deal, Jameson struts through the village streets, foolishly displaying a large roll of bills. Jack Wilson, a ne'er-do-well of the town, seeing the display of money, makes up his mind to relieve Jameson of it and attempts to hold Jameson up, but is prevented from doing so by the timely arrival of wayfarers. Undaunted, he follows Jameson to his home and is witness to a quarrel between Jameson and his wife; she upbraids him for remaining away so long.

In anger, Jameson leaves the house and throws the money upon the table. Jack Wilson enters the house after Jameson leaves, and waiting until the little girl is sent to bed, makes another attempt to get the money. He is caught by Mrs. Jameson and a frightful struggle ensues. The child, awakened by the noise, hastens to her mother's door and cries to be admitted. Wilson theratens to kill Mrs. Jameson unless she tells the child that her father is in the room. After the child leaves, the struggle is renewed and Mrs. Jameson is accidentally shot by the discharge of a revolver, which both tried to get possession of. Wilson escapes, and Jameson, coming home intoxicated, is held for the death of his wife. The child's evidence that her mother told her of her father's presence in the room, convicts Jameson, and he is sentenced to ten years at hard labor.

The child Grace, is adopted by a wealthy family and becomes a social favorite. Jack Wilson, in the meantime, has become a modern raffles, and eventually becomes a guest at many social gatherings. As one of the invited guests at a social gathering in the home of Grace's foster parents, he meets the daughter of the woman he had robbed and accidentally killed. He learns her identity when Jameson, released from prison, comes to see his daughter. He falls in love with the beautiful girl and decides to reform. Upon informing his pals of his intentions he is ridiculed, and his pals arrange to rob the home where he is a guest. Wilson, trying to prevent the robbery, is shot by one of his former companions, and believing that death is near, makes a complete confession, exonerating Jameson of the murder of his wife.

A MARITAL MIRAGE (Jan. 21).—Maggie Dooley is the cook and general maid of all work at the home of a stock operator, whose family consists of a wife and marriagable son. Maggie is grotesque in appearance and her particular forte is a decided ability to break valuable china-ware and get the cooking and house cleaning particularly mixed. Things are at such a pass that "Pater Familias" is about to "fire" Maggie, when he receives a message that his fortune is swept away in Wall Street.

Simultaneously, Maggie receives a letter, which her master and mistress see, to the effect that she has fallen heir to $100,000.00, through the death of her uncle. Maggie's wealth is the immediate object of envy to her employers. They show her every respect, and the situation becomes most ludicrous. Finally the father schemes to annex Maggie's coming fortune by inducing his son to marry her. This doesn't please the boy, but he finally yields to the tearful appeals of his father and mother aid consents. Maggie is highly delighted at the prospect and a speedy marriage is arranged. After the wedding supper, the hilarity is at its height, when a message comes to inform Maggie that her uncle was merely in a trance and that the first message is, therefore, a mistake. the effect of this news is electrical the ensuing conduct of the father, mother, son and Maggie is one continuous scream on and off the film.

SOLAX.

ECONOMICAL BROWN (Jan. 10).—When Brown's wife asks for anything, Brown's reply usually is "Oh, we can get along without it we must economize," Mrs. Brown gets back at Mr. Brown when they have visitors. She not only appears in her plainest attire, but serves very humble food. Brown's visitors leave hurriedly, making bum excuses, while Brown is furious at his wife. She, however, shows him an itemized comparative table of the family's home expenses and Brown's outside extravagances. Brown then sees a light and realizes how wrong he has been.

BLACK SHEEP (Jan. 12).—An old inventor has a son who is worthless and wayward. The son promises the father that if he would give him enough money, he would go to another city and try to "make good." The son goes to another city, but he gets into difficulty and turns criminal. He serves in the penitentiary for four years. In the meantime the old inventor dies and his daughter marries her father's benefactor—a man who took an interest in his inventions.

The girl lives happily until the shadow of her brother darkens her path. He continually asks her for money and she gives it to him to keep his disgusting presence out of her sight. She is ashamed of him and does not want her husband to know of the Black Sheep in the family. Her husband, however, sees her in the presence of the Black Sheep and grows suspicious of his wife.

The Black Sheep soon grows dissatisfied with the pittance his sister allows him periodically, so he decides to break into the home and steal as much as he can. In this he does not succeed, for detectives, who follow him for a former offence, interfere. He tries to make a get-a-way, but is shot dead in the attempt. During the mixup the husband finds the Black Sheep in the embrace of his wife. When the criminal is shot and brought into the house dead, a note in his pocket discloses his relationship.

BY THE HAND OF A CHILD (Jan. 14).—An outlaw escapes from his pursuers. He roams the wilds for a time and then nears civilization. In the woods close by the home of a sheriff, he finds the sheriff's little girl in a shrub. She had fallen from a cliff and had narrowly escaped being dashed to pieces. The outlaw picks up the little girl and brings her home. The sheriff's wife receives him thankfully. The little girl is not worse off for the experience. As a reward for saving her life, the child presents the outlaw with her doll. Then he departs.

The outlaw is soon caught and is about to be shot when the sheriff sees, protruding from the outlaw's shirt, his own little girl's doll. Explanations follow and the outlaw is given another chance. He "makes good" and becomes a better man.

NESTOR.

THE NEW CLERK (Jan. 8).—Dave Dowley, obliged to work in a grocery store, makes the best of it, and the best is not at all bad considering the youth, beauty and charms of Constance, the grocer's daughter, who is the lady behind the counter. The old man, however, is the rock against which the bark of true love almost wrecks itself.

Poor Dave is caught in the act and promptly "fired," with neatness and dispatch. James Fixer, an old friend, proves a friend indeed. Dave shall have the girl, father or no father. Accordingly, he goes into the grocery store, makes a few purchases, and then accuses the proprietor of stealing his wallet. The police are called in and the grocer is locked up. Enter Dave. Like a true hero, he tells the captain that he, and not the old man, is the thief. Jubilantly the grocer returns to commune with butter and eggs, et similia, while Dave is placed in a cell.

Mr. Fixer is delighted at his clever scheme. Now for the climax. He goes to the grocer, to whom he apologizes, saying he had made a mistake and that the wallet was in his possession. The old man is deeply touched at Dave's sacrifice, and the pair forthwith gain the young man's release. To show his appreciation, the grocer gladly consents to his daughter's marriage to Dave.

THE LOST ADDRESS (Jan. 8).—Harry Locke and Dora Davey have safely navigated the Ocean of Love, and are now entering the Port of Matrimony. The guests are all assembled, the bridegroom is being congratulated on his great win, and the bride looks ravishingly beautiful in her immaculate robes and the orange blossoms. They are waiting—waiting for the Rev. Sackcloth, who is to perform the ceremony.

Where can His Reverence be? Out hunting for the house wherein principals and guests are impatiently waiting for his arrival. He has lost the address and recalls neither street nor number. After a strenuous but futile hunt, the parson returns home, removes his hat, drops into a chair and industriously wipes the perspiration off his massive brow. In the depths of his hat, he discovers the lost address, and, though two hours late, he rushes to unite two loving and eager souls, who were about to call a justice of the peace to the rescue.

TRACKED THROUGH THE DESERT (Jan. 10).—Jim Conway, a young and energetic prospector, rebels at what he terms Sheriff Caldwell's impertinence, and persists in his associations with evil companions. Victoria, his wife, at last wins him over, and Jim cuts loose from the gangsters. After due preparation, he starts for the mountains to stake his claim; Victoria is to follow shortly after.

The gangsters, stealthily, and in the night, go to Miller's ranch and make away with all his horses. Sheriff Caldwell answers the alarm, and with his posse is soon on the trail of the horse-thieves. The trail leads them through the desert. The sheriff is obliged to dismount and, before he can collect his wits, the horse has vanished beyond the horizon. Alone and with his canteen empty, he staggers on and on through the desert. Meanwhile, the thieves, by mere chance, come upon Jim in the mountains, and try to make him to join them. The posse's approach gives Jim the opportunity to slip away, but, being closely pursued, he's forced to jump over a precipice. The thieves are corralled and taken to the lock-up.

Victoria, on her way to meet her husband, finds the riderless horse, and after a painstaking and dangerous hunt, reaches the almost exhausted and thirst-maddened sheriff. She knows just what to do, and quickly does it. The sheriff returns home not much the worse for his experience. The posse apprises Caldwell of Jim's connection with the horse-thieves, and of his escape. The boys insist that the sheriff drop sentiment and perform his duty. Reluctantly Caldwell leads his men in the search for Jim. Mrs. Caldwell, however, proposes to save the young man, and cleverly manages to decoy away the sheriff and his posse. Jim and Victoria cross in safety the border line, and in another state they begin life anew.

Gentlemen: —

The Mirroroide screen purchased from you about a month ago was installed the same day it was received and the show that night was like a new creation. Many came from all parts of the island to see same. The Press and those who have seen the picture on this screen are more than liberal in their praise.

The samples purchased from you about three months ago I have used to demonstrate, and with folding, rolling, and rough usage same is holding up. This screen in my opinion is the best for all climates' use, and I can recommend the Mirroroide to all motion picture exhibitors.

I am now using 8 amperes with a converter of my own construction, against 30 amperes formerly. This is indeed a revelation in perfect projection.

Very truly yours,

JUST TOO LATE (Jan. 13).—Stephen Weldron is awarded a large contract and is delighted at his good fortune. Cornelia, his good wife, also rejoices, for she sees visions of lovely new hats and other good things forever playing a tattoo on the portals of the feminine heart.

Stephen must catch the early train to Boone City to make legal and final arrangements with the contract givers. The matter is of utmost importance, and Cornelia wakes her hubby in time. Stephen, however, returns to dreamland, while the Mrs. is preparing breakfast. A more urgent call is made—there are but twenty minutes to catch that blessed train, on which hinges the Weldron's future. Stephen jumps out of bed, dresses, eats and departs, like a streak of lightning, and then begins a series of highly humorous mishaps. He misses the train, thanks to a lot of people and things that get in his way, and boards a freight car. but luck is against him. The next night he devotes considerable attention to his alarm clock, determined that the next time opportunity knocks at his door, he shall not be "just too late."

MUTT & JEFF AND THE ITALIAN STRIKERS (Jan. 13).—Section men are wanted on the C. O. D. Railroad. Mutt and Jeff are fatally forced to apply for work. Mutt qualifies to do the pick and shovel stunt, while Jeff, owing to his diminutive stature, is chosen to keep the time. The section boss hurries the twain on a train and delivers them to the seat of operation, which, alas! turns out to be the seat of war.

Striking Italians see Mutt and Jeff on their way to work and follow them, vowing vengeance. The boss warns them to run for their lives. The warning falls into willing ears, and the lanky fellow paces the runty one over the Marathon route. The strikers, however, cannot be shaken off. Luckily, a handcar is found. By strenuous work, Mutt and Jeff soon steal a lap on their pursuers. The Italians do not relish the idea of defeat, and press into service another handcar. Being experts at handcarring things, they quickly catch up with the boys, who desert their car and take to the road, with the strikers hot on the trail. A passing automobile saves Jeff, but Mutt makes a misstep and falls on the hard macadamized road, he also falls into the eager hands of his hunters. Jeff catches the train for "home," and waves a fond farewell to railroad life. Mutt is escorted, none too gently, to a watering tank and gets a bath.

THANHOUSER.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE (Jan. 16).—Dr. Jekyll, a young physician, is possessed of the idea that medicine can effect the soul as well as the body, and has many discussions with his old friend Lanyon, a doctor of the old school. Jekyll continues to experiment in secret, and finally his efforts are crowned with success. He discovers a mixture that brings out all the bad in his nature, and another that will act as an antidote.

But when he stands forth in his evil guise, Jekyll is horrified. He is such a wicked, repulsive creature that even the interests of science are lost sight of: and he decides to bury his discovery from everyone, realizing that it does not pay physicians or anyone else to bring out the evil that is in one.

The doctor finds, however, that it is easy to start evil doing, but not always possible to accomplish reform. The wicked genius that he brought to the surface, simply in the interests of science, returns at intervals to plague him. And in those stages of existence, the courtly, polished, tender-hearted Dr. Jekyll becomes Mr. Hyde, a monster who is feared and hated.

By the aid of his medicine, Dr. Jekyll is able to drive Mr. Hyde away, but as the change often takes place at times when he is far from his office, he is unable to mix the drug that restores him to a rational being again. At these times he lives in wretched lodgings, under the name of Mr. Hyde, and pays secret visits to the home of Dr. Jekyll. That latter's friends are surprised that the courtly doctor should have such an intimate, but he sadiy disregards their remonstrances, for he alone knows that Dr. Jekyll cannot ever be rid of Mr. Hyde.

Jekyll loves the vicar's daughter, and his love is returned. While calling upon her one day the change in identities comes upon him, and he hastily excuses himself to his fiancée. But as he passes out of the grounds, he becomes Mr. Hyde, the man who tortures little children and is a hater of all mankind. He returns to the girl, not as a suitor, but intending to be her slayer.

The vicar hears his daughter's cries and gallantly runs to her aid. The feeble old man, however, is no match for the maniac Hyde, and is killed. Hyde flees, safe for the time being. When Dr. Jekyll is restored to himself, his grief is profound. His life is forfeited, his happiness ruined. And at intervals growing briefer and briefer, the demon Hyde asserts his mastery. An accident deprives the doctor of the medicine that restores him to the Jekyll existence. He locks himself in his room, ordering his servant, through the barred doors, to bring him certain drugs. The servant, who loves Jekyll, does not recognize the voice of Hyde. He runs off and calls assistance, believing that the kindly doctor has been slain by Hyde, the man the servant hated.

The police arrive and Hyde is commanded to open the door in the name of the law. He is unable to restore himself to the Dr. Jekyll existence. As Hyde, his life forfeited, the wretched man ends his life with poison, just as the doors crash in, and the police enter, too late to save him for the gallows.

A NIAGARA HONEYMOON (Jan. 19).—A well-to-do family, living in a suburban town, was annoyed on receiving word that the wife's sister-in-law intended to pay them a visit. When she arrived, she was greeted coldly, compelled to perform menial services, and treated more like a servant than a relation. Naturally, she was very unhappy.

About this time the family was thrown into excitement by the news that the father's old chum in college, who had gone to Australia to make a fortune, had returned with $1,000,000, and intended to marry and settle down. The parents figured that this was an excellent chance for their only child, and planned to marry her to the millionaire.

The rich man came to be their guest, but strange to say, the fascinations of "daughter" had no effect upon him. Although the aunt tried to efface herself, she attracted his attention, and he soon fell in love with her, but the family did not suspect it.

The aunt went away, taking with her no regrets, leaving behind her no sorrow. The rich man, pleading an unexpected business engagement, hastily departed too, and they met on the same train.

The man from Australia decided to waste no time. He wired ahead to the city clerk of a town along the line to meet the train with a marriage license, promising a big fee. He also directed him to bring a minister along.

The aunt was bewildered by this chain lightning courtship. Before she realized what was going on, she had signed the application, and the minister was performing the ceremony on the observation platform of the rapidly moving train. When she left the town, she was a widow; two mile posts beyond, she was the bride of a wealthy man who loved her for herself alone. And the train was headed for Niagara Falls, where their honeymoon was spent.

Many couples have gone to Niagara Falls on honeymoon tours, but none of them ever took the minister and the marriage service along with them, so there was some eclat to this wedding.

The happy couple returned to greet the bride's relatives, and give them a chance to show how social training enables persons to conceal rage, envy and chagrin under the most trying of circumstances.

COMET.

THE BRAID (Jan. 15).—John Jackson returns to his house one night to find his wife Sarah ill. Just as he is about to send for a physician she expires in his hands. John is inconsolable, and after the funeral, wanders about the city trying to forget his great grief. He strays into a public park. He is almost staggered, for lo and behold, he sees a woman who is the very image of his poor Sarah. He follows the woman, who proves to be an actress. He learns where she is playing and watches her perform. Her very gestures suggest Sarah. He seeks an interview and is ushered into the presence of the actress. John falls in love with her desperately, but does not reveal that her striking resemblance to his wife is the real cause of his infatuation. He writes her to dine at his home and she accepts. In a jewel casket there is a braid of golden hair which John clipped from Sarah's head while she was in her coffin. Jokingly John asks the actress to put on one of Sarah's gowns, and as John endeavors to kiss her the actress playfully eludes him, and taking the braid, pins it to her own hair. The procedure maddens John, and he tries to choke the woman. Just as he is about to kill the actress, he fancies he can see the dead wife slip from out of her portrait and hear her voice calling. He immediately releases his hold and the actress, believing him to be insane, quickly flees from the house, apparently glad that she escaped with her life. Then John bends before the portrait and on his knees, begs forgiveness. Sarah, or the vision, beckons him that he need not fear, and with a smile on her face, disappears.

THIRTY DAYS (Jan. 19).—Jack Ralston, a young millionaire, must earn $30 in thirty days, in order to win the hand of Hazel Wilson, daughter of Jonette Wilson, an irascible and grouchy old man. Jack applies for various jobs. His first is at a bank. Next he tries his hand as a janitor's assistant; then he chops wood, and follows by working in a second-hand clothing store as a "puller-in." He also tries his hand at carrying the hod. At each position he is an inglorious failure. Then he elects to hire out his machine at so much an hour. He takes his auto to a public stand in front of a railway station and his first customer is Mr. Wilson. The latter is on his way to New York. He misses the train and appeals to Jack to take him to the city. Jack is relentless, and says that if he wants to go it will cost him $30. This Mr. Wilson pays, although against his will. Having earned the requisite $30, Jack naturally wins Hazel, and they are married.

HOW SHE MARRIED (Jan. 13).—There was no doubt that Mary Scott was a plain, homely-looking girl. Still she found a lover, and on her wedding morning she was as pleased as a bride could be. Just before the ceremony, however, she receives a letter from her intended husband, telling her he does not love her. He prefers beauty and poverty to ugliness and money. He loves her pretty sister. There is a hysterical scene and Mr. Scott, the disappointed bride's father, departs for his office in a very troubled state of mind, not knowing how to get Mary off his hands. But a solution of the problem is found amongst his own office force. He finds it necessary to discharge one of them, Bill Robinson. Before Bill vanishes, a thought occurs to Mr. Scott. Would he be willing to marry his daughter? Bill is.

Off he goes to interview the young lady. He balks at her ugliness, and, of course, prefers the pretty sister, whom he persuades to elope with him. She tells her ugly sister, Mary, and persuades the latter to take her place. Mary covers her head with a veil, so when Bill Robinson receives his precious charge from out of the window and carries her to the waiting automobile and speeds off to the clergyman to be married to her, he is under the impression he has the pretty sister for a wife. Starting in hot pursuit, Mr. Scott reaches the clergyman's house just as the marriage is being performed. Bill is removing the veil from the bride's face, only to discover he has married the wrong girl. (Copyrighted, 1911, by Imp Films Co.)

COTTON INDUSTRY (Jan. 13).—First the negroes, hundreds of them, are seen in the fields, gathering the fleecy staple and putting it in large bags. When these are filled, the wagons are loaded with the sacks and hauled to the gins. After ginning, the bales are taken to the cities to be sold. Often in front of stores, there are frequently fifty or more wagons, surrounded by cotton buyers, who are sampling the cotton and paying for same according to grade. When the sale is made, the bales are hauled to the wharf and taken on board vessels, where they are shipped to the manufacturing markets, both north and south. (Copyrighted, 1911, by Imp Films Co.)

THE DESERTED SHAFT (Jan. 15).—Frank Davis is the favored suitor for the hand of Lottie Maxwell, to the discomfiture of Edgar Perry. Both men are employed by a construction company. There is an opening scene of Perry proposing marriage to the girl and her refusal. She meets Davis, and they plight their troth, going to his mother for her blessing, which is given, and they are happy.

Davis is entrusted with the pay-roll, to carry to the camp, and, placing the money inside his shirt, he hastens away. Perry is piqued and bent on revenge. He meets Davis near a deserted mine shaft and the two have a war of words, terminating in a personal encounter, in which Davis is worsted and hurled into the shaft. The men wait at the camp for their regular pay, which is not forthcoming. They visit the offices and the management, in surprise tells them the money was entrusted to the care of Davis. The delegation visits the home of the mother and she informs them her son has not been home. There can be but one solution to the problem—the young man has stolen the money and decamped.

There is a reward offered for his arrest and he is regarded as a fugitive from justice. Perry reads the placard and is astonished. He goes to the mother and confesses his crime in the presence of the sweetheart. The women lose no time in running to the abandoned shaft and find Davis, still alive, although almost dead from his long exposure in the water. The assistance of the surveyors is sought, and a quick rescue is made. (Copyrighted, 1911, by Imp Films Co.)

AFTER MANY YEARS (Jan. 18).—Two brothers part and take different paths. One of them makes a success in life; the other is, if not a failure, at any rate, not conspicuously flourishing. It chances that both brothers are residents of the same city, unknown to each other. The little daughter of the wealthy brother gives a children's party. This attracts the attention of a poorly dressed child, who is invited to the party out of pity. The child is taken sick and is carried home to her parents by the rich father of the party-giving child. When the two men meet it is discovered that they are brothers.

I WISH I HAD A GIRL (Jan. 20).—Tompkins wished he had a girl other than the homely specimen who confronted him in his boarding house day by day, so Tompkins went off in search of the girl of his imagination. Very early in his adventures three or four of her turned him down, and even the maid servant in the house where he was making himself agreeable helped to pile contumacy on poor Tompkins' head. His most promising adventure was making love to a pretty little cook. But this indignant lady not only repelled his amorous advances, but covered him with flour, so the unsuccessful wooer finally returned home and was content to accept the smiles of the homely girl in the boarding house. (Copyrighted, 1911, by Imp Films Co.)

THE FLAG OF DISTRESS (Jan. 20).—Reuben Wilson has an appointment with a couple of friends, who are awaiting him outside his house. Finding it impossible to escape the sharp attentions of his wife, he signals to them with a flag. Finally making a dash for it, he is also accompanied by his suspicious but unrelenting spouse. But his two friends are loyal. They get up a row with Reuben and run away and are, of course, pursued by Reuben, who thus obtains liberty to join

REX.

THE BOARDING HOUSE MYSTERY (Jan. 11).—A. Lancelot is one of the common or garden variety of Rubes, and like the rest of his gender, aspires to become the Big Something-or-other in the teeming metropolis. His particular weakness is flattering himself into the belief that he possesses ventriloquial powers, but he is just enough of a ventriloquist to have things happen to him. He saves up sufficient money to buy a dummy, and sets off for the city.

The night when he makes his appearance in the limelight, the audience is panic-stricken. Vaudevillians can stand for a whole lot, including their rights, and they commence to announce in something above a whisper, that they intend to have them—and use them. They do, also employing sundry antiquated tomatoes and a few things of a less tender and clinging disposition as a means to their end, their end being Prof. Lancelot's five diminutive feet of nerve. He is discouraged on the face of it.

He meanders back to his boarding house, very much meditative. And then Fate enters to complete the bout. The landlady has painted his room that very day, and left the pail of red paint in a corner. In his grief and rage he hurls his dummy into a corner, and it just happens to be the wrong corner—"Beyond the pale," so to speak. The dummy, being only a dummy, connects with the paint. A pair of lovers on the veranda outside, see him pack the paint-covered dummy into a trunk, at once conclude that a gruesome murder has been committed. Immediately, if not sooner, they arouse the house and advertise their conclusions. When the mystery—and Prof. Lancelot—are finally cleared, what is left of him is filled with but one desire—to take the first road but the Erie back to the farm.

POWERS.

LITTLE BOY BLUE (Jan. 16).—Eugene Fields' famous poem funishes the theme of this pathetic story.

The little toy dog is covered with dust,
  But sturdy and staunch he stands,
And the little toy soldier is red with rust
  And the musket moulds in his hands.
Time was when the little toy dog was new
  And the soldier was passing fair;
And that was the time when our little Boy Blue
  Kissed them, and put them there.
"Now, don't you go till I come," he said,
  "And don't you make any noise."
So toddling off to his trundle-bed,
  He dreamt of the pretty toys.
And as he was dreaming, an angel song
  Awakened our little Boy Blue—
Oh, the years are many, the years are long,
  But the little toy friends are true.
Aye, faithful to little Boy Blue they stand,
  Each in the same old place,
Awaiting the touch of a little hand,
  The smile of a little face.
And they wonder, as waiting the long years through,
  In the dust of that little chair,
What has become of our little Boy Blue
  Since he kissed them, and put them there!

HISTORICAL MOHAWK VALLEY (Jan. 16).—Three centuries of contrast along the Mohawk Valley of New York makes one of the most entrancing travel pictures ever made. Every bit of old history connected with each view is explicitly given, and the grand old battle-fields, inns and taverns make imposing pictures even though hundreds of years old.

BILL'S SURRENDER (Jan. 20).—Those noble girls who go down to the settlement houses in the slums to spread light and give aid to the needy can tell strange stories. Lucile is one of them, and she holds to her work bravely. Each day she must tolerate insults from the street corner gang as she goes to and from the settlement building. But one day, one of the gang calls an emphatic halt on the proceedings; he becomes her friend, she his. He becomes, too, the link between her and her good work. The big opportunity comes when she saves them all from a term in jail; and her reward is not only a dozen or so recruits to her class, but also a choice collection of guns, brass knuckles and black jacks, the use of which the owners swear off for good and all time.

AMBROSIO.

BLOOD VENGEANCE (Jan. 3).—This is a drama by Gabriele d'Annunzio, most famous of Italian poets and playwrights. It shows a servant who destroys her mistress in order to marry the husband. The dead woman's spirit returns asking for vengeance, and the daughter proceeds to avenge her mother. She buys a bag of poisonous adders, and before entering her step-mother's room permits the reptiles to sink their fangs into her arm. She discovers the lifeless body of the guilty woman, and learns that her father has committed the deed. The picture ends with a wonderfully acted scene between the father and daughter, in which she sinks to the ground, dying from the snakes' poison.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE INEVITABLE JOHNSON (Jan. 13).—Johnson, in the schoolroom, is successful in arousing the anathemas of the professor by his pin sticking proclivities. He it is who brings ruin upon the professor's headgear. And when the boys have retired, he it is who makes night hideous with ear-splitting blasts upon the trombone, and each time Johnson comes out on top, the innocent suffering for the guilty. Similarly, when Smith endeavors to hand a bouquet from out his dormitory window to that of the dainty little confection in the adjoining room, and drops the posy, Johnson secures it, and covers himself with honor by presenting it to the fair damsel. Like the poor, Johnson is always with us, or at any rate, is always ousting Smith. The latter, to take his attention off the professor's daughter, engages him in conversation as to the purchase of a lottery ticket, where once more Johnson scores by securing the first prize. This and similar trials, is more than Smith can bear, and he loses his reason, once more to find that Johnson has been successful and is in charge of the asylum whither Smith is conveyed. The last scene shows Johnson occupying Smith's place at home, having possessed himself of Smith's wife, his favorite chair, his pipe and worldly belongings.

RELIANCE.

THE GANG FIGHTER (Jan. 10).—A rough, overbearing leader of a city gang loses his prestige by rescuing a pretty little mission worker from the insults and badgering of his fellow gangsters. The rival for the gang leadership makes much of it and plays upon the feelings of the gang to the extent of causing a revolt against him. The leader tries to forget the girl, but he is gradually won over by her and becomes a regular attendant at the mission. His excuse to himself is that she needs protection, and he walks home with her most every night. The rival hears of it and takes the gang down to the mission one night to prove him a backslider. They find him there alone with the girl just starting for her home. They jeer at him and insult him, but she prevents his fighting. He finds he is deposed and goes to work on the docks, where he speedily gets to be foreman. Hearing of the chaos in his old district before the coming election, he goes back one night to get back his leadership, but the gang "get him" and the little mission worker finds him beaten up and takes him home. That breaks the last link between himself and the gang and he turns to his work—and the girl.

THE QUARREL (Jan. 13).—The husband, wife and best man are dining together in honor of the first anniversary of the wedding. The two men imbibe too much champagne and the husband and wife leave the restaurant. The best man sits alone bemoaning the fact that everybody is happily married but himself. As he gets up to go he finds the wife's bracelet and decides to go to their home and return it. In the meantime, the couple have arrived home and have quarreled over the husband's intoxicated condition. He goes to his room to pack up and she writes a note that she intends to end it all. The best man arrives unobserved and, looking into the husband's room, is startled at his preparations for a hurried departure. Hearing sobbing in the next room, he tiptoes there and finds the wife on her knees before the couch at the far end of the room. He slips in without being heard and reads the note. Realizing the situation, he sobers up and hits upon an idea for reconciling them. He puts his handkerchief over his face and, seizing a silver brush, handle before him, he shouts, "hands up." The wife thinks it is a burglar and screams. The husband, thinking her screams are but a ruse, goes on packing. The best man, wondering why the husband does not put in an appearance, goes through all sorts of diabolical actions, to make the wife continue her screams. At last the husband rushes in and takes his wife in his arms to protect her, telling the burglar to do his worst. When the best man sees that the couple are so busy with their reconciliation that even a burglar is forgotten, he takes off his mask and makes his errand known, then quickly leaves.

Among the Exhibitors

San Diego, Cal.—The Grand Theater, which recently opened as a moving picture house, has been playing to full capacity ever since.

Wheeling, W. Va.—Plans are being made by Charles A. Feinler for a moving picture theater to be erected in Market Street.

Berkeley, Cal.—A municipal moving picture theater is to be built here. Communications regarding the matter are to be addressed to the Mayor of the city.

Bozeman, Mont.—A number of improvements are to be made in the Gem Moving Picture Theater.

Emmettsburg, Iowa.—A new moving picture theater is to be built here by Clint Smith.

Lamoni, Iowa.—J. W. Michael will open a new moving picture theater here.

Glenwood, Minn.—The Crystal Moving Picture Theater is now open under the management of S. E. Wright.

Anamosa, Iowa.—A moving picture theater will be opened in the Alspaugh Building by W. H. Lohrman.

New York City.—Shampan & Shampan are preparing plans for a moving picture and vaudeville theater, on a plot 50 by 100, located on the north side of Monroe Street. The theater consists of auditorium and one balcony, having the facade designed in French renaissance style of architecture, and will be modernly equipped throughout. George E. Siegel is the owner.

Fargo, N. D.—The Owl poolroom, on Front Street, has been sold to an unknown theatrical syndicate who will remodel it into a moving picture show instead.

Ripon, Wis.—Weary, Russell & Green, who conduct moving picture theaters at Waupun, have leased the Ripon Theater on the west side of the public square and will convert it into a picture play.

Duluth, Minn.—Charles Skiff, part owner of the Bijou Theater, in Negaunee, has purchased the Royal Theater in the Voelker block from the Royal Theater Company, of which C. S. Sullivan is manager.

Detroit, Mich.—The four moving picture theaters controlled by the Casino Company here have switched from the use of licensed films of the Motion Picture Patents Company to independent pictures of the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company.

Milwaukee, Wis.—W. H. Goff, Bruce, has purchased land in this city, on which he will erect a modern vaudeville and motion picture house. The building will cost about $20,000.

Newark, N. J.—The Broad Street Theater, at 520 Broad Street, has opened under new management.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Fern Amusement Company is preparing to erect another motion picture theater here. It will be located on Third and Clark Streets.

Louisville, Ky.—A building permit was issued by Robert J. Tilford, City Building Inspector, for a $10,000 brick and steel motion picture theater to be erected by the Pastime Amusement Company, at 18th and Gallagher Streets. Fred Erhart is the architect and Joe Sibler, the contractor.

Pittsfield, Mass.—Rev. Father William Lattanzi, owner of the Columbia Opera House building in North Adams, has about completed arrangements whereby Marshall & Bond, whose presence in the building has prohibited the granting of a license for motion pictures in the building, will move. It is probable that a theater license will be taken out instead of what is known as a public hall license. Contracts for the remodeling of the fire escapes on the building have been let to Marshall & Bond.

St. John, N. B., Can.—Mr. F. G. Spencer has purchased the Orpheum Hall, at Halifax, from J. E. Roy.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A new moving picture theater is being planned to be built at 2846-48 North 22d Street, which will be under the ownership of Adolph Bonnem.

THE MAJESTIC

Is now firmly established among the leaders in the manufacturing of high class pictures, as is evidenced by the congratulatory letters received daily.

These letters come unsolicited from the exhibitors throughout the country—exhibitors who appreciate our efforts to improve the quality of the independent programme.

Miss Dolly Spurr, the owner of the Royal Theatre, Marion, Indiana, sends us the following:

> "It looks like Majestic pictures are going to outrival in popularity any make of film we have had yet. May another New Year bring four Majestics a week; I can never get too much of a good thing."

TWO GOOD MAJESTICS A WEEK

SUNDAY, JANUARY 7TH. "TRAINING A HUSBAND"—A fine comedy—a fault-finding husband who temporarily gets the whip hand of his wife and his mother-in-law through the aid of his pretty stenographer, but who is finally put in his properly humble position—a comedy of complications.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12TH, "GOSSIP"—A double exposure comedy, showing exterior and interior scenes at same time—relating the bad effects of gossip—how the story grows as told from one to another and the sure cure for the dreaded evil.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 14TH, "HIS FATE'S REHEARSAL"—One of the strongest dramatic pictures ever produced—the husband reaching home after a bad night's carousal and his wife's father, a physician, administers treatment which causes husband to live through a terrible strain of mind—a strong picture—a good moral lesson.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19TH, "NEXT"—A roaring comedy—the lonesome barber, the manicure girl, the nice boy falls in love, thrown out by parents and finally the manicure girl wins parents—a laugh every foot.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21ST, "SPARE THE ROD"—A strong lesson, showing the results of using the whip on children—the temper of the father is finally overcome by the ever-loving mother who takes child from home, earns her own living by teaching school and finally shows husband the error of his ways.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26TH, "THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE"—A comedy. Father has a little extra money, hires an automobile, apparently runs over a woman who then proceeds to extract money, piano, furniture and medicine. Father finally driven to poverty until the discovery of farce and deception.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28TH, "A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE"—The widow at home, in love with a young fellow, who partly returns the affection—the return of the widow's daughter from school—the transferring of affection of young fellow from mother to daughter—then the hidden suffering and sacrifice for strong love for her daughter.

Each and every one of the January pictures is first class in every detail —each one with a clever and distinct plot, each one should be in every Independent Theatre in America and the only way to secure them is to insist every day that your Exchange gives them to you.

MAKE THEM YOURSELF

CLEAR AS GLASS — WILL OUTLAST GLASS

You can write or print on them as easily as on a sheet of writing paper.

Ask your Film Exchange for them or write to BATTERSHALL & OLESON 39 W. Adams St.

Chicago, Ill.

In answering advertisements kindly mention The Moving Picture World.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and any one can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of three dollars ($3) cash with order, we will send by express, charges not prepaid, or $3.50 by registered mail, prepaid, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address

MAKE 50c DO THE WORK OF 80c

Always buy the regular M. P. Machine size 3 in One—½ pint for 50c. You'll save 30c, for you get 8 times as much oil as if you bought the small bottles.

And remember, 3 in One never deteriorates nor turns rancid. The last drop is just as good as the first.

3 in One is so clear and pure that the finest watchmakers use it. It lubricates perfectly every working part of every moving picture machine, star wheel, flywheel, shutter gear, rewinder and everything else that requires oiling. Makes every part run smoothly and much easier.

Repair bills and bills for new parts are chiefly caused by thick, greasy oils which collect dirt, gum and clog the delicate mechanisms, thus causing them to wear. 3 in One is absolutely free from grease—never collects dirt. Instead, it cuts away all dirt and gum and saves wear, tear and expense.

3 in One cleans and polishes all wood and metal surfaces around a theater. Positively prevents rust, indoors and out.

NO. 1000—C MOTOR DRIVEN MOTIOGRAPH

THE 1912 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH IS DAILY REPLACING MACHINES OF ALL OTHER MAKES.

THIS MODEL HAS PROVEN EVEN MORE POPULAR THAN EARLIER MODELS—AND THE MOTIOGRAPH HAS ALWAYS BEEN POPULAR WITH GOOD OPERATORS.

Mr. Bartholomae, Prop. Garfield Theatre, Chicago, says: "I am building a new house now and nothing but The Motiograph will do."

A. L. Orr, of Dwight, Illinois, says: "I would not have any other make machine. The Motiograph is the best and I have used them all; not a dollar for repairs in a year."

AN IMPORTANT INSTALLATION LAST WEEK WAS THE PLACING OF A 1912 MODEL IN THE JANET, CHICAGO. Says Mr. Hyman, the owner: "We are more than pleased; we will put The Motiograph in our other house."

1912 Models now being shipped.

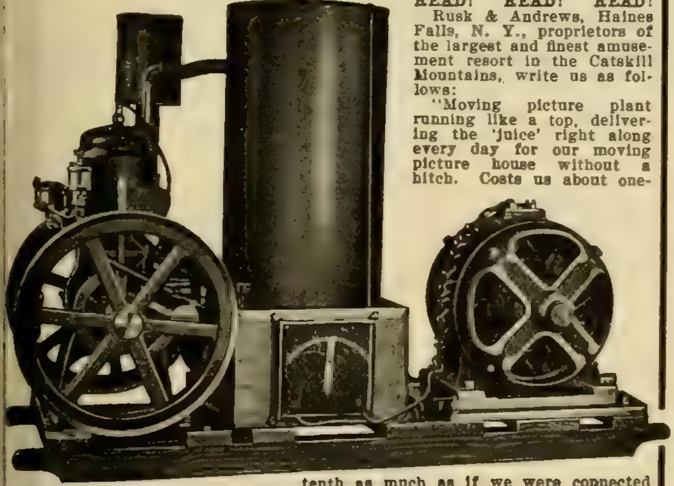
The Biggest Sensation Yet is the $250.00 Detroit Moving Picture Electric Light Plant



READ! READ! READ!

Rusk & Andrews, Haines Falls, N. Y., proprietors of the largest and finest amusement resort in the Catskill Mountains, write us as follows:

"Moving picture plant running like a top, delivering the 'juice' right along every day for our moving picture house without a hitch. Costs us about one-tenth as much as if we were connected with the Public Service, also pumps water to all our buildings, 2,000 gallons per day, and have it for fire engine in case of fire."

Used and highly endorsed by the U. S. Army.

Many write us that the total cost of light for running their show for a week is less than one dollar. Think of it.

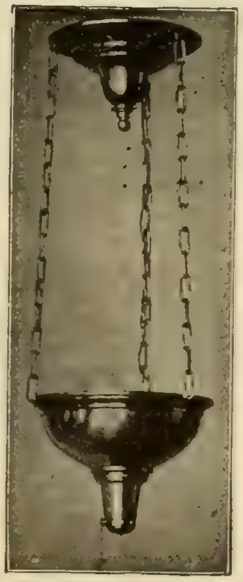
Gives you better light than you can buy. Gives you the same light in the afternoon as at night. Can be operated by a boy ten years old.

Larger sized plants at proportionately low prices. THE SALVATION OF THE MOVING PICTURE BUSINESS. Write for Bulletin No. 101. You will find it the most intensely interesting little book you ever read if you are interested in moving pictures.

IMMEDIATE SHIPMENT. Wire your order and let your remittance follow by mail.

DETROIT ENGINE WORKS, Dept. No. 102, Detroit, Mich., U. S. A. Sole manufacturers of the best and only real moving picture electric light plant in the world.

WE WILL PAY YOUR FARE TO DETROIT to see this wonderful plant in operation if there does not happen to be one of them at work in your immediate vicinity, the fare to be deducted from the purchase price. Write for full information regarding this liberal offer.



No. E-405. List $ 0.50.
Ask discounts of your Electric dealer. If he does not carry, write us direct.

THE INNOCENCE OF YOUTH INFLUENCES THE BANDIT

THE OUTLAW AND THE BABY

A bandit is shown hospitality by a woodman's wife, from whose hut a baby later disappears. Suspicion at once rests on the bandit, who, however, only finds the child lost and wandering but risks being captured to return it to the anxious parents. Then by a bold trick he evades the sheriff's men and crosses the border line to live life anew, influenced by the child and by the happiness it brings to a home.

the gifted bard once put into immortal words. But whether it is a comedy, drama or tragedy he neglected to state. Sometimes it is all three, with a suffragette ballet thrown in. Often, too, its humor and its tragedy are only divided by a hairline, and in most cases it's a woman's hair. We humans are the only animals that make fools of themselves; and if sometimes our errors are redeemed, it is not because of our wisdom, but in spite of our folly. We prove these few facts in MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING & SALES CO.

111 East 14th Street - - - - - New York

An Explanation

September 21st, 1911, a franchise was voted unanimously by the board of directors of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, to the GEM MOTION PICTURE COMPANY. Later, the makers of product whose quality could not stand competition, realizing that Marion Leonard, as a star in our productions, meant cancellations, succeeded in working up a scare among themselves to such an extent that they succeeded in influencing enough votes among the Sales Company Directors, to have the franchise rescinded arbitrarily the same day the franchise was granted. The matter was then laid over for the next directors' meeting, and the Sales Company would not consider marketing our films (which we claim to be the best on the market, whether Independent or Licensed), unless we paid a commission of two cents (2c.) per foot to the Sales Company.

This would add an immense loss weekly in addition to the $40,000.00 we have already invested.

At the Sales Company Directors' meeting, January 10th, we tried to avoid litigation and trouble by offering to pay twice the amount in dues and assessments as any other Sales Company manufacturer on a one release basis, and a bonus of $5,000.00, about $15,000.00 all told, for the privilege of marketing one reel a week. This they also voted down.

What chance for quality has an Independent exhibitor, if capable manufacturers are surpressed?

To the many exchanges who have shown their appreciation of our product by ordering it, and also to the many, many hundreds of exhibitors who have written, commending us on our efforts, we sincerely thank you all, and regret to announce, that for the above reasons, the GEM will not release on the advertised date.

The REX Motion Picture Manufacturing Co., who intend making two releases weekly, commencing January 28th, 1912, have purchased all our "Marion Leonard GEM negatives."

Respectfully,

Earle Williams

FATHER AND SON.
MONDAY JANUARY 15th.

An orphan in manhood stands by the man who cared for him when a child. His gratitude wins a rich reward. It touches the heart.

Bunny

CHUMPS.
TUESDAY JANUARY 16th.

Two of a kind, John Bunny and Marshall P. Wilder. A comedy that makes the biggest kind of a hit. A ripping good laugh.

Wilder

Maurice Costello

CAUGHT IN THE RAIN
WEDNESDAY JANUARY 17th.

This is a "catchy" drama. One fellow in trouble helps another out of trouble. His generosity meets his girl's approval and she consents to be his wife.

TOM TILLING'S BABY.
FRIDAY JANUARY 19th.

Kenneth Casey

To "pull" a practical joke on the Nurse Maid, the Butler kidnaps the baby, who is found by Tom, the newsboy. He gets a fat reward—the butler loses his job. Funny, and serious, too.

Miss Christie

A GIRL OF THE WEST.
SATURDAY JANUARY 20th.

Certainly gets us. She is full of pluck and able to take care of herself when attacked. "She's a trump." Her beau tells her so and then and there proposes; he gets her.

"THE PEANUT INDUSTRY"

An industrial picture showing the rise and fall of the Peanut. Of course, the locale is Virginia, and the growers, pickers, packers and shippers are all indigenous to the soil. The small boy in the gallery will enjoy this picture and find out that peanuts are (not like nutmegs) made in Connecticut, but really grow in the South.

"A DARK DECEPTION"

A neat little flirtation episode by which Peggy Glenwood might have lost her excellent sweetheart, except that he did not take the situation seriously. Peggy thinks it is just fun to invite Count De Tears to call and see her, but Sweetheart George breaks up the party and after assisting the Lothario out of the windows tells his little girl if she wants to be happy she must be good.

Released Thursday, January 18th, 1912 Length 1000 ft.

"A JUST VERDICT"

A very dramatic story in which a suicide uses a revolver which is engraved with the name of his daughter's sweetheart. A guest of the house, who is a somnambulist, walking in his sleep, falls over the suicide's body and on awakening believes that he has killed his host. Dean, the sweetheart, is arrested for murder, but a letter the suicide left for his daughter is found, and the girl saddles a horse and is just in time to clean up the mystery.

Released Monday, January 22nd, 1912 Length 1000 ft.

"THE LADY POLICE"

This picture is one of the biggest laughs ever put on the screen. A town has elected a female town-council, who appoint Lady Policemen. It works splendidly, for the men are only too much delighted to be arrested and put in jail, where they have a jolly time of it. The wives, however, do not enjoy the situation, and storm the jail, take their husbands away and leave the police in tears.

Released Saturday, January 20th, 1912 Length 433 ft.

"A BOARDING HOUSE ROMANCE"

Bessie and Ned, who are sweethearts, have a falling-out. Ned complains to the landlady, who suggests that he shall pay her a little attention to make Bessie jealous. The star-boarder then gets jealous of the landlady and everything is on edge. Finally both couples see their folly and make up their minds to return to their real lovers and once more enjoy happiness.

Released Saturday, January 20th, 1912 Length 417 ft.

"A COMPROMISE"

This photo-play illustrates the proverb that "what is good for the goose is good for the gander." Mrs. Wallace favors pretty girls for the help, and Mr. Wallace is addicted to kissing them, whereupon the lady of the house fires the girls and engages men and in turn practices the same flirtation. Then there is a fuss and a compromise is made by installing colored help, and peace is restored.

Released Sat. Jan. 20th, '12 Length 175 feet

"MAKING HAY"

"Making Hay" is an industrial picture, very pretty and very interesting to the city child, who probably does not often see the country in August or enjoy the pleasure of romping in the new-mown hay.

"THE STOLEN NICKEL" By Bannister Merwin

CAST.

Billy	Yale Boss
His Father	Robert Conness
His Mother	Mary Fuller
Another Boy	Philip Tannura
The Little Girl With the Nickel	Edna May Weick

A little boy, deprived of an allowance, stole a nickel to buy a turtle, and through various occupations yielding one cent each, earned enough to pay it back, thereby relieving his heavy heart. After this he received a weekly allowance from his parents. This story has a strong heart tug and a double moral.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 24th

"FATHER'S BLUFF" By Bannister Merwin

CAST.

Father	William Wadsworth
His Wife	Mrs. Wallace Erskine
His Daughter	Gertrude McCoy
The Sewing Machine Agent	Frank Sylvester

Father is shiftless and is kept comfortable by his hard working wife and daughter. Every time they fail to please him he brings them around by threatening to commit suicide. One day, however, his bluff is called by providing every means for a comfortable exit from this sphere, and he becomes a changed man.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26th

"FOR THE CAUSE OF THE SOUTH"

CAST.

Auntie	Laura Sawyer
Her Niece	Bessie Learn
Captain Dalton, U.S.A.	Benjamin Wilson
Colonel Randall, a Confederate Officer	Charles Ogle
His Son	Guy Hedlund
General Lee	James Gordon

This tragic story is told by a sweet-faced woman in answer to her niece's query, "Why have you never married, auntie?"

Her father carried a dispatch for Robert E. Lee and sought refuge in his home from the pursuing troops. A bloody fight took place, and in defense of the Southern cause she shot and killed her lover, a Union boy in blue.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27th

(Two films on one reel.)

"THE NEW EDITOR"

CAST.

The Old Editor of the "Daily Observer"	William Wadsworth
The New Editor	Mrs. C. Jay Williams
Boss of the Ranch	Robert Brower
Leader of the Cowboys	Richard Neill

She buys the "Daily Observer," and her first publication severely criticises the conduct of a number of hilarious cowboys. They in turn set out to avenge such freedom of the press, but on finding a woman serenely calm to their wrathful outburst, they become subscribers instead of avengers.

"U. S. Volunteer Life-Saving Corps" New York City

A picture of great interest, taken along the water fronts of New York, showing the rescue of the corps in which even the bootblacks at the Battery are enlisted. Also the excellent opportunities afforded by the free baths for swimming instructions.

H. H. JOHNSON, President

Champaign, Ill.
December, 29th, '11.

Precision Machine Co.,
New York City.

Gentlemen:-

The new mechanism which I received from you a few weeks ago has been tested out and I find that it is perfect in every detail.

I cannot praise this machine too much--it is so simple in operation, easy and simple to thread, quiet running, and the projected picture is discussed daily by the audience. They come to me with this question, "Why is it that your pictures don't hurt our eyes, and are so brilliant?" And they always finish the talk by saying, "Your pictures beat anything we ever saw before."

I wish to say this in regard to the Simplex machine--it is the best first aid to a disgusted audience who think pictures hurt their eyes. To compare it with other machines of today, there is none to compare it with; it stands out in a class by itself. Having used nearly all other makes of machines, I say this without prejudice toward any; I say it from the standpoint of a perfect picture on the curtain, and this is possible with the Simplex.

The new three-wing shutter is a great improvement over the one-wing which you first put out, and I cannot see any difference in the brilliancy of the picture.

In conclusion; I wish to say that the answer to a perfect picture is SIMPLEX PROJECTOR.

Is it possible to get the agency for your machine, I have had some inquiries about it and may be able to sell a few if I could get the agency. Let me know about it, and the discounts and other conditions regarding an agency.

Very truly yours,

H H Johnson

Facts and Comments

AT the eighth annual dinner of the Association of Theater Managers at the Hotel Knickerbocker that remarkable, though cheap genius, Percy G. Williams, speaking out of the fullness of a sorely aggrieved heart, attempted to sing the requiem of motion pictures, going on record with this startling and exclusive prediction: "The motion pictures as a form of amusement are coming to an end and the resident stock companies are taking their places." It will be seen, therefore, that Percy ventures two guesses as to the future, one negative and the other positive. To predict the end of the motion picture is just about as harmless a pastime as foretelling the finish of the telephone; both institutions have grown into the flesh and blood and bone and sinew of our modern civilization and so far from "going down" are on the upward grade. The motion picture is destined to reach heights far above the 10-20-30 horizon of Percy Williams. We, who have seen the most desperate attempts of ignorance and cupidity to injure the motion picture, are bound to believe in its indestructible vitality. Time and again men of the lowest instincts, bred in ignorance and folly, have invaded the motion picture field and have been unable to even impair the popularity of the picture. An art, which has successfully withstood such attempts to degrade and debase, must have its roots deep in the human heart and intelligence. The fact is that the motion picture patrons are improving in quality and exercise the functions of discriminating criticism with great success.

What is there in resident stock companies to threaten the moving pictures? Why should the budding artists, that are still striving to slough off the clinging garments of amateurishness be selected by Providence to kill off the motion picture? We should like to have Percy explain this strange vision of his more fully. Our observation and experience have never convinced us of any great vitality in stock companies. They are generally artificial growths, appealing to a special clientele, never very large or intellectual, subsisting too often on ancient and venerable melodramas. Compared to the stock company the motion picture is like a healthy bouncing youngster, while the stock company resembles an invalid, who depends on drugs and medicines.

We are not surprised that a well-known journalist, a guest at the dinner, took issue with Percy and entered the lists on behalf of the picture. His vision was not as circumscribed as that of the prophet of cheap vaudeville and cheap "stock." He of necessity is more intimately acquainted with the living forces in our modern civilization, and in vindicating the motion picture, he only vindicated his own intelligence and experience. We know that many men of the Percy Williams stamp detest the pictures with an unreasoning detestation. These only stand in their own light. The motion picture has come to stay and to grow, to carry forward the many tasks of the new century. It is far more reasonable to get in touch with it, to realize its possibilities and to acknowledge its wonderful improvement in every department.

OUR esteemed British contemporary, The Kinematograph & Lantern Weekly, takes exception to our article on the "Dangers of a Foreign Market," in as far as that article assumes to criticize the European films as distinctly inferior to our own. Our British friend remarks: "We recognize that the Yankee picture must always appeal to the taste of a large proportion of the Latin races, but . . . we feel constrained to remark that we have seen some American pictures in which the most noteworthy feature has been the entire absence of plot of any kind whatever. At any rate the English film gives a diversity of subject. Its titles are not always founded upon a sheriff, or a ranchman or his only daughter." You are entirely right about that and we frequently have criticised some American made products on the very grounds pointed out by you. We are, however, speaking of averages and as to the superiority of the American over the European product in point of morality and in point of art we have nothing to take back. As far as our critique of the British picture goes, we are sorry to say that the facts justify every syllable of it. While "Yankee films" are flooding the European market, while England admires the enterprise of "Yankee" producers, who invade the imperial soil and take pictures on the very spot, English films in this country are a hopeless drug on the market and cannot even please the Canadians, who are hungering for films made by English hands and English brains.

CENSORSHIP in order to be effective must be discriminating. This cardinal principle seems to have been recognized by the censors of Reading, Pa. There no wholesale condemnation of pictures is indulged in, but the committee only acts on specific instances brought to its notice by reliable persons. Whatever picture portrays crime for crime's sake, whatever picture appears to be suggestive of evil, whatever picture paints the revolting and disgusting sides of human existence comes under the ban, but no action is taken, unless upon the report of a person, deputized to visit the picture theaters. The offending party is then served with a notice in the nature of a warning and if he chooses to disregard the warning the whole matter is turned over to the police for further action. Like every other system of censorship, this method is open to many objections. The best way, no doubt, would be the old-fashioned democratic method to leave the bad picture undisturbed, as long as there are so many good pictures to combat it, but conditions today are radically different from the days in which Thomas Jefferson lived. In the large cities of the country, where the low and degraded elements of human society have a tendency to concentrate in certain quarters and thence spread contagion, sterner measures of repression are needed.

We know that many exhibitors, all of them for years in the business and all of them good judges of public taste and sentiment, are heartily in favor of drastic methods of dealing with the undesirable element. Within recent times pictures have been thrown upon the market that are positively vile. They are not many, it is true, but they are advertised in lurid and offensive posters and injure the industry and the decent exhibitors. A picture, heralding the deeds of a notorious bandit, who is mentioned by name, is making the rounds of the Eastern States wherever the laxity of police regulations will permit. The posters and advertising matter sent out with this scandalous affair are an insult both to the eye and the sense of decency. What means have the public of knowing that the concern making these pictures is held in contempt by every respectable exhibitor? Many well-meaning men and women seeing the vicious looking posters and handbills will be shocked into a general condemnation of motion pictures. What can be done to stop this outrage? An appeal to the honor and decency of such people is ridiculous and they will respect nothing but the club of the policeman. The same people who manufacture these crime-films but recently attempted to make capital out of the accidental death of one of their actors—an attempt, which was happily foiled owing to the refusal of the decent portion of the press to receive their advertisements.

IN the scenario writer's page of this issue the much agitated question of copyright protection for motion picture scenarios seems to be set at rest by the letter of the Register of Copyrights for the Library of Congress who points out that publication instead of registration is the essential to copyright protection and that, before such publication, the Act of Congress specifically provides that protection is to be had under the common law and not under the Copyright Act. The matter is of more than passing moment to all concerned in the production or purchase of scenarios and this article and the first reply of the Register, published last week, should be read by everyone interested. It is odd that in spite of the general interest taken this is the first time that the matter has been pressed to a complete understanding of the situation.

A Gross Injustice to Film Makers

ARTICLE II.

BY W. STEPHEN BUSH.

IN another part of this issue THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD prints exclusively and in full the opinion handed down by the Appellate Division in the action of John R. Binns against the Vitagraph Company. The opinion is well worth the careful study of every person who is interested in the making of motion pictures.

It will be observed that the opinion does not go into the question of the rights of film makers to report or to represent persons and events of great public interest and importance. If newspapers and magazines possess this right and exercise it without any restraint other than that imposed by the laws of libel it seems to us the height of injustice and inequality to deny the same right to the men who make moving pictures. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has emphasized this fact time and again, in season and out of season. Substantially the same argument was brought forward by counsel for the Vitagraph Company, but the appellate tribunal has seen fit to ignore this aspect of the case entirely. It will appear from the text of the decision that the Appellate Division, which by the way was divided in its opinion, is not proud of its reasons and lays stress on the fact that it merely upholds the positive and express enactment of the legislature.

Indeed the reasoning of the legislature and the Appellate Division leads to a veritable mass of absurdities. Under the law, as now interpreted, every person actually paid and employed by the film makers in the production of pictures has a perfect legal right to sue the company and is bound to recover at least a nominal verdict. Hereafter film manufacturers will do well to obtain the written consent of every one who appears in their pictures for, as interpreted by the Appellate Division, the written consent of the person photographed is the only possible legal defense. A number of persons, accidentally photographed by the film makers, have so many causes of action and would beyond all doubt recover some kind of a verdict, if they decided to invoke the aid of the law. Even the photographing of a photograph, unless there was the written consent of the person photographed, would confer the right of action and the certainty of recovery of damages. There is no limit to the possibilities of harassing manufacturers of motion pictures under the provisions of this statute. They would have to print blanks for written consents by the hundred thousands and then dig deep into their treasuries to pay for the consents.

We have, in our last article on the subject, hinted at possible remedies for this dangerous and ridiculous state of affairs. There is but one remedy which will afford definite and certain relief and that is proper remedial legislation. The legislature should in response to enlightened public sentiment accord to the pictures the same franchises and privileges now enjoyed by the press. It never occurred to the plaintiff in the case against the Vitagraph Company to sue the newspapers for printing his picture and we cannot reasonably assume that every journal and magazine publishing his portrait had fortified itself against any possible suit under the "right of privacy law" by obtaining the written consent of Mr. Binns. Under the statute as passed by the legislature and now interpreted by the court his right to sue newspapers and magazines who had printed his portrait without his consent in writing, admitted of no doubt, but he chose to waive his rights as far as the newspapers were concerned only to enforce them to the letter against the moving picture company.

The Appellate Division says: "In the case at bar not only was the use of plaintiff's name and representation of his picture unauthorized and in violation of the statute, but it was made without any attempt to obtain his consent and with the sole view of obtaining profit to the defendant thereby." The learned court is ill informed. The moving picture company in giving prominence to the heroic deeds of Jack Binns was actuated much by the same motive as the newspapers. Matters of great contemporaneous interest are always and naturally given the right of way in the columns of the daily press, not necessarily because they are more profitable, but because the duty to the public demands such a course. The same applies to the motion picture companies; they too are guided by similar motives, though by no means to the same extent as the newspapers.

It must not be forgotten that the same law, which secures damages to one who has suffered from an invasion of his privacy, makes the violation of the statute a misdemeanor, the penalties for which are fine and imprisonment. That circumstance makes a change in the statutes imperative, if the manufacturers of films are not to be exposed to all kinds of unjustifiable prosecutions.

We are glad to learn that the Vitagraph Company through its counsel has filed a notice of appeal and that the verdict of the jury will once more be scrutinized by judicial minds. The Court of Appeals has the right to reverse the verdict entirely or to modify it by making the plaintiff accept a reduced amount of damages if he wishes to avoid a new trial.

The Big Photodrama

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

It is bound to come. When Percy Williams announces that repertoire companies will be the answer to moving pictures he overlooks the probable development in size and value of plays on the screen. The people are loyal to any kind of entertainment that deals with important material molded in attractive form and given at a price that enables it to be generally enjoyed, and this cannot be said of theatrical trust products nor of others on the stage that neglect large human demands. There is nothing superfluous in a fine photoplay but a strong and steady movement that carries the story directly to the end, its greatest fault being that there is not enough of it.

We seldom get enough of what is delightful in the photoplay, the great trouble being a scattering of forces that results in an enormous number of releases with few that are invigorating or worth seeing. Concentration on great dramatic ideas, large imaginative and emotional conceptions, may clear the output of rubbish, foster genuine playwrights through increased compensation, give both actor and director finer opportunity and awaken interest among those who cannot sit through a presentation of puerile playlets of paltry motive and dingy treatment.

One of those exhibitors who speaks of the public as "they" informed me the other day that "they" are easily amused and want farcical comedy. "They" means "Us." We do like comedy when it makes us laugh, but we only hear a few hee-haws in the average motion-picture audience, while a majority of those who have been led to believe they would be moved to laughter, sit as grief-stricken as the small boy who failed to discover until breakfast was over and the dishes cleared away, that he had room enough inside of his "tummy" for one more pancake.

If the crowd could get great art it would take it as it takes to the sight of a man navigating the air. We need not fear in this era of progression toward enlightenment that people will not enjoy any stimulus to thought though it be throbbing in the air above them. We need not fear that what is modern is lacking in thrill or dramatic quality. We are the audience—we are representative of all of us—and most of us have yet to meet a man among those ready to give the pictural drama unqualified support who fails to denounce the present output as being far below what it should be.

Inasmuch as the number of primitive minds in an average audience is comparatively small, the vast majority of us will be glad to dispense with playlets, considerately prepared for those not long out of their cribs and slightly advanced beyond shaking a rattle or chewing a rubber ring. Most of these photo-hysterics come from studio exhaust-pipes, the boiling over of scenario editors, performers and directors, and they are very gaseous. These ebullitions vanish in the thin air of obscurity, a relief of no doubt to those afflicted with water on the brain, but the truth of genius, as clear as that of science, is not to be found among men and women of proven incompetency, drawing salaries for one thing while attempting to do another.

The big photodramas may give us relief from those blistering studio attaches, those discarded porous plasters from the ponderous theatrical body, and millions of us might then rejoice, and the pictured story not be one of imitation and adaptation, but a natural medium for expressing the best original thought obtainable in powerful exhibition by those who understand the working out of dramatic ideas in visible terms.

The playwright who has a splendid story to tell may be given time and space to develop an outline of his plots, characters and episodes as an architect plans an attractive edifice after studying the possibilities of his theme in dead earnest. The characters must be fully introduced to be effective, and this usually takes more space than that comprehended within the limitations of a thousand-foot reel. They must show their relations to one another, their motives, their peculiarities and their purposes in silent action and must be kept so plainly before the audience that every movement means something. It takes time to work up a strong situation and it takes brains and skill to handle a plot, whereas, many well-intended photoplays are cramped in action by artificial limitations and hurried to conventional conclusions in sheer despair of adequately presenting them in small proportions. The best of them are not fully understood by the audience, if indeed they chance to pass the limited comprehension of those delegated to dictate the producing policy.

The best directors in the country do not hesitate to produce a photodrama exactly as it is written, but they cannot do this to their own nor to our satisfaction, with that breadth and idealization of character and action so essential in high comedy, or with large moral and artistic ideas in sublime tragedy, while embarrassed by a time allowance of a few minutes for each scene. There is no room for the thrilling suspense of inaction during critical periods, and not enough for powerful reaction where it is needed.

Comedy often springs from purely intellectual mirth aroused by the gradual exhibition of human weakness easily recognized when the characters are clearly presented, but it ceases to be comedy when we are obliged to strain every nerve to see where the joke comes in, and we sink into a state of abject despondency when the actors laugh and clap one another on the back. We feel as though we were left out in the cold. Pure comedy, with the wholesome joy of fresh air injected into its atmosphere, must have free swing, and is most effective when there is a pretty story evolved from its mirthful situations, but there is an intellectual strain involved when the action is too rapid—some of us close our eyes when we laugh, then open them in a hurry to get all that is coming to us—and we would prefer to take things easy, a-la-Coney-Island-boat rather than chase an idea in a taxi with a half-shot chauffeur.

While comedy enlivens and cheers, really great tragedy reaches deep into our heart-wells of sympathy with a humanizing effect, calling forth better appreciation of our debt to our kind and enlarging the scope of our toleration. Human weakness is sometimes laughable but quite as often pitiable. Each one of us knows the meaning of bitter disappointment, of frustrated hopes and of dark self-struggle. Many of us have been so near death as to have felt the sear of its withering touch sorrow, humiliation and dread of complete failure are not unfamiliar phantoms traveling along by our sides in periods of loneliness and gloom. To keep us human considerate and thoughtful, to make us feel the invisible bonds of common mortality and bring us into a closer union of mutual helpfulness, tragedy has a mission almost divine, and if our theme is noble, so must the play be, whatever the dramatic form in which it is presented

Binns Against the Vitagraph Co.

Why the Punitive Award of Damages was Sustained by the Appellate Division.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD prints below the complete text of the opinion handed down by the Appellate Division, which reinstated the verdict of $12,500 in favor of the plaintiff in the case of John R. Binns against the Vitagraph Company:

This action is brought pursuant to the provisions of Section 51 of the Civil Rights Law for an injunction and for damages. The plaintiff was employed as a telegraph operator by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company on the passenger steamship Republic, which collided with the steamer Florida on the 23d day of January, 1909, whereby the lives of the passengers, numbering about seventeen hundred were endangered, but they were ultimately saved as the result of wireless messages sent out by the plaintiff, who for gallantry received the commendation of many nations, numerous civil bodies and of the press of the world, and his picture was published quite extensively in connection with the articles giving an account of the collision and rescue. Plaintiff received many offers attractive from a financial standpoint if he would consent to exhibit himself as a hero of the disaster, but they were all declined. Immediately after the wreck of the Republic the defendant, which was engaged in manufacturing, leasing, licensing, selling, distributing and circulating photographic films for use in motion picture machines in the state of New York and elsewhere, made certain moving picture films entitled "C. Q. D., or Saved by Wireless;" a true story of the wreck of the Republic, with subtitles, among others of "John R. Binns, the wireless operator, in his cabin aboard the S. S. Republic," and "With the ship all in darkness Jack Binns sounds the C. Q. D. wireless signal of distress" and "The wireless station at Siasconset, Mass., gets Jack Binns' message and replies "All right, old man, where are you," and "Although the passengers left the ship, Jack Binns and the captain, officers and crew of the Republic stuck to their posts," and "Guided by the constant wireless messages from Binns, the Baltic locates the crippled Republic and Florida and stands by for assistance"; and "Jack Binns and his good American smile." Following each subtitle in the written text upon the motion picture film was exposed a dramatic picture, in which the scene, of which the text was the subtitle, was pictorially enacted. The defendant produced films by employing an actor to represent plaintiff in the various scenes before a motion picture camera.

The plaintiff contends that this was a representation; that the various pictures were true photographs of him; that the inference would be that he, under some financial inducement, had consented to sit therefor and to allow the use of his name and photograph; that some of the pictures made him appear ridiculous and constituted a reflection upon him, for they showed him fiercely puffing a cigarette during the crisis; and particularly, that the last film was wholly disconnected with the scene at the time of the collision, and exhibits him in a ridiculous posture, smiling and smoking a cigarette, and winking and making grimaces for the amusement of the spectators. The defendant, after producing the films, leased the same for hire to forty-nine different exchanges, eleven of which were in the state of New York, for exhibition; these exchanges in turn licensed other customers to use the same in giving public exhibitions. The main issue as to whether the plaintiff's rights under the statute were invaded and whether he was entitled to injunctive relief were first tried out at special term, and on the appeal from an interlocutory judgment in his favor, this court affirmed the judgment, which enjoined the defendant from using the plaintiff's name, portrait or picture and directed that damages be assessed by a jury.

Following the decision of Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co. (171 N. Y. 538), by which the Court of Appeals held that the law afforded no redress in such cases, the legislature enacted chapter 132 of the Laws of 1903, now sections 50 and 51 of the Civil Rights Law, by which it is declared to be a misdemeanor to use for advertising purposes or purposes of trade, the name, portrait or picture of any living person without having first obtained his consent in writing thereto * * * and that such use might be enjoined and that damages might be recovered, and further, that if the name, portrait or picture shall have been knowingly so used exemplary damages might be awarded in the discretion of the jury.

In the case at bar not only was the use of plaintiff's name and representation of his picture unauthorized and in violation of the statute, but it was made without any attempt to obtain his consent and with the sole view of obtaining profit to the defendant thereby. It neither attempted to recall the films or to discontinue the use thereof and it did not, so far as appears, offer to account to plaintiff for any part of the profits it made on the unauthorized use of his name and portrait. The defendant failed to place upon the stand any officer or employee to show that it acted innocently or to state a mitigating fact or circumstance in its behalf and instead of offering proof of the compensation, which it had received, or was to receive under the contracts which it had made, it objected to proof of the terms of the contracts, and of the compensation it received. The plaintiff claims that he was greatly disturbed in mind and that his feelings were injured by the acts of the defendant, and the inference which would be drawn therefrom that he had commercialized his fame thus accidentally received. The defendant contends that plaintiff's feelings could not have been very sensitive in this regard, for he accepted employment from one Thompson at Coney Island near one of the places where the motion pictures in question were displayed, to take charge of a wireless Marconi apparatus pursuant to an arrangement made between said Thompson and the Marconi Company for the use of said apparatus in an exhibition entitled "Saved by Wireless." The plaintiff, however, shows that this was not a representation of the collision between the Republic and the Florida and that it was an employment in the line of his profession and that it was distinctly understood that he was not to appear in public or take part in the exhibition, but was merely to have charge of the apparatus. However, he concedes that his name was to be used and that the show was to be and was in fact advertised as his own exhibition. All of these facts were fully placed before the jury and doubtless the verdict is composed principally of exemplary damages.

The opinion written by the learned justice, before whom damages were assessed, indicates that he considered that insofar as this use of the plaintiff's name and picture constituted a libel, there could be no recovery in this action and evidently that view largely influenced his determination to set aside the verdict. We are of the opinion that the plaintiff can have only one recovery in the premises and that it must be in this action. The terms of the statute are very broad and they include all of the damages sustained by the plaintiff. It would be difficult to avoid a double recovery if the jury were to be permitted in one action to give damages under the statute for a violation of rights protected thereby and in another action for the libel based on the same acts.

Of course, the court is warranted in setting aside a verdict as excessive rendered under this statute, but the legislature having expressly authorized the recovery of exemplary damages in the discretion of the jury, we are of opinion that on the facts here presented the verdict should not be deemed so excessive as to warrant the court in setting it aside or in requiring the plaintiff to reduce it as a condition of avoiding a new trial. This is a new statute designed to protect important personal rights of privacy, and both as a punishment to defendant and in order to deter others from violating the law and invading such rights it is necessary that the jury in a proper case liberally award exemplary damages.

Justice McLaughlin dissented without an opinion.

A NEW GEM IN THE REX CROWN.

Owing to the anomalous condition which governs the selling or distributing of films in this country, the productions of the Gem studio will not be issued under that name. As announced on another page, the "Gem" negatives have been purchased by the Rex Company and will be issued by them as a second release. In other words, there will be two Rex days each week for independent exhibitors; one a Rex gem, the other a Gem rex. The first Rex-Gem will be released January 28th. It is entitled "The Defender of the Name," a military drama skillfully and convincingly staged and beautiful in photography. Miss Marion Leonard again makes her appearance upon the picture stage in these Gem pictures, so that exhibitors who have clamored for a double Rex need have no hesitancy in adding this new number to their program.

"Full many a Gem of purest ray serene,
Would show its lustre in a market fair.
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen
And waste its fragrance on the desert air."
With apologies to Grey.

PARK SLOPE, BROOKLYN.

Mr. Samuel H. Burns has opened a moving picture theater on Seventh Avenue, between Garfield place and Carroll street, called the "Touraine," in the center of one of the best residential sections of that borough. Seating capacity for about 200 people.

New Fire Regulations.

Municipal Explosive Commission Formulates Rules for Handling Moving Picture Film—Commissioner Johnson Approves.

The Municipal Explosives Commission of the City of New York has adopted new regulations for the handling of all explosives within the city and with the adoption of the new code all regulations heretofore in force have been abolished. The new law went into effect on the first of January, but the official text of the regulations were not made public until January 10th.

The new code is put under 27 chapters, contains 598 paragraphs, with many sub-divisions and the entire subject as to the handling of explosive compounds is gone into very thoroughly by Commissioners Geo. O. Eaton, Sidney Harris and Bartholomew Donovan, who state in their opening paragraph: "All regulations of this commission in force on the first day of January, 1912, are hereby repealed and the annexed regulations, consisting of Articles 1 to 27 inclusive, sections 1 to 598 inclusive, are hereby adopted as the regulations of the Municipal Explosives Commission of the City of New York." Fire Commissioner Jos. Johnson approved the regualtions.

The sections of interest to the trade and which regulate the handling of films in New York, are as follows:

ARTICLE XIX.

Inflammable Motion Picture Films.

Sec. 515. It shall be unlawful for any person to store or keep on hand any inflammable motion picture films in quantities greater than 10 reels or aggregating more than 10,000 feet in length without a permit from the Fire Commissioner.

Sec. 516. A permit for the storage of inflammable motion picture films may be issued by the Fire Commissioner upon a written application giving in detail the following information:

(a) Name and address of the applicant.
(b) Location of premises.
(c) Other purposes for which the building is used.
(d) Nature of the business in which the applicant is engaged in such building.

Sec. 517. No permit for the storage of inflammable motion picture films shall be issued for any building—

(a) Which is situated within fifty feet of the nearest wall of any building occupied as a school, theater or other place of public amusement or assembly.
(b) Which is occupied as a tenement house, dwelling or hotel.
(c) Which is artificially lighted by any means other than electricity.
(d) Which is of wooden construction.
(e) Which is not equipped with an approved system of automatic sprinklers.

Sec. 518. No permit for the storage of inflammable motion picture films shall be issued for any building which does not contain one or more separate rooms used exclusively for the storage of such films.

Sec. 519. Each room used for the storage of inflammable motion picture films shall have the ceiling, walls and floor constructed of brick or masonry, or completely lined with a metal lining of a thickness to be prescribed by the Fire Commissioner in each case. The doors, window frames and sash, and all shelves, furniture and fixtures of such rooms shall be of metal or other fireproof material, and all doors shall be self-closing.

Sec. 520. A room for the storage of inflammable motion picture films shall not be artificially lighted except by electric lights having air-tight bulbs, globes or tubes encased in suitable wire cages and fitted with keyless sockets.

Sec. 521. All examining, repairing or piecing together of inflammable motion picture films shall be done in a room used for no other purpose and separated from the rest of the building by fireproof partitions and self-closing fireproof doors.

Sec. 522. All furniture and fittings in a room where inflammable motion picture films are repaired or pieced together shall be of metal or other fireproof material.

Sec. 523. Not more than 10 reels nor more than 10,000 feet in the aggregate of inflammable motion picture films shall be under examination or repair at one time, and each reel of films shall be kept in a tightly closed metal box when not being examined or repaired.

Sec. 524. Each room used for the repairing or piecing together of inflammable motion picture films shall contain a metal can, wherein all waste parts and scraps of such films shall be placed and kept covered with water.

Sec. 525. No collodion, amyl acetate or other similar inflammable cement or liquid in quantities greater than one quart shall be kept in a room wherein inflammable motion picture films are stored or repaired.

Sec. 526. No heat other than steam or hot water, and no stove, forge, torch, boiler, furnace, flame or fire, and no electric or other appliance likely to produce an exposed spark shall be allowed in any room used for the storage or repair of inflammable motion picture films.

Sec. 527. It shall be unlawful for any person to use for exhibition purposes within the City of New York any inflammable motion picture film unless in a machine or apparatus of a type for which a certificate of approval shall have been issued by the Fire Commissioner.

Sec. 528. A person who violates any of the provisions of this Article is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"THE CORSICAN BROTHERS" (Edison).

The Edison Company has accomplished an extraordinary piece of photographic work as well as a fundamentally solid drama in their ocular adaptation of "The Corsican Brothers" taken from the well-known play of that name by Alexandre Dumas. For years the play has been a favorite in the repertoire of Robert Mantell, and is widely known to the theatergoing public of America.

The excellence of the photographic work in this particular instance is mainly by virtue of some miraculous double exposures that have not been equalled by any film manufacturer, so far as our knowledge goes. It will be remembered that "The Corsican Brothers," as a drama, is a dual rôle—that of the Corsican twins, Louis and Fabien, both of which are admirably played in the Edison picture by Mr. George Lessey. There are scenes in which the brothers are talking to each other in violent discussion, and during these the action and emotional work have been so perfectly simulated as to make a complete illusion. Except for the slight difference in costume, the two characters are, naturally, as much alike as two peas in a pod, and there is no doubt that audiences everywhere will be puzzled to know how two such perfect resemblances were found. It is quite sure that the double exposure work will never be discovered by the uninitiated beholder, and perhaps, on the whole, it would be the wisest plan to allow him to remain in blissful ignorance of the technical questions involved.

Scene from "The Corsican Brothers" (Edison).

The play and the book, as everybody knows, turn largely upon a question of telepathy. Between the brothers there is supposed to be a sub-conscious communication of thought and feeling, to such an extent that the love of one finds response in the other, with the result that they both find themselves in love with the same girl. The intercommunication is so complete that each feels any wound or hurt that may be inflicted upon the other.

Louis, Emilie and her father go to Paris, while Fabien remains at home in the Corsican town. While in the French capital Louis becomes embroiled in a controversy with a certain Count Renaud over the girl, which terminates in a duel. Louis is killed by the Count and the sword that pierces his breast conveys its pain to the heart of Fabien, miles away at his woodland home. Telepathy tells him that Louis has been killed, and the dead man's spirit cries out that Fabien go to Paris and avenge his death. This he does, putting the Count to death in a duel on the very spot where Louis fell. Such, in brief, is the story which is clearly told in the film. It is the best picture that the Edison Company has made in many months, and is worthy of being featured by exhibitors without reserve.

Kleine's First Cines Release—Extraordinary One-Reel Picture Based on Shakespeare's "Julius Cæsar."

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

GEORGE KLEINE is to be congratulated on the happy selection made when he chose "Brutus" for his first release of the Cines product. This great one-reel subject will bear the strictest criticism with credit to the makers and with pleasure to anyone who, while ready to praise its beauties, is on the lookout to discover any marring defects.

"Brutus" is based on the "Julius Cæsar" of Shakespeare, and the scenes in the film enable one to follow clearly the march of events that led to the assassination of "the foremost man of all this world" and the death of the two arch conspirators, Brutus and Cassius.

It will be well to remember, in order to appreciate fully the staging of the drama and the costuming of the characters, that Cæsar was murdered in the Ides (15th) of March, 44 B. C. It will be well to remember also that Brutus supported Pompey against Cæsar at the battle of Pharsalia, notwithstanding the fact that Pompey had treacherously murdered his father, and that Cæsar pardoned him after winning the battle, and appointed him governor of Cisalpine Gaul; also that he proved both modern and just in his government, and that he was an earnest student and wrote treatises on philosophy and some poetry. After being thus honored and trusted he became one of the foremost in the assassination of Cæsar, being influenced by Caius Cassius, of whom Shakespeare makes Cæsar say: Cassius is a lean man. He doth not sleep o' nights. He will bear watching." This same Cassius was also treated generously by Cæsar. Like Brutus he fought under Pompey at Pharsalia, but was afterwards appointed to a position of trust by "the great dictator."

The Conspirators Await Cæsar.

After the killing of Cæsar, the conspirators were forced to flee for their lives from Rome, owing to the great speech of Mark Anthony before the populace. Brutus seized the province of Macedonia and held it against Mark Anthony. He was joined by Cassius, but, at the battle of Philippi, he was defeated by Anthony, and, rather than become a prisoner, he fell on his own sword (42 B. C.). The division under Cassius suffered defeat in the battle and he commanded his freedman to slay him.

The opening scene in the Cines film shows Cassius and other conspirators in a room awaiting the arrival of Brutus. The setting of this scene and the posing and acting are highly artistic. When Brutus arrives he is shown to a seat at a large table, with Cassius immediately to his left, as one views the picture from the audience. The conspirators, seated, listen to Cassius, who speaks with vehemence. Suddenly he rises and confronts Brutus, and, drawing his dagger, makes a downward thrust through the air to illustrate the spoken words that mean death to Cæsar.

Brutus, with a look of horror on his face, expostulates, but is gradually led to embrace the decision of the others. The impersonation of Brutus in this scene, and throughout the film, shows great histrionic merit and a fine conception of the character. Cassius also is strongly sustained, and the grouping and acting of the conspirators show patient rehearsal and a careful aiming at realistic effects.

Next, we are in a room in Cæsar's home, where we see his wife, Calphurnia, vainly endeavoring to keep him from going to the senate on this particular day. She thinks her pleadings have succeeded, when a messenger from the senate appears and Cæsar goes to his doom. This scene affords a pleasant glimpse of the love prevailing in Cæsar's domestic life, and gives us a close view of the furniture and tapestries used in the first homes of imperial Rome at that period.

The killing of Cæsar in the senate chamber follows. Intently one watches the proceedings leading up to the tragedy. To the left of the picture, as viewed from the audience, stands Cassius, a few feet behind Cæsar. We watch his lips curl in a cruel smile as a senator makes a motion, and a parchment scroll is handed the First Consul. Cæsar glances at it and throws it on the floor with imperious gesture. As he does so Cassius snatches the robe from his shoulders. Cæsar springs up and faces Cassius. He immediately receives several downward dagger thrusts from the senators behind him. As he turns toward them, Cassius drives another home, and so it is until that sacred body receives the knives of all. Brutus is the last to inflict a wound; but he does it from the front, and the look that Cæsar gives him—of reproach and surprise—shows that no other bolt from Jove can hurt either body or soul. Then Cæsar covers his face with his garment and sinks to the floor. Not one vestige of shrinking is shown by him throughout the ordeal, not a trace of fear, on face or in action. The actor who took the character of Cæsar merits much praise for preserving so thoroughly the dignity of the part.

Calphurnia Pleads with Cæsar.

"Et tu, Brute!"

The funeral of Cæsar in the Cines film is a most imposing spectacle. The site chosen by the producer is most probably on the very spot overlooking which Mark Anthony made his moving speech to the populace of Rome. In the picture the rostrum occupied by Anthony's impersonator has a commanding view of the surroundings, and looks down on the altar on which is placed the catafalque which bears the mortal remains of Cæsar. In the midst of the speech we witness the excitement of the assembled multitude, stirred by the fierce desire for revenge on the murderers. As the torches are applied to Cæsar's brief resting place and his remains are being consumed, Anthony stirs the minds of all to immediate action, and we see them rush off to the homes of those responsible for the deed.

We view the flight of Brutus, who obstinately refuses to move and is determined to meet the mob and take the consequences, until his wife and friends finally urge and drag him to safety.

"Behold, Great Cæsar's Ghost."

We next visit the camps of the two armies before the battle of Philippi, and we see Brutus in his tent engrossed in studying the plans of battle. Influenced by some unseen power, he looks up, and beholds the ghost of the murdered Cæsar, who speaks to him the familiar words, "We shall meet at Philippi," and then vanishes. His guilty soul cowers at the sight and fearful forebodings of the morrow seize him.

The battle of Philippi that follows is a really remarkable massing and engaging of a multitude of soldiers in close action. It is a thrilling sight, full of the incidents of a hand-to-hand combat. Then the flight of Brutus, his discovery of Cassius dead on the field, and his own ignominious death.

The photography is in keeping with the other high merits of the production.

It will be wise to have a lecture on this film prepared and delivered by a competent man, as its educational value will be greatly increased thereby.

"Brutus" will be released Saturday, Jan. 20.

"THE BLIND MINER" (Vitagraph).

For those picture lovers who like realism to its utmost, "The Blind Miner" ought to fill the bill for them and most every one else. In making this picture the Vitagraph Company went direct to the coal fields of Pennsylvania to secure the necessary surroundings and the wisdom of the idea is very apparent in the film because it is one of Vitagraph's best. It is a picture that tells a human story based upon facts which are known to be true in the lives of miners.

The principal good to be derived from this picture is that it shows the perils of a coal miner's occupation and shows also the most up-to-date methods of combating with coal mine disasters, and saving the lives of imprisoned workers, the moral being directed to mine owners particularly, who have heretofore not always supplied the proper protection for the lives of workmen. There is an old blind miner, according to the narrative of this story, whose case makes it resemble a legend. There is a love affair between his daughter and one of the leading young miners of the town. One day, when he has left the blind ex-miner's abode, the old man has a premonition that there is going to be an explosion in the mine. He himself has passed the age of usefulness in the mine, but long years underground have made him familiar with every foot of it, even though his sight is gone forever. The mine explosion takes place, according to his intuition, and there is the usual excitement and depression consequent upon such happenings. The balance of the picture shows the rescue of the coal miners by means of the latest methods of fighting fire and fire damp in coal mines.

Though this story sounds very simple, "The Blind Miner" is a picture that is going to be popular all over the world. The most remarkable part of it is the success the Vitagraph Company has had in getting the local mining people to work in large groups in this picture. All the minor characters are done by the local townspeople in such a creditable manner that there is not the slightest trace of amateurishness about it. Men, women and children work in large ensembles in many parts of the picture.

Scene from "The Blind Miner" (Vitagraph).

The picture goes on to show the mine explosion, the excitement of the townspeople and the work of the local constabulary in providing assistance for the imprisoned miners who are slowly suffocating. The frenzied groups of women are shown clamoring at the shaft of the mine, and being held in check by the constabulary in their efforts to descend into the mine. All the underground scenes are taken 1,500 feet below ground. Studio lights were transported to the place and taken down into the mine for the purpose of illumination. The acting of the miners in depicting the sufferings of underground experience with the fire damp is remarkably true to life for untrained actors. The closing scenes show how the blind miner starts for the mine, and by his power of instinct, descends into the mine and leads the searchers through the labyrinths to where the men are imprisoned in the rising fire damp. The entire picture is a graphic portrayal of the perils of coal mining and is told with continuous interest from first to last in such a convincing way as to make it a picture that is well worthy of being featured anywhere.

BUILDING THE GREATEST DAM IN THE WORLD.

The Imp Film Company will release an industrial picture on January 22 under the title "Building the Greatest Dam in the World." This picture illustrates the work of construction on the big dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa, giving views of the great plant for the making of concrete, the cranes that carry material and a score of interesting operations at various parts of the work. It is, in many respects a most remarkable as well as interesting picture.

CURRENT EVENTS.

There is nothing more interesting to the public at large than a picture of some current event. Some thing big that has happened, probably in your own town maybe thousands of miles off. It may portray war, balloon ascensions, airship flights, national fêtes, or any of the numerous events which are happening daily, and are exploited by the press. Something that you hear or read of with interest, but to appreciate its value it is necessary to have before you a picture to study.

Realizing the interest these current events would create, Messrs. Underwood & Underwood, the well-known news photographers, have organized a department to manufacture projection slides of "The Current Events of the Day," releasing a set of four slides daily, with outside display photos for the theatre. These slides are being distributed by Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., 1326 Broadway.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

MORE about clocks comes from Mr. C. T. Smithers, President of the Idle Hour Circuit, Aberdeen and Watertown, S. D., who writes:

> I noticed in the issue of December 30th in your Department an article about a clock slide. I think I have a clock scheme that beats the slide. Of course my idea could not be worked unless the room is high enough. I have a 28-foot ceiling and right above the screen I have a large clock set in the wall, the face is made of frosted glass, the hands are painted black and behind the clock I have placed a small electric light. This clock can be seen at all times and makes it very convenient for transients who have to catch trains or in fact for anyone. One of the jewelers of the town furnished the clock and keeps it in repair for the advertising he gets by having his name on the dial. It could no doubt be worked by many other exhibitors if they could get hold of a live jeweler to install the clock.

Comparatively few houses can show the ceiling nearly thirty feet from the floor, but Mr. Smithers' suggestion can be made use of in any house where the screen does not completely fill the end wall. If you have any room at all, fix up your clock, but connect the light socket with the circuit that is thrown on when the lights are up. The face will be illuminated only when the picture is not on the screen, but the time will flash every fifteen to twenty minutes and the flash will call attention to the clock. If the dial is of ground glass and the hands are painted black the time will be visible even when the picture is running although the clock face will be conspicuous only when lighted up.

Clocks for All.

Others than transients with trains to catch will appreciate the clock. At the matinees the women who worry about getting home in time to start the dinner, the man who just drops in to pass a little time, and perhaps the children, will appreciate the answer to the "What's the time?" question, while it is just as valuable in the evening. In a clock of this sort it is best to have a long minute hand and a short hour indicator that the difference may be clearly marked. There will be many times when the clock may decide the question as to which of two houses shall be patronized. The clock slide is handy and may be made a source of revenue, but a going clock is apt to inspire more confidence. Mr. Smithers' suggestion is a valuable one, and our thanks are extended.

Mr. Winstock Suggests.

And here's a mighty good suggestion from Mr. Melvin G. Winstock, of The People's Amusement Company, of Portland, Oregon. He has recently inaugurated a series of short illustrated talks, the first of which was upon the work of the local Y. M. C. A. in matters of physical culture, and the talk was delivered at every performance for a week by the Physical Director of that institution. Of course the papers took up the idea because it was both novel and for the public good and there was a deal of advertising of the sort that cannot be bought at any price. Mr. Winstock will follow the first lecture with others on all of the leading State and city institutions and with an extended series of talks on the work of the local and State Boards of Health in the prevention of disease.

This is in line with the work of many of the films themselves, such as the Edison and Vitagraph medical educationals, but they have an even stronger draft in that they are strongly local. Better still, each talk is delivered by some one connected with the particular movement and each appearance virtually stamps the house with the seal of approval of some State or civic department. It is work like this that is putting the pictures where they belong.

The talks are pithy and brief, running only about five minutes, and are profusely illustrated with slides. A longer time would have the audience restless but a five or ten minute chat with plenty of slides is far in advance of the illustrated song as a relief. It is not always possible to arrange for a series of lectures, but almost any house can get a lecture now and then no matter how small the town. If you can't get slides, get some health officer or well-known physician to lecture a film.

Wait a Little While.

But we would very much like to hear from Mr. Winstock on another stunt he is trying. He announces that he will attend to the sale of likely scenarios. He's a diplomat, but he's got a lot of trouble ahead of him on this proposition, but at that he'll build business with it, for the idea is sound and attractive. There are hundreds of persons who are eager to write scenarios, but who do not know how to go about it. Post yourself on the demands of the manufacturers and get some of your own patrons interested. You'll get them more than ever interested in the pictures then, and they, in turn, will interest their friends. As a general thing it is not wise to try and place the stories for them, but help them along with addresses, advice as to the styles of stories affected by the different companies and hints from the Scenario Page. Get them writing stories and you'll keep them looking at them and should one of your patrons land a story boom it all over town.

Two Cards.

Two advertising cards have come in recent mails. One is from the Gem Theater, Little Rock, Ark., and is a lithographed two-color card that is striking and effective. The lettering indicates that it was used for a Christmas greeting. It would have been ten times as effective had it carried a small calendar pad. The other is from the Superior Theater, Cleveland, and carries a large cut of the house front and a calendar. It is probable that both cards cost about the same, but one will be kept the season through and the other will presently be displaced by something else. If you are giving out something that is to be kept, study up something that will last as long as possible. Of course everybody gives out calendars at Christmas, but you'll find that most of them are put up somewhere and if you make your advertisement stand out well, it's going to be good for a year.

The Ornamental Isis.

We do not entirely like the recent program cards of the Isis Theater, of Denver. For the holiday season special drawings were made of the four letters that form the word. It carries out the idea of snow and ice so effectively that it appears to be a part of the ornamental design and you have to study it for a moment to make certain that it's the name of the theater. When artists are employed on special designs it is well to watch them lest they bury the commercial in the artistic and defeat the end sought. The Isis advertising is usually so effective that this slip is surprising, the more so in that it appears both in the Christmas and New Year designs. The name of the theater should stick out wherever it appears.

And just in passing the Isis is offering some very inviting programs, including Cinderella as a first run.

Bad Bill Posting.

And speaking of making things stick out, there's a five cent house down by the Brooklyn Bridge that is overlooking a good bet by bad bill posting. The house uses three reels a day and two posters for each reel. There is a hanging board over the center of the lobby and a two-sided board at each end. The same reel is advertised on both sides of the hanging board and posters for the other two are pasted on the end boards. But instead of posting so that one of each of the posters can be seen by the man passing along, the bills are posted so that the man going up the street sees two of one sort and the man coming down sees two of the other, giving advertising to only two of the three reels, the one on the center board and one of the two on the ends. If two similar bills were pasted on each end board all three bills would be seen from any position. It's an apparently insignificant matter and yet a little thought would better the display fifty per cent.

The effect is not helped any by the use of some cheap stock theatrical lithographs that remain permanently on the boards. Six posters are plenty and the value of the live paper is impaired by the use of this left over product of some defunct cheap melodrama.

Even worse is a place up on the Bowery that for some weeks past has sported a lurid scene from a still more lurid melodrama with the urgent advice "You must see this," though it has no connection with any of the reels inside and the play it once served to advertise has been dead for six long years. It's poor work. How can we see it?

Likes the Weekly Program.

Mr. A. M. Beare, proprietor of the Gem, Chester, Ill., sends in some samples of his advertising and this letter:

> I am a constant reader of the Moving Picture World, especially the different departments and take a great interest in the advertising department. I enclose an 8-page booklet and sample of newspaper advertising, also sample handbill or snipe program. The booklet is the first one to be put out and I think it money well spent. Part of the line-ups are steals from the Motion Picture Story Magazine and from Mr. C. B. Skiff, Negaunee, Mich., who sent me one of his leaflets. The book was not exactly what I wanted, but owing to the demand of Christmas advertising in our newspapers and the overwork of our job printers, I was mighty lucky to get it out at all, at that it beats my competitor's whitewash sidewalk advertising.

Mr. Beare also says that he has a few left over which he will be glad to send others if they will enclose a stamp.

The booklet is 4 x 6½ inches in blue on a light buff paper. For catchlines on the front page he uses "Save me and keep posted," "The little house with the big show" and "Something about thirty-two great films," the latter being given the big display. There is a Christmas greeting on the second page and a bright verse on the seventh, the remainder being given over to four pages of programs, two to a page. Four reels are used with five changes a week, and each reel is given from one to three lines of bright descriptive matter. The paper is good, the book is wire stitched and apart from poor proof reading, the book presents a wholly attractive appearance.

Play Up the Name.

It is hard to make effective display of a three-letter title, but the name of the theater could have been brought up better through the use of an "extended" letter about 96 points high. If the office lacks a good letter, it can order wood type and pay only for the letters ordered. Until that is done the dashes between the letters should be lifted. They do not help any. The dodger (snipe is generally understood to mean a small piece of paper to be pasted), as well as the newspaper advertising shows that Mr. Beare believes in talking about his show. All advertising gives the list of films and a brief description well worded. If you have something that gives the slightest excuse for talking it's a good pan to talk and talk entertainingly. This is what Mr. Beare does and the result is vastly more productive in returns that the vague "Great show to-night" stuff.

One of His Schemes.

The newspaper advertisement fills nearly a full double column and carries a prize contest limited to children under 15, who are asked to name the greatest thing in the world. A full-face line explains "Read the ad and see the pictures and you can tell." The prizes are a dollar bill and four weeky passes. It centers interest in an advertisement that is attractively worded, and by changing the schemes and the lines the people come to look for the advertisement as a part of the reading matter the paper supplies.

From Indiana.

From the Royal, Marion, Ind., comes an eight-pager of which the four inside pages are cuts in brown on white, while the cover is brown printed in green, a strong, but not glaring combination. The Royal idea is carried out in a crown on which the title is worked in open letters. It would seem to be an appendix to another publication of the same house as it is titled "Ruffles, a frill off the Royal Reports," and some of the film titles refer to Royal Reports. Will the management kindly send in a copy addressed to this department?

The booklet gives only dates and titles in addition to the scenes from the current productions. It is virtually a four-page weekly program with an additional four pages of pictures, a combination that doubles the value.

Too Much Club.

The Motion Picture Bulletin, Oklahoma City, has become The Theater Reporter, and evidently intends to broaden its scope, but it is making the campaign with the aid of a club which it does not wield very effectively. A little patience is better than a lot of threat. Both Licensed and Independent film stories are carried for half a dozen houses and the scheme should make money for its publishers. The film stories should be identified by companies in all cases instead of only here and there and the casts, where obtainable, would also make the booklet more attractive to the fans.

A Newspaper Page.

The San Francisco Bulletin has inaugurated a photoplay page under the editorship of Ona Otto, and the local houses have come promptly to the support of the page, which is made up largely of what are apparently paid write-ups. The idea would be more effective were the paragraphs less patently paid for, but this lies with the managers and those who frame their copy to most strongly suggest that casual mention will find the greatest profit. The page is young yet and will not reach its full value until it gives general space to picture topics.

Comes in Good Shape.

The Cameraphone Bulletin is issued in the interest of two similarly named houses in Pittsburg. With the aid of trade-mark cuts and player half-tones, the headings of the stories are attractively set, space is given matters not directly related to the house and a readable eight-sheet is the result. There is snap to the editing and while the edition should not cost much to print, it looks well because it is planned for rush work. Half the secret of success lies in laying out the work to suit the conditions, and a practical printer seems to be "on the job" somewhere along the line here.

More Color Experiments.

The Tenth Street Theater, Kansas City, is going to get some gold bronze o its program or bust. One recent example in a sort of olive bronze (possibly due to the use of too dark a size) is not bad at night, but looks dirty in daylight. Another wrestle with green and gold is a draw through the employment of too light a gold. Some of these days they will hit upon a combination of red and black with a white letter that will stick, but if they want to experiment with gold they should use a yellow size and a reddish gold in place of the lemon. And if they would spend the time in getting some reading matter on the inside that is not directly related to the current bill, they would find that it pays better. While they are in the experimental mood they might try the effect of a tint block for the line cut of the house. It will break the glaring white.

A Spoon Circular.

We have had for some time a circular letter from Frank Hicks, of the Imperial Theater, Cleveland, who also contributed to this department an effective appeal to the school children. The letter is done in imitation of typewriting on the regular letter head of the house and a space is left for a pen signature. The copy runs:

> DEAR PATRON:
> We have a few words to say to you. We want to take up a few moments of your time in asking you to read this letter to the end.
> Commencing November 18th and continuing every Saturday for twelve weeks we will give to every lady attending our Saturday matinee a ROSALI STERLING SILVER PLATED SOUVENIR TEASPOON—ABSOLUTELY FREE.
> Attached to your admission ticket each day is a coupon which you should save. Present same at the box office Saturday afternoon with 10 cents and you will be presented with one of these SOUVENIR SPOONS and a ticket to our Saturday matinee. The regular price for our Saturday show is ten cents, so you will see that you get the SOUVENIR SPOON ABSOLUTELY FREE.
> Our house is open at 2 p. m. on Saturday and we run without stop until 10:30 in the evening. No spoons will be given out after 6:30, so be sure and come before that hour. Remember these spoons are for ladies only. No spoons will be given children.
> Do you realize that in addition to our regular program on Saturday and Sunday, that we always secure a special feature film for which we pay EXTRA FROM $5 to $25 for ONE DAY ONLY? If you do not, you should get the habit of attending our Saturday show. We select as a special feature some historical film. Such features are of great educational value to the children, and are entertaining to yourself as they refresh your memory of historical events. Because of this extra expense we are forced to charge an admission of 10 cents on Saturday.
> Here are a few facts which we wish to bring to your attention. On Saturday and Sunday we give you a bigger show than you will see at the Globe or the Penn Square. We show five pictures where these two houses show ONLY four. On Saturday and Sunday the admission is 10 cents, so why not go where you can get not only the MOST, but the BEST for your money. During the week we show four reels of pictures for five cents where these houses charge 10 cents.
> Now another thing. You will never see a picture in this house that has previously been shown in either the Globe, the Penn Square, or the new theater which is to be opened in the near future.
>
> In conclusion, I wish to thank you for your past patronage and a continuation of same in the future, while I beg to remain,
> Very sincerely yours,

POWERS PICTURES EQUITABLE FIRE.

The Powers Picture Company has made a highly interesting film of the scenes attending the destruction of the $15,000,000 building of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, New York City, which was destroyed by fire on Jan. 9. Owing to the intense cold weather the water thrown upon the burning building froze almost as soon as it touched and formed weird shapes all over the ruins, clogging the street and blocking the fire apparatus, which had to be chopped out before it could be moved. The fire started about 5 o'clock Tuesday morning and continued nearly all day. There were many thrilling rescues and a number of fatalities. Powers' camera man was on the job early and got much that is of interest. This picture will be released on Saturday, Jan. 20, taking the place of "Billy's Surrender," previously advertised for that day, but which has been withdrawn for the more timely picture.

POWERS' DURBAR PICTURE.

On the same reel with the Equitable fire picture, Powers will give the Delhi Durbar picture; a remarkable series of views of that most magnificent of Oriental pageants. It's a world beater for splendor. That gives you two sensations in one reel.

E-Z SLIDES FOR ADVERTISING ACTORS.

Battershall & Oleson, makers of the E-Z slide, have during the past few weeks made several thousand slides for some of the large theatrical managers, to be given out by the advance agents in advertising the players.

Among them are: Blanche Ring, in "The Wall Street Girl," and Holbrook Blinn, in "The Boss"; also "The Rosary," "Rock of Ages," "The Prince of To-Night," "The Third Degree," the "Over-Night Company," and Shubert's "The Round-Up."

Among the vaudeville agencies that are using the slides are: the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association, Sullivan & Considine, Western Amusement Co., Proctor's theaters, Mort Singer (4 companies), Allert Bros. Circuit, the Butterfield circuit in Michigan, and many others.

The management of Young's Million-Dollar Pier, in Atlantic City, have sent their slides all over the country in an advertising campaign.

The E-Z Slides are made of mica, enclosed in a substantial cardboard mount which serves as the mat. The picture proper is printed on one of the sheets of mica, another sheet being used as the cover. They are practically indestructible and cost but half as much as the usual glass slide of equal quality.

The E-Z emergency slide is of similar design, consisting of a thin sheet of transparent (not translucent) material, in a cardboard mat mount like the mica slide. The transparent sheet may be written on with India ink without difficulty, and the finished slide looks very well on the screen if neatly written. A set of guide letters and instruction sheets is included in the outfit of blank slides. Watch their advertisements in The World.

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

The Copyright for Scenarios.

The Register of Copyrights suggests that common law seems more effective for protecting scenarios.

IN reply to the letter published in the last Scenario Page, Mr. Thorvald Solberg, Register of Copyrights, very courteously goes into the matter of registration of scenarios in greater detail than has before appeared in print and points out that under the common law the scenario writer has ample protection for his unpublished work. After the preamble the letter runs:

> Of course you would understand that the protection secured would be that which is granted by the law and would be neither more nor less, whatever action might be taken by this office. This office cannot make the copyright; it can only record the claim.
> The distinction between the scenario of a play and a completed dramatic composition is not new and has always been maintained and I believe that under the new law, as under the old, in order to protect a scenario, it must be classified and dealt with as literature and therefore should be first produced and published in the manner required for any other book. The office has attempted to differentiate and if the article deposited seems really to be reasonably construed as a dramatic composition containing the characteristics of a completed drama, registration has always been made, and such works have, until recently, no doubt, included the largest proportion of the material submitted.
> Lately it seems as though more and more of the manuscripts filed in relation to moving pictures are mere bare outlines, or suggestions, for completing the moving picture, and with little of the true qualities of a completed dramatic composition. It has therefore seemed more and more doubtful that the office should register such works under the designation "dramatic compositions." We have felt that our best course would be always to write a letter of caution, pointing out that it is questionable whether registration under the designation "dramatic composition" will secure the protection desired, and then leave it to the claimant whether he will insist upon the registration notwithstanding. It is to be remembered in this connection that a direct proposal to expressly include in the copyright act protection for cinematographic productions was not agreed to by Congress.
> Section 2 of the Copyright Act provides as follows:
> "That nothing in this act shall be construed to annul or limit the right of the author or proprietor of an unpublished work, at common law or in equity, to prevent the copying, publication or use of such unpublished work without his consent, and to obtain damages therefore."
> Would it not be safer to depend upon the protection secured under this section than to depend upon registration under a strained designation, which the courts might not sustain?
> You state that a short story will be accepted in galley proof if intended for publication.
>
> The copyright law, in the case of a published work, clearly provides that publication should first take place and that such publication with the incribed statutory notice initiates the copyright and that thereafter deposit is to be made in this office in order to secure registration to identify the work upon which protection is claimed. Thus, in the case of syndicated matter, where the material has been printed and it is claimed on the part of the claimant that the sale of it is publication as defined in the copyright law, registration has been made. The essential point is not the form of print, but whether, however printed and produced, the work has actually been published—that is, as defined in the copyright law, sold, placed on sale or publicly distributed.
> You will please observe that under exactly the same procedure in regard to scenarios of moving pictures, the office would have no difficulty in making registration.

There are no ifs, ands and buts in Mr. Solberg's statement of the law and its interpretation. The law requires that a work be printed and published before being offered for registration, if copyrighted as a book or literary effort and does not provide for registration except as a book. It also specifically states that until publication the rights of the author shall be fully and completely held to him by common law.

Publication means giving the product to the public as in a book or newspaper or in any similar form. Before a scenario can be registered as a book, it must be printed and publicly sold or offered for sale to the public.

To write a scenario and send it to a scenario editor does not constitute publication and, whether or not the scenario has been entered in the Library of Congress, the copyright law provides absolutely no protection whatsoever for such a work. To the contrary, to sue under the copyright act may, and probably would, result in the case being thrown out on the defense that the work had not been properly copyrighted, and therefore was not entitled to protection under the copyright law.

In a nutshell the copyright act is framed to protect the rights of authors who give to the public, through publication, the product of their skill. That there may be established a definite declaration of the matter the author desires to protect, it is provided that this matter, upon being published, shall be deposited in the Library of Congress, that a record may be made, and a copyright registration is nothing more than an acknowledgment that such a work has been registered by the Librarian of Congress, through his Register of Copyrights, and that it is this work for which the author claims protection under the copyright law. The essential act of copyrighting a literary production is publication and not registration and until a work is so published the registration does not become effective.

The protection of the writer of scenarios lies entirely within the common law and in effect the common law is merely the principle that what is yours continues to be yours until you have sold or given it to another. If it is taken without your permission or consent such taking is a theft and punishable in common law and without any reference to the copyright act which is merely framed for the special protection and encouragement of such authors, artists and composers as shall dedicate their work to the public through publication and so, in common law, sell that which hitherto has been their exclusive property.

It follows therefore that

A scenario as such cannot be copyrighted except through PUBLICATION as a book, carrying the statutory claim of copyright, and subsequent and immediate registration in the Library of Congress.

A scenario, not being a dramatic composition within the meaning of the act, cannot be copyrighted as such dramatic composition, and

A scenario is fully and completely protected by common law until it is given to the public, and therefore does not require the protection of copyright, even were such a copyright available.

A scenario remains the property of its author until he has sold his rights to another; who thereupon becomes possessed of those rights and is responsible for their protection, and until a scenario has been sold or published any infringement of the author's rights is as fully and completely punishable under common law as would be an infringement of the rights of a published work under the copyright law.

The question of copyright has been agitated for the past two or three years, many authors seeming to think that a copyright line afforded complete protection and that even the hardiest scenario thief would not dare appropriate any article protected by such an imprint. It has seemed to many writers that, were it possible to copyright scenarios, all their troubles would be ended, and it was to obtain some definite and final ruling that correspondence with the Register of Copyrights was opened. He has more than met the request for information as to the possibility of copyright by pointing out the proper source of protection. In view of this statement of fact the author of scenarios who still seeks copyright protection wastes not only his own time, but the time of the Copyright Office to no avail.

You cannot copyright a scenario as a scenario and your rights are fully protected without copyright; more fully than if the work was entered without publication. Don't try to achieve the impossible.

Let It Get Cold.

We quote below a letter from A. Van Buren Powell, of Brooklyn, not only because it contains some mighty good advice, but because it is refreshing to get a letter that is not inspired by some kick against the studios. Mr. Powell writes:

> May I invade your sanctum for just a moment? I lately received a bit of advice from an editor which you might think worth passing along to other writers.
> Entirely through the knowledge gained and inspiration derived from your "Technique" articles I began writing scenarios last September. To date I have achieved some minute measure of success and loads of encouragement. I have found every editor courteous; rejections have often been accompanied by what I took to be encouraging comments; and in no case have I had cause for complaint.
> To get down to brass tacks: Having had a manuscript returned from the Kalem studio with this editorial annotation: "Idea used before. Will be glad to consider original Western comedies." I naturally decided to send my next effort in that line to them. Inspiration came; I wrote the scenario, submitted it to two critical friends and finding their opinion of it coinciding with my own, made ready to send it off. Then it occurred to me that I was not sure if a certain situation in it was practicable for filming or not, and as I believe in getting information at first hand and saving time, I took the MS. in person to the studio. The editor received me, heard my case and very kindly waived the usual rule against criticising manuscripts. He pointed out to me an inconsistency in the plot which neither I nor my critics had discovered. He also gave me some highly appreciated information regarding the possibilities and limitations of the Western studio. The principal thing I remember is what he said as I was somewhat sheepishly retiring. "Before you send out a scenario," said he, "lay it aside for a while. Let it get cold. Probably you will see its faults then yourself." And, best of all, was this encouraging couplet, "Try again." I tell you this because you have not yet spoken in your column about this matter of laying work aside, and I suppose the majority of writers beginning like myself will send out a scenario in the first flush of enthusiasm over completed work. For myself, I have made up my mind to evolve a Western comedy that will suit that splendid gentleman before I shuffle of this mortalcoil or bust.

It is never a good plan to send a story out the instant it is written. Perhaps you'll think of some little touch that would have made it better; will recall some omission that leaves the story vague. Nine scenarios out of every ten are written in haste and repented at leisure and this explains in part why the percentage of good stories is so small.

The best plan is to write a first draft or even two and then go on to other work. A week or two later take it up, read it carefully, make such changes as suggest themselves and write the clean copy. Let this lie until the following day and then, if nothing further suggests itself, let it go on its travels. There are some few persons whose first thoughts are more fluent than later work and who edit the life out of a story, but these are mostly the writers of long training and they are in such a minority that the advice holds good. That little story you “dash off” may sound well as you read it over, but when it comes home to die a few weeks later the frenzy is gone and you're ashamed of it. Take your time and you'll find that time is money.

Try It Twice.

Don't throw away the scenario that has gone the rounds. It is not always to be argued that the story is not good. Some of them may be done over and sent on the rounds again and some may not even require revision. A correspondent writes that a story that was started out in May, 1910, has been going the rounds ever since and now, eighteen months after its initial rejection, has been sold to the very company to which it was first submitted. At the time the author was told that the story was a pleasing one, but that none of the directors seemed to fancy it, and the answer is found in the fact that the directors now employed by that company are not the same. But another script that was first submitted about the same time was sold to another company on its second visit some fourteen months after the first call, and here there have been fewer changes in the staff.

Rejection may be due to many other causes than lack of merit, and persistence pays. It may happen that a script comes into a studio at a time when there is an oversupply of scripts of that class. It may be that it is suggestive of some other story that is to be filmed and, without being like, may not be released immediately. The story may call for some location or player not then available and so the script goes back. Later the conditions may be changed, there may be additions to the staff or a dearth of scripts of that particular sort and the script that was rejected the first time is retained on the second visit.

Unless you have very materially changed the story the return should not be made within a year unless you explain that the changes have been made, but if you've faith in your story back it a second time.

Means What It Says.

Here is a plaint from a person who signs merely “A Recent subscriber,” and who asks:

> If you recently sent a scenario to a company and it was returned with a slip stating that they return the picture “which we find not suitable for our purpose,” would you take it for granted that it really was not suitable and not written correctly, or would you think that it does not happen to be the kind they are producing at present?
> And would you advise me to send it elsewhere to a company I am quite sure can use a play of that nature?

“Not suitable” merely means that the company has found it not suited to its individual use. It may not be suitable because it is badly written, because it does not suit the directors, because it calls for open air work in December; because the boss doesn't take a fancy to it, or for any other of a hundred reasons. We can't tell from looking at a letter whether a script is badly done or not, but if it was our script we most assuredly would not feed it to the goat just because it came back once, particularly if it seemed to lie within the style of production affected by another company. Keep it going, “Recent,” and keep on keeping it going until all have had a chance. We've known of a script that was written, rejected by one company, accepted by a second, produced, and the film cut and turned into the printing room all within the space of seven days. That doesn't sound as though the first rejection sealed a fate, does it?

Approves of Edison Co.

New Orleans, December 29.

To the Editor: With joy I hail the announcement that a pinnacle company has inaugurated the just and altogether reasonable custom of presenting the author's name with his play—when it is deserved. Naturally, a sort of hybrid arrangement isn't anybody's in particular.

This policy, made general, would, I believe, result in better plays—by offering incentive for perfect technique; by tending to prevent plagiarism; by appealing to the author's pride, and to his sense of personal responsibility. Happy he, then, who could feel assured that his name on the screen had come to be regarded as guarantee that something of class would follow.

Sincerely,

Wilson Walker.

Thanhouser Not Buying.

The Thanhouser Company is not in the market for manuscripts and all submissions are returned with a slip announcing that fact. The company makes many special productions and maintains a scenario department that supplies all the needed scripts, so that sending scripts to the plant in New Rochelle benefits only the post-office department.

Gem Will Use Names.

Following the Edison example, the Gem Company will use the names of authors on its films when this course is considered desirable. It will not be done in all cases, but Mr. Stanner E. V. Taylor recognizes the fact that the use of the names of authors will not only call out greater endeavor, but will attract to this field some who are not now writing scenarios because they wish to gain credit for their work. The companies using names will get first choice of the best material, and the Gem seems to be looking for just that grade of work.

INQUIRIES

B. J. T.—You've got us on our back, yelling for help. We thought we knew about the wrinkles of picture making, but the “cut back” style of direction is something new to us. Give the name of the company and we'll entreat them to wise up, and we'll tell you, but meantime, we have to confess we never met that particular style of production. We know what the cut back salary list is, but we take it that this is something newer than that.

SNEEZE.—The Vitagraph had a company in Western Pennsylvania lately and it is possible that Mr. Costello was with them and so in Pittsburgh, but we have no official data on the itinerary.

L. G. S.—The successful suitor in the American's “The Test,” was Warren Kerrigan, who is wholly and completely a different person from Will Garwood.

J. A. M.—The Vitagraph released “Twelfth Night” Feb. 5, 1910. (2) The Reliance Company has not yet answered. (3) The man in Imp's “The Bottom of the Sea,” who swims for aid, was William Shay. (4) The only film we see that seems to fit your title is “Uncle's Money,” a C. G. P. C., released November 7th last. (5) Arthur Johnson was the the wounded man in Lubin's “Through Jealous Eyes.”

EUGENE F.—The Edison Company courteously supplies this data about Marc McDermott, which seems fully to answer your inquiry:

“Marc McDermott, English by birth, began his theatrical career twelve years ago, with George Rignold (famous in the history of the stage for his Henry V), in Sydney, Australia, with whom he remained for six years, playing all of the principal cities in the Australian colonies. Then followed two seasons in England with “Sherlock Holmes,” under the management of Charles Frohman. Then a coast to coast tour in America with Mrs. Patrick Campbell, playing Dr. Von Keller in “Magda;” after this a season in England with Mrs. Campbell, playing Michael Von Kellenhausen in Sudermann's “Joy of Living”—the part played by J. H. Gilmour in the United States; Sir George Orreyed, in “The Second Mrs. Tanqueray,” Kuhleborn, in William Courtney's “Undine,” a part which he (Mr. McDermott) created. Then followed another tour of England, Ireland and Scotland with Mrs. Campbell, then a revival of “Sherlock Holmes.” Mr. McDermott next came to the Wyndhams Theater, London, where he created the part of Sir Lawrence Borthwick, in “Peggy Machree,” with Miss Marie Dainton and the late Denis O'Sullivan. During this season, owing to the illness of Mr. O'Sullivan, Mr. McDermott played the leading role with Miss Dainton. Later came a year with the late Richard Mansfield in this country, and one with Joseph Brooks, of Klaw & Erlanger.”

“BUDDY.”—Jack Hopkins is the Lubin player you asked for. He was the Count in “A Hot Time in Atlantic City,” and the companion of the hero in his exploits in “A Gay Time in New York City.”

G. F. T.—The Bison studio is in Edendale and Los Angeles, precisely as the Edison studio is in New York City in the Bronx and Bedford Park. Edendale is a section of the city largely inhabited by picture players. The Kalem and other companies are also located there.

A. B.—According to the published portraits of the Biograph players, it was Daphne Wayne who played the lead in the Biograph's “The Battle.” Use your name and address next time.

E. E. T.—B seems to have the losing end of the bet. It was Leo Delaney and not Maurice Costello, who played in “Madge of the Mountains.” The two players look very much alike.

E. B. M.—The leading characters in Edison's “The Sailor's Love Letter,” were Herbert Prior, Mabel Trunelle and Laura Sawyer. The latter was Mary. The Selig sea pictures were made on the Pacific Coast, the company working from Los Angeles.

T. N. P.—Your accomplishments are evidently unique, but we do not believe that they would outweigh your inexperience in getting hold of a job. Make up will accomplish much the same result.

S. Y. L.—Miss May Buckley has replaced Miss Florence Lawrence in the Lubin Company. Mr. Johnson remains, we understand.

S. F. J.—It is customary to use white paper in writing scenarios, but there is no fixed rule, so that it is a convenient size and of a color to let the typewriting stand out. (2) The number of words is immaterial. The length of the action counts. About eighteen or twenty average scenes should run about 1,000 feet.

V. C. W.—Charles Ogle was the surgeon in “The Surgeon's Temptation,” done by the Edison Company. (2) Sydney Ayres was the Blackbeard in the Selig film of that title. He was an actual pirate who made his headquarters at Nassau, in the British West Indies.

B. J. K.—Gilbert Anderson was not in “Taming a Tyrant.” Curtis Cooksey was the sailor. It was the Essanay release for February 28th. Miss Rose E. Tapley was the Arna in the Vitagraph's “War,” and Charles Kent her father.

T. V. E.—Tom Mix was the Tom Mason of Selig's “The Telltale Knife,” and William Duncan the Sheriff.

W. O. W.—A “bust” picture in photoplay is not used in the same sense as in the portrait studio. It is not a bust length picture, but a large picture of any animate or inanimate object which it is desired to show in greater detail than is possible in the larger view.

W. A. D.—Miss Gertrude Robinson was Nell in the Reliance “The Trackwalker.”

S. E. R.—The title has been used twice within the year, but there is nothing to prevent its being used again, apparently. Our files show that several titles have been used by three companies in the past twelve months, and what has been can be again.

P. T. M.—George L. Tucker was the husband in Imp's “Uncle's Visit.” William Robert Daly was the Tramp. The Imp studios are in New York City.

M. C. B.—Do not submit your book to the editors. Make a condensed synopsis and use this to query with. As a rule, it is better to make up your scenario and offer that, clearly stating that you hold the full rights to the copyright.

D. G. I.—Such effects as the derailed train in Kalem's “The Lost Freight Car,” are practically trade secrets, and we do not reveal these.

ELSIE.—We know of no school of acting that will qualify you for a position in a studio. Better save your money.

R. U. G.—Write the General Film Company, Fifth Avenue Building, New York City, for the address of the exchange nearest you.

A. N. T.—The employer of the actor in “An Actor in a New Role,” was Jack Hopkins. Address the Lubin Company for his photograph.

G. W.—Earle Williams was the aviator in the Vitagraph's “An Aeroplane Elopement.” He is a member of the stock company, but learned to handle the air scooter.

AMATEUR.—We have no idea where you can hire a motion picture camera for a couple of weeks, but you might try our want advertisement columns. That should get you what you want if it is to be had.

CURIOUS.—The head-on collision between two locomotives in the Vitagraph Monthly, was not a trick effect. Two old engines were employed, and the crews jumped as soon as the throttles had been opened wide. The “stunt” has been done a number of times as a special feature of some celebration. Had the effect been tricked, it is probable that the result would have been more convincing than the real thing.

Song and The Singer

By Clarence E. Sinn.

MR. TOM FAXON, whose portrait appears below, is the professional singer of the Tell Taylor Publishing Company, better known as "The House of Ballads." Mr. Faxon has just returned from New York, where he has been with Mr. Taylor opening a new professional office in the Regal Building, 37th Street and Broadway. Mr. Faxon reports that Tell Taylor's great ballad hit "Down By the Old Mill Stream" is meeting with huge success in New York and will surely be a winner there as it has been elsewhere. He told me how many thousand copies were sold there last week, but I didn't make a note of it and am afraid nobody would believe me if I should say what I think he said. Anyhow, it was a lot of copies. The sales of this popular number have now passed the one million mark and are still soaring. Indeed the song seems to have taken a fresh grip on the public fancy and Mr. Faxon says it looks like one of the song hits of the coming summer. Tom has brought back a few contracts to sing with the leading bands of this country that will be heard at Riverview Park this summer. He also informs me that Tell Taylor has three new numbers for the New Year that are sure fire; "Way Down South" is one in particular.

Mr. Tom Faxon, of the Tell Taylor Music Pub. Co., Chicago.

Geo. Walter Brown is the professional manager for the Chicago branch of the Shapiro Music Publishing Company. Their offices are located on the sixth floor of the Grand Opera House Block, and just as you step off the elevator the first thing you will see is the glad smile and welcoming mitt of George Walter B. He is a good musician and writer of lyrics and knows how to make and hold friends, which is an excellent qualification in a business manager. Just now he is busy introducing "Baboon Baby Dance" to the few people who have not yet heard of it.

Shapiro Notes.

Harry Cooper's big song hit "Baboon Baby Dance" is being sung with tremendous success in Lew Fields' production of Hanky Panky at the American Music Hall in Chicago, and the local manager for Shapiro reports that the sales on this song are Phenomenal (with a capital "P"). One doesn't have to take the local manager's word for the popularity of this song, however, as it can be heard (sung, played or whistled) nearly every place you go. It's a regular "pop." Success to Joe and Harry Cooper.

Edgar Seldon's answer ballad to "All That I Ask Is Love" is entitled "I Give You All You Ask," and is being prominently featured by several of vaudeville's queenly singers.

Mr. Sig. Bosley, one of the Shapiro boosters, is making a big success with "Baboon Baby Dance" at the swellest clubs in Chicago.

Kahn & LeBoy's new Irish song, "A Little Bit of Irish," is being sung in vaudeville by Miss Adele Ritchie and Miss Louise Dresser with unqualified success. It is safe to say that this number will equal the popularity of its predecessor, "Bedelia."

Ted Snyder Notes.

Mr. Frank Clark is spending his winter vacation in New York City. He telegraphs that everything is fine and dandy, and that he will be glad to see all his old friends after January 20th at his old desk at the office of Ted Snyder Company's "Busy Corner Music Store, State and Monroe Streets, Chicago." You can't miss it if you follow the crowd. According to all the calls for "Everybody's Doing It," this number is going to be another "Alexander's Ragtime Band."

Clarence Jones, one of the oldest piano players of the Ted Snyder Music House, is back and will be glad to see all his friends. Flo Jacobson, "The Popular Band Singer," is left in charge of the Ted Snyder office while Frank Clark is in New York. Lillian Snyder of the retail department is spending her winter vacation at Freeport, Ill.

Sam Hermann is singing "Everybody's Doing It" at the Alcazar Theater. Murray Bennet reports that he "takes much pleasure in singing Ted Snyder's songs." To judge by the applause the night I heard him at the Boston Theater, the audience found pleasure in them also.

Rocco Vocco, professional manager for Chas. K. Harris, reports business good at the Chicago office (Grand Opera House Block). These are the songs they are pushing at present: "Joe, You're Good-a-For-Not," "Don't Blame Me For Loving You," "Mississippi Splash," "Don't You Mind it Honey" and "Bless Your Lovin' Heart." These numbers have all passed the experimental stage and are now listed among the standard "sure-fire's."

A visit to the new stock rooms of the Harold Rossiter Music Company, 217, 219 and 221 West Madison Street, Chicago, shows an interesting picture of a fast-growing young firm. This lusty infant is only a little over a year old and has just been compelled to take over an entire floor at the above number to accommodate its increasing proportions. The professional offices are at 145 North Clark Street, Chicago, in charge of Tom Mayo Geary, and 1431 Broadway, New York, in charge of Ben Baer and Julius Roos, all workers, which accounts largely for the rapid growth of the Harold Rossiter Company. Here are the songs these people are working on at present: "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Girl of My Dreams," "Down in Melody Lane," "Years, Years Ago," "Maybe I'll Come Back," "Sighing" and "Oh, You Tease." Mr. D. A. Meany has taken charge of the publicity end of this firm's business.

The Forster Music Company, whose advertisement appears on another page, is another example of a rapidly growing concern. Their stock rooms are located at 529 Wabash Avenue, and professional suite in charge of E. Clinton Keithley at 60 Grand Opera House Block, Chicago. Mr. Keithley is the writer of the song "A Garland of Old Fashioned Roses," which has sprung into enormous popularity of late. This number is the big bet that F. J. A. Forster is banking his money on, and it is the safest bet you can think of. Already the sales have reached a fascinating figure and they are going higher every minute. They have other good songs in stock, too, as the following notes bear witness:

Johnny Ford, assisted by Roy Barton, has put "At The Ragtime Ball" in their act, now playing over the Orpheum time, and report that it is a "knock-out." This is the number that is making the sensational over-night hit, written by Roger Lewis and "Ragtime Jimmy Monaco."

Ben Welch's Burlesquers have interpolated "At The Ragtime Ball" over the Eastern Wheel. Tascott & Tascott are also "Knocking 'em dead" with this number; so is Murray Bennett, that peerless entertainer.

Reinfield's Lady Minstrels, now playing through the South, are using "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" and "At The Ragtime Ball" with great success. Charlie Brown and May Newman over the Orpheum circuit have added "At the Ragtime Ball" in the act, and had to change it from opener to closing so they could show the rest of their act.

Burns and Lawrence, entertainers and classy ones at that, are using "At the Ragtime Ball" over the big time. Twin City Quartette are featuring with unprecedented success "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses," the great ballad hit of the year. Will Goodall and Marie Craig, playing the Orpheum time, are using "Gee, It's Great To Be In Love" for their neat little turn, and the sweetest act in vaudeville says they don't think they will ever change it. They are also using "I Want To Hear A Southern Tune."

"School Days," the big musical show featuring Hermann Timberg is rehearsing "At The Ragtime Ball."

The Tierney Four, those real entertainers, musicians, singers, dancers and comedians are featuring "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" and "At the Ragtime Ball" and are now quite accustomed to stopping shows. Five nights last week the piano had to be put back on the stage to satisfy the audiences, even though the bill's closing act was in the wings ready to go on. There are other acts and shows too numerous to mention here who are using F. J. A. Forster's songs, to say nothing of the instrumental numbers of which his catalogue contains a "whole raft," including the catalogue of Chas. L. Johnson, and about ten new ones on the press. Their big hits now are: "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses," "Gee, It's Great To Be In Love," "At The Ragtime Ball," "I Want To Hear A Southern Tune," Linger Longer, Lovey" and "The Girl For Me." The new Keithley number "Dixie Kisses" is meeting with great approval with acts doing buck or any style of dancing, as well as with silent acts. There are big doings doing around the Forster shop.

A NEW FEATURE FILM COMPANY.

Mr. J. E. Burns, who emphasizes the fact that he was the first man in the employ of the New York Motion Picture Co., and wrote the first scenario for that company, a Western drama, and profited from the experience gained through his connection with them, has organized a feature film company located at No. 64 East 14th Street, known as the B. B. Feature Film Co. With his experience and ability, backed by the many years devoted to the film business, Mr. Burns will be recognized as a formidable competitor to the already well established companies in his class.

Comments on the Films

"A NOBLE ENEMY" (Lubin), January 4.—A melodramatic picture with a modern dreadnaught for its setting. The hero and his bitter rival are United States lieutenants on the same ship and both love Clara, daughter of a rich banker. A revengeful Japanese steward is introduced to bring about the climax. He is punished slightly by the hero, Lieutenant Ward, but released next day by Lieutenant Grey, Ward's rival. The steward removes a part of the great gun breach, knowing that Ward will have to fire it and will be killed. In the meantime, Grey is accidentally knocked off the ship and Ward rescues him. The excellence of the photographs picturing this accident and rescue is worth stopping to note. Later Clara visits the ship. Ward is showing her about and the captain gives him permission to fire the big gun, so that she can see how it is done. At the right moment, the Japanese steward tells Grey about the breach block and he, sick in his bed, staggers up to the deck and comes just in time to avert a tragedy. On account of its backgrounds, a great man-o-war, and because the plot is fairly well woven the picture will be acceptable to audiences.

"A WOMAN'S GRATITUDE" (Melies), January 4.—A melodrama in which a woman, wife of a rough and brutal half-breed, shows her gratitude to a white prospector. He had saved her from her husband's abuse one day when the half-breed was especially ugly. The half-breed bore him a grudge and tried to kill him. There is a good struggle at the edge of a very steep embankment down which the prospector is hurled. The half-breed has hurried on to the claim office to take up the prospector's find. His wife, suspecting that he is going to harm the prospector, has followed. She finds that the claim has been jumped and, first restaking it, hurries to overtake her husband. The prospector, with a broken leg, which he himself has put into splints, has crawled to the railroad and flagged a passing train. A telegram to the town stops the half-breed's work and the final outcome is acceptable. The plot is fairly well built. The "deus ex machina" is a bit too obviously favorable to the story, but this is not a very grievous fault in a melodrama.

"THE VALLEY OF REGRETS" (Essanay), January 4.—In this film is related a domestic tragedy which is possible. A woman feels that she is neglected by her husband, and leaves him. He refuses all propositions for a reconciliation. Later, as a seamstress, she is called to make her own daughter's trouseau. Neither the husband or the daughter recognizes her. The day of the wedding she goes to the house to get one more look at the little daughter she had left behind. Her emotions overpower her and she drops dead. The players have made of this a very convincing drama even though the ending is not pleasant enough to suit the average audience. Dramatically the film is good.

"WHO GOT THE REWARD?" (Biograph)—January 4.—A couple pictured on this film had a joint bank account and it required the names of both on the checks to get the money. He gets into trouble with his wife through gambling away a necklace which belongs to her, and she gets into trouble with him through ordering a fifty dollar hat. A series of very humorous complications follow, resulting in his getting the money for the necklace and she getting the hat. Some of the situations are very absurd.

"THE JOKE ON THE JOKER" (Biograph), January 4.—The story is told here of a joker who became such a pest to his friends that while he was absent on a long trip they advertised that he had met with a fatal accident. His wife believed that she is a widow. She is about to marry again when he returns.

"THE MATE OF THE ALDEN BESSIE" (Selig), January 4.—A long time ago, a story was written about two lovers who were wrecked on an island and as the long months passed the question of whether or not they could marry by themselves constantly arose. Finally they concluded they could and the story left them on the island. In this film much the same tale is revived. In some way the wrecked lovers, or one of them, saved a book containing the marriage service. They agree to marry by going through the form themselves, but just as they were about to begin, a ship appeared on the horizon and they were rescued.

"FOR THE LOVE OF MIKE" (Essanay), January 5.—A comedy-farce with a brand-new idea and when this fresh situation begins to come out on the screen, the spectators see the drift at once and begin to chuckle. As the situation develops, they laugh heartily as every step of the picture's progress adds something new. The first scene was too long. We got all that it gave us in a moment and the rest was not needed. We saw two, whom we supposed to be lovers. The next scene confirmed this and showed the two quarreling. Next day they both went to work. Both were injured, he washing windows, she in her laundry. Both are, by chance, placed side by side in the same ambulance. As shown it is very funny indeed. It is a comedy that can be depended upon. An exhibitor who needs a comedy on his bill may feel assured that this will serve very well. It is well photographed and well acted.

"THE DUDE COWBOY" (Kalem), January 5. A Western cowboy farce-comedy like many others that have used the same situation very nearly. The cowboy is not acceptable to the girl, who wants a city lover. He dresses up as a dude from the city. The other boys are in league with him and, as bandits, scare the dude and the girl who are out riding. The dude escapes; then, as himself, comes to the rescue. It has a very pleasing travelog on the same reel. The two together are much more substantial than this farce would be alone. They make a fair programme filler.

"THE O'KALEMS VISIT TO KILLARNEY" (Kalem), January 5.—A very entertainingly put on account of a visit to these famous Irish lakes. It not only shows instructive pictures; has much holiday trip atmosphere, which makes it doubly pleasing.

"THIRTY DAYS AT HARD LABOR" (Edison), January 9.—A comedy that makes use of an old situation. It is well acted and has some good photographs of interesting backgrounds. There is freshness in its incidents and in the way the story is worked out. The young son of the idle rich undertakes to earn his bread for thirty days by the sweat of his brow. It is to win a girl and is a condition imposed by her father, a self-made man. At first the young man attacks the problem in the simplest way, gets a job, several, in fact, at day labor. He finds that it doesn't go, so uses his wits and lands a soft snap as halberdier in a German restaurant in New York. At about a half hour before his time is up, the girl comes to the Reinschloss Restaurant. The self-made man recognizes the youth, but he quickly pulls down his visor and the girl doesn't see him. It's a good light comedy, a good programme filler.

"HOW TOMMY SAVED HIS FATHER" (Vitagraph), January 9.—A war story not quite up to the best that this company has turned out of this kind. It features the clever ruses of a Southern lad who, after the battle of Cedar Creek, when the Union soldiers were seeking for wounded Confederates, saved his father several times. Each time he managed to lead the soldiers away from the place where his father was until he got him into a little cave where he was safe. Kenneth Casey plays this lad's part. The photographs are good and most of the acting. The picture will make an acceptable programme filler.

"TWO MEN AND A GIRL" (Selig), January 9.—A Western story that is well acted and very interesting. It is a melodrama, not very convincing nor gripping, yet with good pictures of wild life, such as a thirsty trip across the desert in the search of a gold mine in an oasis. The two men were brothers, one a courageous, sterling character, the other an avaricious cowardly sneak. The girl was the granddaughter of an old miner whom the brothers had found dying in the desert. He told them of the mine and grandaughter, and asked them to look out for both. They get the girl and, with a good equipment, start out across the desert. After much hardship, they start back with rich ore. The question now is, who is going to marry the girl? The spectator wants the good man to win, but it looks as though the coward was to be the lucky one. The old miner's ghost appears and decides for the good man. It is not surely a feature picture, but will serve as a good filler.

"A HEN HOUSE HERO" (Essanay), January 9.—The characters that make this comedy-farce are both interesting and amusing. There is farmer Schultz who employed the very pretty and pleasing hired-girl with whom the two hired men fell very much in love. If she really made that pan of biscuits that we see her taking from the oven, they had reason. Perhaps more than one spectator will wish he knew her. Then there are the two men. When both had written a proposal to her, she asked advice of the farmer's wife. Farmer Schultz made her a promise that, if she would marry the one who caught the chicken-thief who was depopulating the chicken coop, he would make her a wedding present of $50. One of them did catch the thief. This is one of the most amusing parts of the picture. It is a comedy that will satisfy and please. It is a first-class brightener for any bill.

"THE WINGED MESSENGER" (Gaumont), January 9.—The quality of this picture is its prettiness. It also has a very tender, pathetic sentiment which is very satisfying. The chief role is taken by a little girl of about ten with thick, dark curls, who is very pretty and a very pleasing player. Her winged messenger was a carrier pigeon that she sent with a letter to her mother who was dead. The father, a wealthy man, was about to marry again; it was this that troubled her. Her father, however, got the message and the bird brought back an answer that made the little girl happy. The settings are in and around a magnificent country house with its grounds full of flowering bushes and its beautiful gate. If it had been made as convincing in all its scenes as it is in most of them, it could have been called a masterpiece. It is not surely a good feature picture; yet whatever pictures are chosen to go with it, some spectators will probably count it the prettiest picture on the bill.

"A SOUTHERN BOY OF '61" (Kalem), January 8.—A war story. The young man joins the Federal army, and thereby alienates his father and his sweetheart. Later the son allows the father, now a Confederate soldier, to escape. Then the young man is wounded near his old home and is cared for by an old slave. Hostilities have nearly ended, and the young man's devotion to the cause be expoused arouses the admiration of the Southern hearts and he regains his father and sweetheart.

"A CHILD OF THE WEST" (Essanay), January 6.—The feature of this story is the acting of a child when she pleads with the vigilants not to lynch her father. He has been arrested and is taken from the custody of the sheriff by the mob. The child's plea saved him and guaranteed a fair trial.

Scene from "Whoops, the Detective" (Comet).

"THE OTHER FELLOW" (Selig), January 5.—This film tells the story of a domestic mix-up which develops some rather comic situations. A wife becomes jealous of her husband and seeks to get even by arousing his jealousy also. As the film works out she discovers that she has carried the matter altogether too far and hastens to explain the whole situation. The complications which arise are altogether probable and afford much amusement for the audience.

"HUTCHINSON, KANSAS, SEMI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION" (Selig), January 5.—This film shows a close view of the most interesting events in this celebration. President Taft and Champ Clark are prominent figures in the pictures. It contains a procession of floats and some fine cattle and horses.

"FREEZING AUNTY" (Edison), January 5.—This delightful comedy, while based upon an old story, is worked out in a new way. Henpeck and his nephew plan to use a new preserving preparation in freezing Mrs. Henpeck so they can carry out some of their schemes. Mrs. Henpeck is informed of this by her daughter's lover to whom she has hitherto objected and they substitute water for the preparation. Mrs. Henpeck goes through all the motions of freezing when the dose is administered and then high jinks begin. She transforms herself into a ghost and when the two men return from the wine supper she appears to them. During the rush to get out of the way of the ghost her identity is disclosed. In the closing scene Henpeck is on his knees begging forgiveness, the nephew is invited to close the door from the outside and the lovers are made happy.

"CODFISH INDUSTRY, NEWFOUNDLAND" (Edison), January 5.—A series of pictures giving a fair idea of the methods of catching and curing codfish as they prevail in Newfoundland. The opening view of the ships riding at anchor gives a very impressive idea of the magnitude of the business. The fish lying on huge frames drying in the sun show how they are cured ready for shipment. A very illuminating industrial.

"THE SURGEON'S HEROISM" (Lubin), January 8.—This picture is meritorious on more than one count; but its chief interest lies in the quality of the surgeon's heroic act; it was very courageous and self-forgetful. In a hospital, he was operating on an injured man whom he supposed to be his successful rival for the love of a young lady. A fire broke out. His assistant became panic stricken and wanted to flee. The doctor quickly locked the door, threw the key out of the window and coolly proceeded with his operation until the firemen arrived and carried out the patient. The producer has handled this scene very well and has brought the quality of the action out with strength and clearness. The whole picture, all its separate scenes, are well put on and photographed. Some of them are very interesting. Arthur Johnson plays the part of the surgeon. It is a good picture; but, if it is used as the chief attraction of the bill, it might be wise to have fairly substantial pictures to go with it. The audience liked it. Its effect is what may be expected from any well-told, pleasing, encouraging story.

"CAPTAIN JENKS' DILEMMA" (Vitagraph), January 8.—A Bunnygraph comedy. The situation is not wholly fresh nor very strong; but Bunny plays the part of Captain Jenks, an old sea captain who fell in love with a widow. Bunny is always a host in himself in such a comedy and, in this instance, the audience enjoyed his presence and acting very much. The captain was lonesome and proposed to a widow; he was astonished to learn that she had five children. This was his dilemma. He had a friend, a very old sea captain, who gave him advice on the situation. He advised him to tell the widow that he had eight children. She said, "The more the merrier." The old salt then advised picking out eight likely newsboys. This he did and took them to see the widow. Before they had been there long, the distracted woman gave him back his ring. It is well photographed and put on and is a picture of merit, although it falls somewhat below being a masterpiece.

"A TALE OF THE WILDERNESS" (Biograph), January 8.—The chief interest in this picture is in the elemental struggle, the growing danger of the band of immigrants, driving into a country which, as we see it, swarms with Indians, and their final escape from the savages when attacked in overwhelming numbers. The dramatic thread, telling of the relationship of two backwoodsmen, brothers, with each other and, later, of the one with the caravan and of the other, a renegade, with the Indians, and of the results of these, is not very convincing and does not, in itself, affect us deeply. There are too many "Indians by courtesy." Large crowds of them are kept in view and, while there are extremely well pictured incidents, there are also places where the illusion wears very thin. The background is a thin wood, leafless as in late auttumn. The photographs are good. The picture falls short of being a good feature, but will serve well as a programme filler.

"PLEASE REMIT" (Edison), December 6.—A very welcome comedy with the editor of a country newspaper as its center. This editor wasn't popular and his sheet seemed to be even less so. Bills payable in his office there were plenty; but bills receivable, unpaid, still collected and there was no money to get rid of the former. It was a rough Western district and the cowboys, not liking the "Clarion," laughed when its editor presented subscription bills; so he addressed a post-card to one creditor stating the circumstances and signed it "yours in despair." His last possession, a shot-gun, then was offered for sale. An Indian was waiting to buy it. The editor was seen coming down the street with it. He had become known as "a desperate man" and he suddenly found that he could make collections. Everyone in the general store seemed willing to pay. There is plenty of fun in the comedy. The plot is well-planned and holds attention. The photographs are good. The characters clearly set forth by good players and the audience plainly liked the picture. Perhaps it isn't quite substantial enough to serve as a feature that can be boosted by special advertising; but no bill can be a poor one that includes it.

"THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE" (Vitagraph), December 6.—A country love story in very pretty backgrounds with some very pleasing comedy. It begins by making us acquainted with a pair of country lovers, and then shows us a little quarrel between two city lovers. The city man comes to the country and tries to flirt with the country girl, even making use of subterfuge to gain her sympathy. The country lad sees through him and shows him up, not crudely, but with a gentle irony that gets over to the spectators very effectively. It is a rare comedy, full of substance and true to human nature. Miss Florence Turner plays the country girl. The part gives her plenty of scope and everyone knows what her capabilities are. Simplicity, unaffected, quiet naturalness are the words that describe her work in this part. She gives a very beautiful character portrayal. She is very well supported, too. The scythe work of the country boy in the first scene would have made him a champion mower. The only noticeable weak point in the picture is in one or two of the backgrounds. The picture of the rocks would have been better for a bit more breathing room; it lacked atmosphere. The photographs are good. The picture held the audience closely and pleased them much. It is a substantial feature picture. As an excellent picture of Miss Turner's acting. it would pay to advertise and use it as an attraction.

"AN OLD EXCUSE THAT WORKED" (Lubin), January 6.—A comedy farce of a clubman's experiences. He had worked an old gag to get permission to spend the evening with the boys, but had over-stayed his time and was afraid to go home. He pretended that he had suddenly gone crazy. The boys brought him home. At its ending the audience laughed heartily. It is well photographed and pleasing. With the other picture on the same reel, it will make a fair lightener with more substantial offerings in the bill.

"THE TRAMP AND THE BEAR" (Lubin), January 6.—This is also a farce. It can hardly be called new, yet it did not seem stale to the audience at all. It seemed to be enjoyed. Two tramps in a country town steal a furrier's bear and one dresses up in it. He is a good imitator of a bear in walk and bearing and puts much fun over, as he and his pal get provisions and money out of the scared inhabitants. They are arrested and trounced before they can escape.

"THE EVILS OF IMPURE LITERATURE" (Gaumont), January 6.—A picture with a strong moral lesson; yet it is not a tract. At least, it is so seemingly artless, simple and true that the spectator is held, not so strongly by its appeal against evil novels, etc., as by the more general view that it gives him into human fates. It is a very tragic picture, but it is stimulating, not depressing; for, after all, it is a picture of humanity as victorious over evil. The plot is simple and truthful. It was not the daughter of the man who wrote the brilliant evil book who suffered on account of it. He knew where the stuff that was in it came from. But it was the daughter of the widow, who was permitted to read it, who suffered and made her mother suffer. This mother came to see the author of the book and he didn't like what she said to him. Later, her disillusioned girl comes back and is forgiven. When we add that the Gaumont leading woman took the part of the suffering mother and that her marvelously competent work was well supported by the whole cast. we imply that the theme was handled in a beautiful and effective way. The Gaumont players, especially its leading woman, are thorough artists. This substantial picture will make a notable feature. Exhibitors will make no mistake in pushing it as such.

"THE PEACE-MAKER" (Selig), January 8.—A good, pleasing comedy, of backwoods mountain folk, at which the audience laughed. The people are of the same type and the backgrounds are the same in kind as the Selig producer used in a recent picture, "A Diamond in the Rough." The photographs are excellent; but the scenes don't use the grand backgrounds; they are smaller. The story shows us a quarrel between a backwoodsman and his wife. The peace-maker was a novelist who came to the district looking for fresh local color. Perhaps he overdid the peace-making and was a bit too ministerial. The effect made him seem, especially in the last scene in the mountain cabin, to be taking too much credit to himself. The fun comes mostly from the mountain characters. It is not surely a notable feature; but it is good and substantial.

Independent.

"THE AVIATOR'S SUCCESS" (Champion), January 8.—A picture telling how a young aviator, inventor of a new biplane, found a backer. When he made his exhibition flight, he took a young girl up with him. She became an enthusiastic bird-woman and had a flying machine of her own. The aviator and she became engaged. The story is slight and not very convincing; but there are several well-photographed pictures of flying machines in action, including one of the Champion leading lady as aviator of her own machine. These scenes are the picture's chief interest.

"LOVE THAT NEVER FAILS" (Champion), January 10.—There are some fine photographs in this picture of a misty winter's morning after a snow-fall. There are some fine horses in it and some good riding. The same little girl who played the "Kid of Roaring Camp" appears in this picture as the child of a woman who left her husband and ran away with a "handsomer man," fifteen minutes after meeting him, apparently for the first time. This little girl goes out to find her missing mother in the snowy forest and falls over a cliff. The husband meets the mother near the place and hurls her over the cliff beside the child. The mother carries her home. There were fine possibilities in it, but it was spoiled by very careless handling. The acting was good and the settings were good. It might have been a strong feature picture if handled more wisely.

"THE GAMBLER'S HEART" (Bison), January 9.—The gambler had won the foreman's money (it wasn't his own) and had overseen the man's despair. His heart was touched, perhaps he was conscience stricken. He left the money where the foreman could get it and a note advising him to leave gambling alone. The photographs are clear and the story quite plain; but it isn't strongly convincing. One will be apt to ask what the gambler was in business for, to give back the money he had won. Another will say, though, that the foreman's predicament made him realize how inhuman his business was and made him determine to forsake it. There is no heroine or love story connected with it. It is neither romantic nor comic, but depends on the elemental dramatic situation expressed by the question, "Will the foreman kill himself?" and on the higher interest expressed by the question, "Will the gambler relent?" The first doesn't excite us deeply; we are not very warmly attracted by him. The other question is not answered very convincingly. So we are not deeply affected either way.

"THE LAUGH ON DAD" (Bison), January 12.—A romantic comedy in which the objecting parent locks up the heroine to keep her from eloping and then has a good laugh telling the cowboys about it. He gets one of them to dress up and put on a veil to fool the waiting lover. But the young people have already stolen a march on the objecting parent. They see through the scheme and hoist Dad with his own petard. Dad sees the elopement and laughs heartily, thinking that what is really the daughter is the dummy. The photographs are excellent; the conduct of the story, which has been used before, is good and the picture effective as a fair Western comedy. The picture is a very good program filler, light and pleasing.

"THE WINNING MISS" (Imp), January 8.—A farce that, now and then, intentionally burlesques other farces. There is a situation in it that is very like one in a Selig picture of a few weeks ago in which a girl hides from an objecting parent in a wardrobe, delivered to the hero's rooms by mistake and then carried away, without his knowing it, with the girl inside. One of the Biograph slueths also seems to have a part in this picture. But, taking the farce as it comes, it is lively and very amusing. It will give plenty of laughter, for the actors didn't lie down on the job at all, and took everything that came, even to a plunge into what seems to have been a plaster trough. It is a picture that will be acceptable on almost any bill. It is light.

"IN THE NORTHERN WOODS" (Imp), January 11.—A melodrama of love and rivalry among the lumberjacks in the North Woods. The story is not new; but it is skilfully made and dramatic. It is very well acted. The camera has not only provided clear-cut pictures in which facial expression is brought out strongly; but has also given a poetic atmosphere to the scenes, whether interiors, as in the hero's log cabin, or pictures of the snowy winter woods where the lumbermen are working. The unsuccessful rival is a half-breed. He attempts to kill the hero by knocking him unconscious and leaving him on the log-carrier which is just about to feed him to the saw when he is saved by the girl. The villain leaves the neighborhood, but returns after the wedding to make trouble. He is caught before he can do any harm, and the heroine then pleads with the men not to hang him. He is shot, however, trying to escape. A picture strong enough to stand by itself, although it probably is not the most attractive offering this week.

"COTTON INDUSTRY IN SOUTH CAROLINA" (Imp), January 13.—A good and thoroughly enjoyable industrial and scenic picture. It begins with cotton fields and darkies picking the white yield. It also shows us the bales off to market, road scenes and dock scenes. The photographs are excellent. A strong offering for any and all occasions.

"HOW SHE MARRIED" (Imp), January 13.—A comedy-farce and a very amusing one. The fun comes from the acting and general management of the picture rather than from the situation, which is clever enough but slight. The father and mother were trying to get the elder daughter married; but difficulties always arose through the prospective fiance's falling in love with the pretty younger sister. In the last case, younger sister helps. Older sister dresses in her coat and veil and elopes. Father doesn't know what's up and chases the fleeing couple. They win to the justice's, and say! the groom's face when the just married bride removes her veil is a study. An excellent lightener for use with a heavy feature.

"WHEN HUBBY WENT TO COLLEGE" (Powers), January 9.—A comic character farce. Hubby wants to enjoy life, but wifey keeps him under her thumb. Wifey plans to attend a suffragette convention. Hubby plans to have a good time at his nephew's. Wifey catches on to the scheme and follows, but is seen coming up the path and is badly fooled. The last scene shows wifey more tractable. It is not a picture that will excite enthusiasm. But it is well acted and makes a fairly pleasing picture. Very light; a filler.

"TOURING ITALY—VENICE" (Powers), January 9.—This is one more of the Italian travelogs that Powers has been releasing. This, like the others, is a remarkably good film. The photographs are clear, stereoscopic and instructive. Will do well on any and all occasions.

"ECONOMICAL BROWN" (Solax), January 10.—A picture of the kind of man who makes his wife pinch and save money so that he can "blow" himself and his friends to good cigars and drinks and dinners. He is self-indulgent in every way; but he won't let his wife have the bare necessities. Whenever she needs anything, he says, "We must economize." She gets her revenge. She really does economize at home, in the food and other things, and that brings him to terms. The photographs are very good. The acting and the action are skilful and pleasing. There are also some very pretty winter, snow scenes. The picture makes a light, pleasing comedy that will be very acceptable on a bill with more heavy offerings. It is just the picture to lighten a bill without making it frivolous.

"BLACK SHEEP" (Solax), January 12.—The inventor of a worthless electrical contrivance is the father of the "Black Sheep," a worthless thug, and also of the young girl who is heroine of the melodrama. The black sheep shows his character in the first scene and then drops out of the picture to give a rich, young manufacturer time to fall in love with and marry the sister. Then, the inventor being dead, the evil brother appears again to burglarize the home, and also to make the young husband jealous. It has the stereotyped qualities of the good, old melodramas. It is well photographed and the story is clear throughout; but some of the acting, at some of the picture's emotional moments, is such that the picture seems, at times, like a burlesque. At these moments it affords much amusement. The heroine of the picture is a good actress and, like that of three or four other players in the picture, her work is commendable throughout. It is a filler, not a feature; yet as such it will help out on almost any occasion.

"NEW YEAR'S GIFT" (Itala), December 30.—A farce. The wife demanded a New Year's gift. The husband had forgotten, and went out to get one. What he got, the way he brought it home and its reception will make a laugh surely. It was a box of macaroons, but under the cardboard ten thousand franks had been hidden. The wife threw it out of the window. It had many adventures worth while seeing, for they are made by very ingenious tricks. A very good New Year's offer indeed.

"THE NEW CLERK" (Nestor), January 8.—A romantic comedy with all the hall marks of Nestor manufacturing, viz.: good acting by pleasing players, careful and suggestive backgrounds, speedy action, etc. Miss Violet is the heroine, daughter of the stout country grocer, and is very much loved by the new clerk whom she herself favors. But the old man won't stand for any love-making from a poor man and they have to "put a game up" on Dad to make him consent. The scheme was suggested by a drummer, friend of the clerk's. This man had Dad arrested for theft. Young clerk claims to be guilty. Both are proved innocent. Dad then looks on the self-sacrificing clerk as a son-in-law worth while. It isn't convincing as real life, but it surely is pleasing as a picture.

"THE LOST ADDRESS" (Nestor), January 8.—A short farce-comedy. An absent-minded minister, on the way to a wedding, loses the address. He runs up and down the streets looking for a house where there are signs of festivities. But his prolonged absence has put a damper on the festive spirits of the gathering and he is a long while finding the place. The scenes are pretty. The spectators laughed and seemed to enjoy it. A good release to go with a strong, dramatic picture on special occasions. It might lead very well as the chief picture in an ordinary bill.

"JUST TOO LATE" (Nestor), January 13.—A rough and tumble farce, on the French model. A young man with a great opportunity overslept and missed his train. He causes much disturbance as he rushes down the street and he misses the train by a moment. It is not a great picture. Parts of it are very amusing. A fair filler for ordinary occasions.

"MUTT AND JEFF AND THE ITALIAN STRIKERS" (Nestor), January 13.—The two get jobs as hands on a railroad section gang and are chased by strikers. Jeff escapes, Mutt doesn't. It is very lively, more lively than usual with pictures in this series; it is also quite amusing.

"TRACKED THROUGH THE DESERT" (Nestor), January 10.—One of the noticeable features of this picture is the quality of its desert scenes; they are remarkable. Indeed, the mechanical work is perfect throughout. It is an exciting picture, full of fast riding with backgrounds of mountain, desert and wild land. The story is complicated and requires a close attention to get it. Perhaps one or two leaders would have done good service in making it clearer. The sheriff had warned his friend that his companions were vicious. This young man then tells these rough characters that he had done with them; but later they meet him on the hills. They have stolen a bunch of bronchos and are being chased by a posse. The man sees the posse coming and attempts to escape, but is tracked. It seems to the sheriff that he surely is guilty. He is saved by a clever ruse of his wife and both make their escape to another part of the country. It is a very good picture to use where the exhibitor is featuring a comedy. It is not surely a feature.

"GOSSIP" (Majestic), January 12.—A study in the natural history of gossip stories, showing the growth of a scandal from the most harmless of seeds to a great vine to which every one who helps it along adds a leaf or two until quite a respectable poison ivy is the result. In the picture, because a man helped his injured stenographer to her home, his friends contrive to spread a story that, had he not taken it early and riddled it from the roots, would have broken his engagement. It is not an emotional picture, its appeal is to the mind and to the feeling that makes us like to see wanton trouble-makers getting theirs. But it is a very clever idea, fresh and worth while. A very acceptable program filler even when a strong bill has been selected.

"BILL, KING OF THE SAHARA" (Lux), January 12.—Bill, the well-known Lux player, is carried by a camel the desert ship, that is of the non-stop kind, into the Sahara. He arrives at an opportune moment and is made king by the Arabs. His wife follows in a cab. She, too, arrives in Bill's kingdom and the taximeter shows a fearful bill for the trip. The scenes are kept speedy and the picture has much that is amusing. It is a filler.

"ARABELLA FALLS IN LOVE WITH HER MASTER" (Lux), January 12.—As a character, poor Arabella was one in a thousand, in her make-up she looked almost human. She fell in love with her master. He caught her making love to his picture and he beat her. It is a laughter-giving farce, and a good program filler.

"THE THEFT OF MONA LISA" (Great Northern), November 25.—A bright and clever comedy satire which is sure to be acceptable, especially to cultivated audiences. It is a newspaper love story. The reporter wanted to marry the publisher's daughter. He was told that he could, as soon as he accomplished some coup to show that he was a first-class reporter. He noticed how sleepy the museum officials were, from Monsieur, the Director, down to the guards, and stole the Mona Lisa from under their very noses. The paper published an account of it and Monsieur the Director humbly congratulated him on his cleverness. The idea itself is not only very good, but the whole conduct of the piece is well nigh perfect, being full of amusement-giving suggestions. It is a good comedy to go with some strong feature picture.

"THE INEVITABLE JOHNSON" (Great Northern), January 13.—The picture opens with a scene in a country school for boys and the two men, who in a former picture were called "the twins," are among the pupils. One is Johnson, the other is Smith. Johnson is always "Johnnie-on the spot" to annoy Smith. The picture then jumps a few years. There's a love story in which Johnson is still the bane of Smith, until he drives Smith mad. It ends in a good laugh. It is a picture which maintains the comedy spirit and it is acceptable. The photographs are not perfect in every case.

"THE GANG FIGHTER" (Reliance), January 10.—An unusually strong dramatic study of gang life as it is in modern great cities. The gangfighter had been the leader; he had the kind of rough intelligence and brute strength that made him easily chief, in spite of others who were jealous of his position and its prerogatives; but he was converted by a pretty mission worker. This gives the picture a heart-interest that never degenerates into sentimentality or mawkishness. The atmosphere of the picture is realistic, not with the pseudo-realism of the Zolaesque writers, who, attempting to do the impossible, viz.: escape from the individual viewpoint, fall into morbidity. But rather it has the more modern realism found in the school of strong, young illustrators who draw pictures of life as their hearts see it in our congested cities and whose work has "a punch." The credit is due to the producer. How he found the personel for that gang and got it to act, or how he got good actors to "make up" so accurately, is a wonder. He has collected a "bunch of mugs" hardly to be found outside ot a real gang and a tough one at that. Again, he has shown that he knows his business by his sets and by one marvelously suggestive, real background—a dock with a big liner unloading and a gang of stevedores at work, the converted gangster among them. The whole cast acts with truth and simple naturalness. The gang fighter's work is especially good; but the Mission worker (Miss Ruth Robinson) had the hardest part to fill, for the harpies of sentimentality love such a part as she had to play, and it took both wisdom and experience to keep them so clearly away as she has done. A sure feature picture. It is a picture to attract attention.

"THE QUARREL" (Reliance), January 13.—A slight incident, a quarrel and the make-up that followed. Wine was the cause of this quarrel; for the husband got very drunk. It is not a very significant or vital picture, when compared with the other Reliance pictures of this week. It will serve as a filler, but there is a good deal of drunkenness in it; in fact, it seems to be chiefly that.

"PANORAMIC VIEW OF NEW YORK CITY FROM THE METROPOLITAN TOWER" (Reliance), January 13.—This is a remarkable picture. It will be appreciated by many spectators. It is the best picture of New York City that this reviewer remembers. It will be acceptable in any bill.

"A DOCTOR'S DUTY" (Eclair, American), January 9.—An intense situation freshly dramatic makes this picture effective, although one may feel that part of the acting is not all clear. The confusion comes at the climax when the doctor, preparing to operate on a wounded Italian, finds his own family jewels in the man's possession. They had been worn by the doctor's blind sister whom we had seen robbed of them. As he acts, the doctor doesn't let us know how much of the situation, as it really is, is known to him. When last seen, the doctor's house had been burning and his blind sister, wandering away, had been robbed. Does the doctor know this? In the end, the doctor performs his duty and saves the Italian's life. And the last scene shows us that everything turns out all right. The scenes are pleasing and, as a whole, the picture will be acceptable, even on a strong bill, although it is not a sure feature picture.

"THE INVENTOR" (Eclair), January 11.—A story of an inventor who, robbed of his patent by an unscrupulous manufacturer, has the character to shield the man from the fury of his friends. This makes the manufacturer relent. The struggle, as shown, is not very convincing, nor does the picture, as a whole, affect one deeply. Yet it is well acted, for the most part, and leaves a pleasant inpression. It is not a picture for a special bill.

"THE LOCKET" (American), January 11.—The villain induces the hero to gamble with the payroll money and he loses it. He is saved by an old gambler whom he had been charitable to, who keeps him from killing himself and gives him enough money to make up the loss. This gambler had once loved the boy's mother and the last scene shows him peering into the cabin through the window. Several of the settings have been used before and these give us the impression that we have seen the picture before; yet there is a good deal of freshness in the arrangement of the story and the general conduct of the picture is very good. The photographs are excellent. It is a fairly good picture; but not one to feature as a special attraction.

"THE WINNING OF LA MESA" (American), January 8.—One would hardly recognize Miss Bush in this new role as La Mesa the barmaid who, in her rough surroundings, wins respect by being something of a hoyden. This aspect of her character is commented on strongly by her attitude toward the refinements of life when they are brought within her scope. The player's work in picturing this shows much insight. It is the arrival of a minister with his mother and sister that widens her view. It is a tragic picture, for the girl's character is drawn against a rough, frontier background of drinking, gambling and murder; but it is also a deep pictue to the thoughtful spectator. It is a substantial offering and will be very acceptable with a good comedy in good, strong bill.

"JUST A BAD KID" (Thanhouser), January 9.—The Thanhouser kid takes the part of the bad youngster and she acts it so well that she gives the kid of this picture a human impishness that is most delightful to see—in a picture. In real life, if we had to live with her, we, too, might call her a "bad kid"; but in a picture, the little player of this part keeps her audience thoroughly in sympathy with the little girl she portrays. Perhaps she has never done anything that was more thoroughly human than this and it will add a host to her admirers, which are very, very numerous already. The picture is unusually good and desirable. An exhibitor can safely feature this comedy, especially with a good picture in more serious vein.

"MR. WHOOPS, THE DETECTIVE" (Comet), January 8.—A burlesque detective story in which Whoops, not unlike the Biograph's sleuths, tries to capture Tony and Tom, who have kidnapped the "pet" of a noble house. Whoops comes in contact with the thugs, but each time they relieve him of all his valuables. The pet turns out to be a monkey. There are parts of the picture that are amusing. It has some very well-made pictures of the beach, with a good sea rolling.

"THE BOARDING HOUSE MYSTERY" (Rex), January 11.—A farce-comedy giving the adventures of an unsuccessful ventriloquist. Other boarders in his house see him ill-treating one of his dummies and get the entire police force on his trail. This force stands trembling on the steps, but plucks up courage to break into his room where everything is confusion; for the ventriloquist has left and is at the depot with his trunks. The entire police force, as his duty demands, hurries to the depot with a large delegation of citizens and has the trunks opened. In the ventriloquist's trunk are found the talking dolls which apparently get sassy, for the citizens seem to enjoy what they say to the entire police force, who seems much taken back. It is a light picture; it will serve as a filler to brighten a heavy bill.

"AN AUTUMN SUNSET DREAM" (Ambrosio), January 10.—This is in no sense a picture of a dream. In it, another of D'Annuncio's tragic scenarios is set forth in beautiful pictures. The action is supposed to take place in Venice at the time of her glory. The story deals with thwarted passion and the terrible vengeance the neglected woman wreaked upon her supplanter in the affections of a count. This vengeance is accomplished through the spells of a sorceress who makes, in wax, a figure of the supplanter, Pantea, and the neglected Dolores stabs this and then sets it on fire. We are shown the terrible results. One scene, marvelously beautiful, is on a large pleasure ship where Pantea is entertaining the count. Another is in Dolores' palace where the sorceress has set up the smoking tripod and the wax figure of Pantea. We see Dolores gleefully stab the figure, again and again. The scene again changes, and we see Pantea suffer. We then see Dolares set the figure on fire. Then we see Pantea's ship in flames. We afterward see Dolores stop. The thought has come to her that the count is also on the burning ship. The sorceress confirms her fear and she swoons. The photographs and lighting are perfect and give what might be termed a literary atmosphere to the scenes that is very pleasing. The scenes themselves are artfully constructed and add greatly to the picture. The quality of the acting of these well-known Ambrosio players needs no comment—but it is remarkably fine. Exhibitors will make no mistake in featuring this picture; but they should be careful to add a light comedy to go with it in the bill, as this picture is certainly very tragic. It is, however, among the strongest pictures, if not the strongest, of the week. It is certainly the most artistic.

ANIMATED PHOTOGRAPHY FROM AN AEROPLANE.

Interesting and Successful Experiments with Possibilities of Remarkable Development.

A party of three, Mr. Israel Ludlow, Mr. John G. Hemment, and Mr. Frank S. Lusk, the writer, left New York in December for Marblehead, Mass., where are located the Burgess Co., and Curtiss aeroplane factories. Rainy and snowy conditions continued for five or six days, and we were kept busy in the shops, where Mr. Ludlow, of the Aviation Film Company, devised a plan for turning the crank of the camera by means of the aeroplane motor. The work was being done for the Champion Film Company, who are about to install the instrument on the aeroplane of Robert G. Fowler, the trans-continental aviator.

The morning of Thursday, December 21st, 1911, dawned clear and cold—ideal weather for flying. The hydro-aeroplane was pulled by a launch to a float anchored in Marblehead Bay. Mr. John G. Hemment, well known as the photographer of six United States Presidents, and having spent recent months in Africa taking motion pictures of wild animals in their native lair, and as having had quite a number of experiences in a motion picture way about the Arctic Circle, was scheduled to take his first flight. He was exceedingly calm, his previous adventures having rendered tame such a sensation as flying.

Mr. W. P. Page, the aviator, was a little dubious as to taking Mr. Hemment up on account of his weight, and required him to divest himself of his overcoat. The motion picture machine and passenger weighing over 265 pounds, and the hydro-aeroplane floating about 100 pounds each, the flight constituted a weight-carrying record. They successfully got off, half circling the bay in order to rise against the wind. At a height of 150 feet, Mr. Hemment set the crank of his camera going and they flew down the bay against the wind at a 50-mile clip. They started a flock of wild ducks up from the water, and Mr. Page followed them while Mr. Hemment kept the camera focused and crank turning, obtaining a good picture of wild ducks in a panic. The actual time in the air was eight minutes, and Mr. Hemment said he thoroughly enjoyed the flight.

I had been waiting impatiently several days for a chance to take a flight, never having gone up before, Mr. Page said before starting that I probably would not be thinking much of taking pictures when I got up in the air, but take them I did—several hundred feet of film. We reached a height of 300 feet and over, at times, and got some good pictures of the coast line, of half-submerged reefs, and of several full-rigged schooners in the harbor. We went at the rate of about a mile a minute, and remained in the air 12 minutes.

The device for automatically taking motion pictures from an aeroplane worked perfectly, and will be of immense benefit to the government in taking rapidly the topography of the land. The aviator himself shuts on and off the power to turn the crank of the camera, and a passenger is not needed.

MOTION PICTURE THEATERS IN PANAMA.

Mr. N. R. Johnson, of Cristobal, Canal Zone, who recently paid a visit to New York, is doing a flourishing business and may open another theater shortly. He purchased a Motiograph Moving Picture Machine from J. H. Hallberg, the "Economizer Man," with many other supplies. Mr. Hallberg also reports the sale of Powers No. 6 Moving Picture Machine with Hallberg Economizer to Criterion Theater, Rutherford, N. J., and the same equipment to American Amusement Co., Minneapolis, Minn. Also an Edison Moving Picture Machine to John Dyer, Prairie City, Ore.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

BY RULE OF THUMB.—Geo. A. Coleman, Fresno, Cal., orders a Hand-Book, and writes: "I have been touring California with a little one-man show for a number of years. My wife is box-office manager and general assistant. I had not seen a MOVING PICTURE WORLD until day before yesterday, when I made the acquaintance of a local show man who had a few dozen back numbers. I secured a loan of them and started in on the Trouble Department, or, as you now call it, the Projection Department, and could not stop reading until I went through that part of all the numbers on hand. I learned more about projection in that two days' reading than I have in all my experience on the road. Iwas considerably amused at the first part of the argument between yourself and Leadville concerning the feasibility of using an arc light on a low voltage D. C. generator without resistance. I have been running my projection arc without resistance for about a year, using a generator driven by my automobile engine. I will give you this experience in detail, as it may be of interest to yourself and your readers.

"When I first started on the road I used a home-made gas making outfit. Besides being very bulky, it was not always to be depended upon for good light. I therefore began looking about to see what I could do in the way of electrical equipment. My aim was to get along with just as small a generator as possible, both on account of weight and cost. Almost all of the towns I played were from 400 to 1,000 population. The halls were small, some not over 30 feet long. A picture 7 to 8 feet wide satisfied my audience thoroughly. A picture of that width may cause you to smile, but those people seldom see a show more than once a year, and if an 8 foot picture is clear and plain they are satisfied with its size. I have been able to get a satisfactory picture of these dimensions, using a 15 ampere rheostat with A. C., and ⅜ cord carbons in a right angle lamp. I find the right angle lamp gives greater illuminating power per ampere than does the other one, when using such small amperage, provided, of course, it is properly handled. I was lucky enough to secure the generator which just suited me. It is a shunt wound bi-polar machine, wound for 60 volts. It delivers 8.3 amperes. I found that my automobile engine ran nicely at 500 R. P. M. The fly-wheel is 16 inches in diameter and I had an 8-inch flange pulley mounted on the shaft immediately above the fly-wheel. This shaft connected, through the dash board, directly to the armature shaft of the dynamo, with a bearing on each side of the flange pulley. The dynamo I bolted to the floor immediately in front of the driver's seat, just to the right of the steering wheel. The pulley counter-shaft I extended out almost to the radiator in front, and to the end of it attached a fan to keep the water system cool. I coupled the armature shaft to the counter-shaft in such a manner that it could be quickly disconnected when I used the auto, which does away with any taking off or putting on of the belt. At first I used the regular 110 volt, 15 ampere rheostat and ⅜ cored carbons. I got a good picture 8 feet wide. I then experimented and cut out the resistance by laying a screw-driver across the binding posts on the rheostat. The light was excellent and after numerous experiments I found it did not hurt the generator to eliminate the rheostat altogether. I found the engine ran about as well as if it had a governor. This I attribute to the wide difference between the power of the engine and the power consumed by the lamp. The engine is about 20 H. P. It is a 2 cycle opposed Davis engine. I keep track of my voltage by means of a pilot lamp. I start the engine, get it running at such speed that the pilot lamp is very white. I then start the arc and the engine picks up the load and slows down just enough to bring the pilot lamp to ordinary candle power. The engine will run at this speed for hours without overheating. Of course I am very careful about handling the arc, particularly not to get the carbons too close together. I do not believe it would be easy to burn out a shunt wound generator. Experiments have shown that when I freeze my carbons the pilot lamp goes out, proof positive that the voltage drops when the carbons are brought together. As I gradually draw them apart again the pilot lamp will brighten up and the engine slows down a trifle, showing that the field saturation is greater, and that more amperage is flowing. Am I right? I intend to get hold of an ammeter and volt-meter and settle that question for myself.

"I hope this description will prove of interest and aid some of your readers. I shall be around the vicinity of Fresno all winter, as there are about 60 towns around here that are 'just my size,' and I and my little dynamo know how to get their coin. If you want any more of my stuff for the Department, let me know."

Well, neighbor Coleman, I had a good laugh when I read your letter. That pilot lamp volt-meter, and screwdriver-across-the-terminal sounded so much like the old days when the operator was expected to put on a show with a hand saw and a monkey-wrench (and usually he delivered the goods too), that it was amusing. Friend Coleman sent a sketch of the dynamo connections, but it would be somewhat difficult to re-draw, and the description is so excellent that I think its reproduction is hardly necessary. One thing that struck me particularly is the fact that you are able to project a picture at all with a dynamo of a little more than 8 amperes capacity, using 15 ampere, 110 volt rheostat in series; the voltage being only 60. What you get out of that combination I am free to say, I don't know, but I should not think it would be very much, and, certainly, if you get a good 8 foot picture, using the full capacity of that dynamo, you are performing a stunt I would not have believed possible. I certainly would like to see that outfit and its results on the curtain. We shall be glad to hear from you at any time you have equally interesting matter to send in. The voltage of a shunt wound generator drops when there is heavy overload, as is the case with your dynamo when you freeze the carbons.

FEW TROUBLES.—Mr. E. H. Grove, Bridgeport, Ill., writes: "I am very much interested in the Projection Department, and will contribute a few lines myself. Am using a Power's No. 6, with Ft. Wayne Compensarc, 110 volt, 60 cycle current, with a 10 foot picture at 80 feet; get a splendid light. Have had my troubles, as I guess have all the other men. My experience has been that, if one is careful, to have everything in good condition before opening time, the troubles will be few. I had considerable difficulty with my lower loop, but found the idlers at the bottom of the apron were not in line with the sprockets, and that the spring on the lower bracket was weak. Just a few moments' work fixed that, and I haven't lost a loop in six weeks. The proprietor of the Bijou, where I am operating, is an excellent man to work for. I have only to make known what is needed in the operating room, and the supplies are forthcoming as soon as they can be procured. Clyde Martin was here playing the pictures about 10 days ago. I showed him around the oil field and he obtained his first sight of an oil well in process of drilling."

There is a lot in what you say, brother Grove. If operators would spend a little more time in the study of their business; look over their machine carefully every day, and have everything in proper shape, they would not experience so many difficulties. If they would, when some trouble comes up that they don't quite understand, examine the part that seems to be giving the trouble carefully—get right down and study it—they would very frequently be able to locate and remedy the trouble, as you did in the case of the loop losing.

HERE'S AN IDEA.—Michigan (I won't give the brother's name or the town), writes: "I submit sketch of motor-generator set, such as is used in factories, where, instead of the motor, a steam engine and belt is used to run the generator; small lighting plants the same. We will say the dynamo is generating 2,000 volts, the motor consuming 500 volts. It is plain to be seen you cannot get any "juice" into the motor from the dynamo, without first starting the motor. Line No. 1, in the sketch, is the one used for starting the motor. Now why would it not be preferable to insert line as shown, leading from switch No. 2, and, after motor-generator set is at full speed, pull switch No. 1 and quickly close switch No. 2. By doing this you would make the dynamo furnish the current, to run itself, also furnish lights for the circuit, the same as if the motor had a separate line furnishing the power."

My dear man, what are you trying to do—dope out a perpetual motion scheme? I have printed the above part of your letter, rather with the idea of affording our readers amusement, than anything else. It isn't necessary to go into any extended argument or explanation. The whole thing is too absurd. If your scheme would work and the dynamo would run itself, at the same time supplying light and power for the circuit, certainly it would be fine. The only trouble is, my boy, that if the dynamo is pulling a load of say 40 horse power, it takes about 40 motor horse power, plus something like 40% for loss, to pull it. A mere trifle, true, but somewhat fatal to your scheme.

TOO INDEFINITE.—Mr. O. R. Van Dyke, Evansville, Ind., writes: "I am informed that you are familiar with the influence that politics have over the electrical inspection departments of some of the largest cities in this country. Our group of 8 to 12 companies, engaged in the flour mill and grain elevator fire insurance business, and controlling 90% of the desirable business of that class in this country, are experiencing an enormous increase in fire losses due to defective electrical installation. Personally, I have been at work almost a year making detailed and minute inspections, and gathering data from various electrical engineers and local inspection departments, and in order to report to our field men, of whom I am one of about fifty, the conditions and remedies. Whatever information you could give me would be appreciated. I would prefer to cite my authority, of course."

While I feel complimented at being consulted by Mr. Van Dyke, at the same time I hardly feel competent to offer advice; moreover, the letter is too indefinite. I do not exactly understand what it is the gentleman desires. I certainly am familiar with the influence politics has over departments of city governments, but do not quite catch the connection between that part of the letter and the rest. Certainly the electrical installation in flour mills and grain elevators should be of the very best, since by reason of the large quantities of very fine and highly inflammable dust, the fire danger is very large.

NAMES WANTED.—Stanwood, Wash., sends in an unsigned letter asking for a list of the towns spoken of by Mr. Orme in the issue of December 25th. The list was published in the last issue of the Department.

AN INVITATION.—From Chattanooga, Tenn., comes the following: "Mr. F. H. Richardson, 'The Operators' Friend,' MOVING PICTURE WORLD, New York City. Dear Sir and Brother: Chattanooga M. P. Machine Operators' Union No. 8, I. A. T. S. E., requests the honor of your presence at a Dutch lunch and smoker, Sunday evening, December 31, 10 o'clock.

(R.S.V.P.) Julian C. Harkins, Recording Sec'y.

I. M. A. Hall, W. S. Brown, R. H. Johnson, Elbert Lowry, committee."

I appreciate the honor of the invitation, and particularly the fact that the brothers have seen fit to address me as the "Operators' Friend," a thing I have always tried to be. There is just one thing that keeps me from attending that lunch, viz: I have no snow shoes and if I had a pair there isn't any snow. You will therefore readily see the difficulty with which I am confronted, and excuse my absence. I trust, however, that the Goddess of Pleasure will preside at the banquet; and I will be with you in the spirit, if not in person.

MORE FOOLISHNESS.—Akron, Ohio, writes: "The writer would like to hear from you regarding the attached clipping. It came from an Akron newspaper dated December 27."

The clipping in question is a foreign news item, in which it is claimed the Berlin Chemical Society has just announced the successful termination of experiments looking to the production of non-combustible moving picture films. It winds up by saying "the new film is expected to do away with the danger of panics in moving picture theaters, most of which are due to the explosion of films."

So far as the experiments of the Berlin Chemical Society are concerned, I know nothing of them. We will all welcome the thoroughly non-combustible moving picture film free from the faults found in those now on the market. As to the "film explosion" matter, you might as well try to choke a hungry bull dog loose from a piece of juicy steak, as to pry the average newspaper reporter from the "explosion" idea. I have so often and so recently called attention to the idiocy of such newspaper statements, that I feel further remarks concerning it at the present time would be a waste of space.

LARGE CARBONS.—Salem, W. Va., asks where he can obtain ¾ solid carbons, also what companies manufacture that dimension of carbon. Wants to know if there is an I. A. T. S. E. Union in St. Louis, Mo.

You can obtain ¾ carbons from L. E. Frorup & Co., Importers, 232 Greenwich Street, New York City. Also from Hugo Reisinger, 11 Broadway, New York City. ¾ carbons are made, I presume, by all carbon manufacturers. Yes, there is an I. A. T. S. E. Union in St. Louis, also an I. A. T. S. E. Union of Moving Picture Operators.

LIGHT TROUBLE.—Canton, Ohio, writes: "Regarding my letter and your answer in December 30 issue, I am using 110 volt D.C. through rheostat. Coils are made of black iron wire, No. 10, about 7 pounds being used. I have used the following combinations in the condenser. 6½ and 7½; two 7½'s; 7½ and 8½; two 8½'s and a 6½ and 8½, but get no change for the better. The two 7½'s and one 7 and one 8½ give about the same effect and the best results of any of them, though nothing to brag of. The wires from the main switch-board to the machine are No. 6. From street mains to switch-board the wires are No. 00. I have showed my trouble to several of the boys but none have ever seen anything at all like it. I will now try to explain the matter a little more in detail, though I know you are in poor position to deal with it, being 500 or 600 miles away. The spot shows as per Fig. 3.

"The light on the screen shows light brown clear across, about ¼ of the way down. The bottom is the same color and the curtain appears as Fig. 1. I noticed that the rays of light leaving the cone appear as per Fig. 2. Also noticed in my lenses that the image from the aperture appears right side up, the same as it is on the screen. I used Gundlach half size projection lenses, Columbia and Electra carbons; about 40 amperes of current; the arc spits and sputters for about one-half a minute after I start it. Picture is 9 x 12 at 105 feet. Edison machine with Power's lamp and lamp house."

The spot as shown appears normal and I can see no reason for the trouble. I have projected some most excellent ten-foot pictures, at 110 feet, which would mean a considerably longer focal length objective than you have, with ¼ size lens, using two 7½ inch condensers. The cone of white light as per Fig. 2 is nothing unusual. I have noticed it many times. Are you sure the light is not striking the cone of the lamphouse? I hardly think this could account for the trouble, however. The spitting of the arc when you first strike it is not at all unusual, and, from what you say, I take it the arc soon settles down to quiet burning. The image in the lens is merely a reflection from the polished surface of the glass.

MOTOR DRIVE.—Calif. (name of town suppressed), writer: "There has been much speculation here as to the meaning of the initials C. G. P. C. Kindly enlighten us. In the Selig pictures 'The Convert of San Clemente' there is a sub-title, 'In a vision the Padre beheld the fate of the faithful,' or something like that. Will you kindly explain how these visions are produced. Enclosed you will find a sketch of a motor drive I am using. Have a self-starting motor with speed of about 1,800 R. P. M. The motor shaft carries a small cone pulley. Immediately above this is a large sewing machine pulley. On the same shaft is a 3-inch wheel which drives an 8-inch pulley on the machine. The speed of the machine is about 60, where before it was something like 80. At its present speed it will not keep the automatic shutter up. Can you suggest any remedy for this? The machine is a Power's No. 5. I have been obliged to dispense with the shutter, but would rather use it for various reasons."

As to the initials, they stand for Compagnie Générale des Phonographes et Cinematographes, one of the oldest motion picture companies in the world. See page 138, January 13 issue. In order to answer your second question, concerning the film, I would have to go to some exchange and have the same run off, which lack of time would prevent my doing. It is very likely that the illusion is a double exposure. To give an intelligent explanation of how these things are done would require space equal to the entire Department—and then some. As to the motor drive. From what you say, I take it you have no means of regulating the speed. This is very bad, indeed, since it obliges you to pound right along through the film at one rate of speed, regardless of the action of the scenes being portrayed. You cannot do this and produce really fine projection. Some scenes should be run as low as 40 to the minute, to get the best effect, whereas others are at their best at the much higher speed; some, though very few, as fast as 80. I would suggest you run a slack belt from the small pulley to the machine pulley, controlling same with an idler attached to the machine board in such a manner that it can be set and locked in any position. This would enable you to govern the speed of the machine at will, up to the limit of the motor. If your automatic shutter will not stay up at a speed of 60, then, assuming it to be a "type B" shutter, either the friction shoes—625, plate 7, page 37, January 6 issue—are worn too much, or else the springs—741, page 7—are too stiff. It may be that the trouble is due to the use of an oil which is too thin. I would refer you to instruction 39, page 38, January 6 issue. The type B, No. 5 shutter, and the shutter on the No. 6 are identical.

EDITOR CHALLENGED.—Columbus, Ohio, writes, taking the editor to task because he did not fully answer a New York operator in a recent issue of the Department. Asks me if I don't think I did wrong. Says: "We are all seeking information. If a man came to me I would give him the information he asked. Some people have all the data and knowledge at command, some haven't. If it were not for the craft asking questions, how long do you think your exalted position would last? I remember the time when your yourself showed ignorance regarding a matter pertaining to resistance. I wrote you a letter explaining the matter to you to let you down easy. I should imagine there are just as good operators outside of 'Frisco as there are in that city. In Columbus, we have some nearly perfect men, though I am not one of them. Also some time back you advised an official of the Union at Philadelphia to go slow in letting green men into the Union. I have turned the crank for some of the best people in the United States, but still feel that I have lots to learn, and if any man asks me a civil question, no matter how foolish it may sound to me, he gets a civil answer. The manager says I keep a poor light the night the Moving Picture World comes. Can you guess the reason why?"

I have given the brother's letter space, almost in it's entirety, mainly for the reason that it shows to what a great extent some men will fail in grasping an idea. I feel that this letter deserves a somewhat extended answer. In the first place I might say to the brother, that if the craft did not ask questions, my "exalted" position would be just the same as it now is, because I could fill this department, and lots more space besides, every week without a single question being asked. In the second place I think the record of the past two years will abundantly prove that I have never failed to answer the most foolish question civily. In the third place, I have doubtless been wrong on some things, and am liable to be so again in the future, though I am filled with gratitude toward the brother for "letting me down easy." I make no pretence of being perfect and do not ever expect to be. Nevertheless, my books and the Department will show that out of the hundreds upon hundreds of questions asked, covering almost every conceivable subject relating to projection, I have not often been proven wrong. And now to get down to the meat of this little matter, I answered the New York man the way I did because a man who would undertake to do a somewhat complicated job of wiring, with practically no knowledge whatever of electricity, is a dangerous man, and a man who has absolutely no business in the operating room. I have since discovered that he is not a licensed operator. That man might have caused a fire and panic, and imperiled the lives of many people, besides the danger of burning the house down, and possibly the destruction of adjoining property. There was, not so very long ago, a time when ignorance in the operating room might be condoned. There is now, however, no excuse whatever for a man who is not supplied with at least a small fund of knowledge. I am willing, at any time, to help any operator who evinces a disposition to learn. I am, however, not willing to encourage a man, like the one in question, who has no knowledge whatever, yet undertakes to do things involving danger to both life and property. Such a man should be kept out of the operating room entirely, or else be made to serve an apprenticeship. I want to see the standard of remuneration for operators raised. If we continue to encourage the admission of men of inferior knowledge and ability into operators' unions, how is this to be accomplished? I think, my friend, that you wrote that letter without giving the matter due thought and consideration and I believe your view will not be shared by any large number of the readers of this Department. I would suggest that not even the arrival of the Moving Picture World should cause you to neglect your projection, and I do not really believe you do neglect it.

LIGHT AND MACHINE TROUBLE.—Linton, Ind., writes: "I, like other operators, have my troubles. I have been running on 110 volt D.C., and obtained perfect results. Recently a transformer has been installed, and am now running on 110 volt A.C. I am now constantly having trouble with my light. Am operating an Edison Type B machine with rheostat. I have a 62-foot throw and a 12-foot picture. I have a ghost in the center when I clear the corners, and when I clear the ghost the corners are dark. I am using, on both upper and lower, cored Bio-Electra ⅝ carbons. I sometimes think that the trouble is in the setting of the carbons because often the craters grow ragged and the spot double. I then stop, reset carbons, and file down smooth, but find that it doesn't help much. Often, however, the carbons burn even and give a good, clear light; but the ghost does not leave. Therefore, I thought that the trouble did not lie in the carbons. I have tried moving the lamphouse backward and forward, but it is of no avail; the ghost remains. I find I have a very clear light when the spot is small, but the corners are dark. It certainly has got me stumped. 'It never rains, but pours.' Troubles come all at once. Of late my machine has been stopping on me. The turning gradually gets harder until I am compelled to stop. However, after tinkering with it a while, and drowning it with oil, it is usually right for a while, then it stops again. I carefully took the machine apart and washed all parts in gasoline. I find that when it runs hard, a peculiar grating sound is heard. This I cannot account for."

You have about a 5-inch E. F. lens. I am inclined to think you are using condensers of too short focal length. Try two 7½ condensing lenses. I would suggest you get a copy of the Hand-Book, which fully explains carbon setting, etc. It is possible you have your lamp set at too heavy an angle and that the ghost is a shadow of the lower carbon tip; but I can only guess at this as you have not told me how you set your carbons and lamp. I think you will find the trouble is in the condensers. As to the machine trouble, it is possible you have your star set up too tight across the geneva. Under these conditions, while the machine may run free when it is cold, the expansion of the parts under friction, and some heat from the light also, may cause the star and cam to bind. If this is not the case then when the machine binds up, stop and try all the gears with your fingers. You will find there will be a little lost motion—enough to allow them to rock slightly. If any gear is tight, examine and see if the difficulty does not lie there, also try the shutter spindle, if you have an outside shutter. Use a good grade of light dynamo oil on your machine. It is possible you are using poor oil and that that is the cause of your difficulty.

CURTAIN COATING.—Langdon, N. D., writes describing a curtain coating he has invented and asks if it would pay to put it on the market.

This is a hard question to answer. Doubtless if the preparation is good it would find ready sale, provided the selling methods were well considered, adequate and energetic. You cannot, however, sell a thing, to any extent, by spasmodic efforts, no matter how excellent the article. If the sales are to be accomplished by advertisement, the advertising must be persistent and may not pay for itself immediately. If you undertake to sell through correspondence you must expect to write a man anywhere from two to half a dozen letters to effect a sale, by use of what is known as the "follow up system." Many people, who have a really good article for which there would be ready market, put in a big advertisement one week and then sit back and await results. The results are seldom satisfactory. A man seldom buys the first time he looks at an advertisement, unless it is something he is in urgent need of; but by the time he has seen the advertisement several times he becomes interested, probably writes and inquires, and possibly a sale is effected. I would not advise Langdon to market his product unless he is prepared to go at the matter forcibly and with intent to compel success.

LENSES.—Fort Scott, Kan., writes: "I have a throw of 76 feet from lens to curtain. Picture .14 feet. Am now using a collar between the lens and front plate. This collar sets the lens out 1½ inches from the front plate. In other words, the collar is 1½ inches long, not including the threads. I now wish to move my machine back 7 feet. Can I use a longer collar and get the same size picture, without injuring the picture? If so, how long should the collar be?

You cannot. The distance of the lenses from the film is determined absolutely by the focal length of the lens and has nothing to do with the size of the picture. If you set your machine back 7 feet, you will get a larger picture. The size of the picture with that lens increases 7-38 of a foot (14 ÷ 76) to each foot of throw. Seven feet, therefore, would mean an increase in width of 7-38 × 7 = 1 11-38 feet. If you want to move your machine back and retain the present size of your picture you will have to get a lens of slightly longer focal length.

MACHINE KNOCKS.—Sparta, Wis., writes: "Have a Power's No. 6 and would like to know why it is that, when the framing carriage is in the middle of its travel, something seems to be striking some part of the mechanism. Have looked it over and am sure there is nothing loose."

When a Power's No. 6 framing carriage is in the center of its travel the train of gears on the right hand side—No. 680, plate 3; No. 678, plate 7 and 677, plate 7, page 36 and 37, January 6th issue—are in line with each other and are meshed considerably tighter than when the carriage is clear up or clear down. I think very likely you will find that some small bit of metal or other hard substance has dropped into the space between two of the cogs of one of the gears, and produces the knocking sound every time a gear revolves and the cog meshes with its mate. I cannot offer you further advice without knowing how often this sound occurs to each turn of the crank.

CHATTANOOGA LOCAL PROSPERS.—Mr. Elbert Lowry, Publicity Agent L. U. No. 8, I. A. T. S. E. (Auxiliary Branch), writes: "Just a few lines to let you know the Southland is still on the map and active in the projection field. Chattanooga local was organized October 17 1910, and has had phenomenal success. It now contains 100% of the operators of this city. The following officers have been elected for 1912: President, J. C. Sands; Financial Secretary and Treasurer, Edwin Healy; Recording Secretary, J. C. Harkins; Business Agent., S. F. Roberts; Sergeant-at-Arms, F. S. Howill; Delegate, D. C. Sands; Trustees, E. Lowry, G. D. Overend, R. G. Stute. Elbert Lowry was appointed Publicity Agent, with instructions to see to it that L. U. No. 8 gets its share of printer's ink.

"Sunday evening, December 31, was the occasion of our first blow-out. Covers were laid for thirty-one. Mr. Jno. O'Brien, Secretary Tennessee Federation of Labor, made the principal address of the evening. He complimented the operators highly on what they have accomplished in this city, and remarked that if we were as successful in 1912 as during the past year we might congratulate ourselves as being the youngest and strongest union in the city. On January 1, 1911, we secured an increase of 35% in salaries and followed that with an increase of 17% for 1912. We use three men to each theater, two of them working nine hours per day, and the third one eight hours. Each house has two machines. There is no Sunday work. The managers of this city give their operators the very best equipment obtainable. All theaters use the Mercury Arc Rectifier. I might add that we have real operating rooms in which a wilted collar, even in summer, is rare. Before I forget, let me say that every Monday morning brings the latest copy of the Moving Picture World into every operating room in Chattanooga. In closing, let me assure you of the best wishes of Chattanooga Local Union No. 8, M. P. M. Operators, for the Projection Department and its Editor."

I must congratulate the Chattanooga Local on the splendid showing made. I appreciate the good will expressed for the Department, its Editor and for the paper in general. And now, gentlemen and Brothers, I trust and believe that, in return for the splendid improvement in salaries, you have spared no effort to perfect your own work. High salaries mean high grade work. The man who receives a salary of $50,000 per year must earn that salary. You may think he cannot earn so large a sum but nevertheless he does earn it or he soon gets fired. He is a fifty thousand dollar man for the very simple reason that he IS able to return to his employers MORE than that sum in profits. Understand me, gentlemen, I am by no manner of means insinuating that the members of L. U. No. 8 are not earning all they get. I am simply using your letter to drive home a point and that point is that as salaries go up, efficiency must travel the upward path also. If the manager pays $15 per week he cannot and does not expect anything very startling in the way of excellence. If, however, he is paying $30 to $40 per week he expects R-E-S-U-L-T-S on the screen. He has the right to expect them. Therefore unions ought to use every endeavor to improve the knowledge of their own members. The harder operators study projection and things pertaining thereto, the sooner they will be in a position to demand increased salaries as a matter of right, rather than might. Chattanooga will, I am sure, understand that I am not taking a "poke" at them but only pointing a moral for the benefit of all.

NEW YORK OPERATORS' BALL.—On the night of January 26th the members of Auxiliary Local Union No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., will trip the light fantastic at Tammany Hall. Preparations are being made for one huge good time. Many labor leaders of the city have expressed their intention of participating and it is expected that there will be a large crowd of operators and their friends. An enjoyable time will certainly be had. Search lights will be placed on top of the building to light the street and inside will be flood and spot lights galore. Mayor Gaynor has not yet expressed intention of attending, but he will certainly miss something if he doesn't come. Mr. John Rickard is chairman of the ball committee.

You are at liberty to search me, St. Louis. I wasn't there. Anyhow, I refuse to be interviewed and firmly believe you ought to be ashamed of yourself.

EXHIBITORS' ADVERTISING AND SPECIALTY CO.

Moving to Larger Quarters.

The Exhibitors' Advertising and Specialty Co., of New York City (A. D. Jacobs, president and general manager; Ben Title, secretary and treasurer) now located at 105 East 14th Street, have leased the first and second floors at 30 Union Square for a term of years, where they intend removing on or about February 1st.

Mr. Jacobs ascribes the rapid growth and success of their business to the fact that as practical exhibitors they have always studied the wants of the exhibitor and have gradually educated him to use a much finer, neater and more theatrical-looking lobby display, by the use of pictorial posters and first-class show printing of various kinds, to take the place of the amateurish and untidy looking sign painting that was in vogue two years ago.

Exhibitors everywhere are invited to call at the new offices and showrooms of this concern, where they will find the largest and most complete stock and display of advertising matter and other specialties for the moving picture theater in the United States.

MAMMOTH PHOTOS OF THE MAMMOTH NESTOR FILM COMPANY.

David Horsley, the well-known manufacturer of Nestor Films, has sent us a huge photograph of the entire Nestor Company, now located at Hollwood, California, and numbering nearly one hundred and fifty people. The photograph itself measures thirty-five inches across and ten inches in height. It is splendidly posed and artistically finished.

Mr. Horsley intends supplying this mammoth and attractive lobby display to bona fide exhibitors for the nominal price of fifty cents. Exhibitors desirous of acquiring this big and beautiful photograph of the Nestor Film Co. should promptly write to David Horsley, Bayonne, N. J.

SPLENDID ECLAIR PICTURES.

In keeping with the early predictions that pictures of unusual character would emanate from the new Eclair studios, there are a number of such subjects scheduled for early release by that concern of picture makers that will average up with the very best of the American product. Upon the occasion of a recent visit to the Eclair plant several of these subjects were exhibited for the benefit of the World representative. Of two of these special mention should be made. They are entitled "Mamie Bolton" and "Her Inheritance."

"Mamie Bolton" is a high-class comedy, based upon a woman's misunderstanding of the stock market and a husband's desire to speculate. Madison, the speculator, has lost much of his fortune by unwise stock investments. He is about to be married and, while his fiancée remains true to him, she makes him promise not to speculate. But the gambler's spirit is deeply ingrained in the young man and, before long, he is in the game deeper than ever. The stock he has bought is that of the "Mamie Bolton" mine, which he gets at a very low price for a rise. One evening while at home deeply engrossed in the newspaper reports of the market to the great disgust of his pretty wife, Madison receives a message from his broker requesting him to "Come down quickly; that Mamie Bolton had been hard hit and there are indications of a bear attack." He proceeds to answer the call, leaving his wife in tears. After he is gone she reads the message and interprets it to mean that he is paying attention to a woman named Mamie Bolton.

Turning at once to her father and mother the young wife stirs up all kinds of trouble for the supposed recreant husband. In the meantime the stock of the "Mamie Bolton" mine has gone sky-rocketing and shares that Madison bought at 35 are now quoted at 96 and he has cleaned up a fortune. With his broker friend he starts for home and meets an irate father-in-law on the way, who starts to beat him up. He escapes to fall into the clutches of his wife and mother-in-law at the door, who refuse to admit him. He climbs into the house and is set upon by the same outraged women, who drags him out again to meet the father-in-law on the veranda.

At this point the broker friend happens along and explanations ensue which change the complexion of things materially, and we see the young speculator restored to favor after a rather strenuous experience.

"Her Inheritance" is a farce of the uproarious kind. It concerns a maiden lady of questionable beauty, who has been left a legacy upon condition that she get married. Her efforts to secure a man are highly amusing and give rise to a number of ludicrous incidents, before she is finally and securely hitched.

Good photography characterizes both these subjects, and their appearances will be appreciated by all users of Independent pictures.

AMERICAN FACTORY READY FOR OCCUPANCY.

Despite the pessimistic beliefs to the contrary, the new $50,000 factory of the American Film Mfg. Co., Chicago, is now ready for occupancy. The structure was promised by architect and builder for January 15 and the former managed to precede the cold weather by a few days.

It is a thoroughly modern property, no expense being spared in providing all those facilities which make for more efficiency and better work.

The first actual work will be started in a few days, when the present factory quarters will be vacated.

The property is located at Evanston and Devon avenues, Chicago, close to Lake Michigan, where clear air and a maximum of sunshine are assured.

The realty secured was purchased from Edward Hines, famous lumber magnate, at an extraordinarily high price for property. This is due to the fact that the neighborhood adjacent to the plant is one of the best in Chicago for residence purposes and has advanced in value more rapidly than any other. It is believed by President Hutchinson that the realty itself is an excellent investment.

"LITTLEST REBEL" A POWERS STAR.

Theater goers of New York are still flocking to the Liberty Theater, where William and Dustin Farnum are enjoying a long run. But there is no question among those who have seen their play, "The Littlest Rebel," as to who the real star is; for a little girl, in the title role, does all the real emotional work.

Miss Juliet Shelby.

Little Juliet Shelby, ten years old, is the star. For four long acts this little actress plays on the heart strings of metropolitan audiences. This same little wonder will be seen by picture lovers in a stirring domestic Powers picture play entitled "The Nurse." It will be released on Saturday, January 27th.

BRIENT WITH F. & E. FILM CO.

E. H. Brient, for several years connected with the office of Lieber & Co., and the General Film Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., resigned his position with that company on January 1st to take the management of the Indianapolis office of the Feature and Educational Film Co. The new offices are located at 16 West Market Street.

"HER LITTLE POET" (Essanay).

There is a novel and unique plot to the Essanay's comedy photoplay released Friday, January 9th, "Her Little Poet." It is a character comedy which is excellently cast and consequently excellently played. It has the proper amount of heart interest, it moves along with spirit and snap which is characteristic of Essanay comedies, and develops numberless laughable situations.

Grace and Peter are in love, but Grace's parents refuse their consent to marriage and absolutely refuse to meet Peter. Peter wails out his sorrows in tearful verses, but Grace, who is more prosaic, suggests that they elope.

This plan is carried out in the old romantic way, that is, via the ladder from Grace's room, and the waiting automobile whisks them away.

Scene from "Her Little Poet" (Essanay).

The old people are properly enraged at the elopement and vow that they will never receive their daughter back into their home again.

A few years go by and with their passing comes hard times. The market for poetry is not what it was in honeymoon days and Peter returns from having made the rounds of the various editors with a bundle of unsold manuscripts under his arm. They are down to their last few dollars and Peter is in despair. Grace, however, who is the brains of the establishment, soon devises a scheme. They must write Popper and Mommer immediately, tell them of their sore straits and asks to be taken back. The letter is duly written and dispatched.

It is several days before they receive the answer, which fills them both with despair. It explains that while the daughter is welcome to return home and to bring any children she may have they will not shelter the husband.

The problem is soon worked out by the ingenious Grace, who, keeping Peter in ignorance of her plan, assures him, however, that he will be given a home under the parental roof.

It is with welcome arms that the old people open the door of their home to her son, Peter. Peter is rather a large boy for seven years old, but nevertheless he wins the old people's heart. He is presented with a drum, numerous other toys, and is told to have a good time, until he becomes so noisy that he is sent out of the room.

Peter, for it is Grace's husband, now seeks solace in a pipe, when "Grandpa" enters, finds the boy indulging in this evil pastime, and then calling his mother, orders her to take him upstairs. The old man follows a moment later with a slipper and is about to administer the much-needed chastisement when Grace is forced to tell the truth.

In the end Peter and Grace are forgiven, Peter swears off poetry, obtains a position with his father-in-law, and "they live happily ever after."

"DODGING THE SHERIFF" (Melies).

Melies Western subjects are to be commended for their lack of cold-blooded shooting and general violence. They may be pardoned, therefore, for occasionally depicting a character being shot in the foot; especially if he happens to be an uncouth bartender with a mean disposition. Aside from this one incident, "Dodging the Sheriff" is tame as compared with the usual reformer's idea of what constitutes a "Western" drama. It borders upon comedy, ends happily and is entertaining throughout.

A young English aristocrat is disowned by his gouty old father for refusing to marry the old gentleman's ward. The son felt that he should be allowed to see the world before undertaking matrimony, and departs for America to earn his living. We next observe him arriving at a California ranch town where he intends to try his luck. On the same coach is a winsome new schoolmarm whose destination is the same. California girls are difficult for a young Englishman to resist, or any other class of men for that matter, as we soon discover by the attentions that are paid her at the country schoolhouse by the young Englishman and the local sheriff, who proves to be an amicable rival.

Meanwhile the Englishman has proven himself to be a good fellow and gets on well with the cowboys. One night at the tavern somebody shot the bartender in the foot, and all hands fled, including the tenderfoot, supposing that the rumseller had been killed. In this way they became fugitives from justice without any great cause. Shortly afterward an attorney arrives from England in search of the tenderfoot to inform him that he is heir to his deceased father's property. When the young man found out that he was being sought he made stenuous efforts to escape, but was caught playing 'possum by the schoolmarm herself. She collected the reward that the lawyer had offered for him, and the young man was much surprised to know that he had been running away from a good thing. He got the fortune surely enough, but he did not get the schoolmarm because his father's ward had come from England and looked better to him. For that the sheriff was grateful, as it gave him an opportunity to win the pretty schoolteacher, which he did.

"THE FIRST VIOLIN" (Vitagraph).

This is a "one man" picture in which the leading character is portrayed in a very able manner by Mr. Van Dyke Brooke. It is good to look at, although it is a trifle sad in its general idea. But that is easily compensated for by Mr. Brooke's rare technique, which is displayed in this picture to the limit.

The story is along the lines of the Music Master: that of an old theater musician who found a waif and cared for it until the Children's Society agents came to claim it. The old man and his companions had become attached to the child and the portrayal of the grief of the old musician in parting with the child constitutes the theme, which is carried out in a masterful manner. The story does not descend into any mawkishness. Suffice it to say that it is Van Dyke Brooke at his best. A picture of tender pathos that is well worth while.

M. ARNAUD ARRIVES.

M. Arnaud, for several years director in chief for the Gaumont Company, of Paris, arrived in New York on January 6 and has assumed his duties as principal director of the American Eclair studios at Fort Lee, N. J. M. Arnaud is an interesting personage and, though unfamiliar with American customs and manners as yet, he promises to be a quick student and a man who will readily adapt himself to new conditions. It is not unlikely that the American Eclair product will respond to his artistic touch and wide technical knowledge of the business.

"THE WORTH OF A MAN" (Imp).

A young surgeon, who is a hunchback, has a series of unpleasant experiences at his university. He is despised for his deformity and even the girl of his heart is kept from him on that account. The mental anguish he endures does not, however, abate his ardor in his profession. He secures a hospital appointment and devotes himself with all his earnestness to his work.

Chance brings the girl he loves to the hospital as a patient to undergo an operation which it is his duty to perform. He is almost through his doubly delicate task when the hospital takes fire. His assistants take to flight, but Arthur Severn sticks to his post, completing the operation in the almost suffocating smoke and menacing flames.

Scene from "The Worth of a Man" (Imp).

Cheating death he escapes, with his insensible patient, to a place of safety, but is himself badly burned as a reward for his heroism.

By proving his worth as a man he also proves his worth as a lover and in the end is rewarded with the hand of the girl whose life he had twice saved.

Graphic scenes of university and hospital life are shown in this fine human picture. Harry Pollard enacts the part of the young surgeon with singular ability and Margarita Fischer, as the heroine, has a very congenial role.

Photographically and dramatically this picture takes high rank amongst "Imp" dramas and will be released January 25.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS CALL FOR "SANTA CATALINA" FILM.

The American Film Mfg. Co. is still hearing the echo of its remarkable release of December 14, entitled "Santa Catalina, Magic Isle of the Pacific." This film created a considerable furore, not only in motion picture circles but among scientists, men and students, generally. Nearly one hundred feet of the picture was taken up with the only views ever made of the famous submarine gardens of the Pacific Ocean. Sea-weeds of numerous varieties, many different kinds of fish, kelp and an octopus were shown.

The fact that these pictures are the only ones of their kind in existence has made them valuable acquisitions to the cause of science and education generally, and the American is now besieged with requests from public school principals and other educational bodies asking where the film can be obtained for lecture purposes in assemblies and school-rooms. The American is to be congratulated on its find in producing this film as the principal dailies in America, through the Associated Press and kindred news bodies, gave much valuable publicity to the picture.

THE WISCONSIN SEATING COMPANY.

Notice of the change in the name of the Wisconsin Lumber and Veneer Company to the Wisconsin Seating Company and the transfer of that business from Port Washington, Wis., to New London, Wis., is announced by the new firm. "Everything in Theater Seating" is the best word this concern has to say to the theater manager. The manufacturing facilities of the company have been enlarged by the erection of an up-to-the-minute plant at New London and it is now prepared to fill all orders.

"A SUMMER FLIRTATION" (Great Northern).

For a full-reel comedy subject we desire to commend the Great Northern picture entitled "A Summer Flirtation," about to be released. It is one of those clean, high-class comedies of which there should be more. Two young fellows on their vacation meet a particularly handsome girl at a summer resort, and both fall in love with her. She favors the taller and handsomer of the two, much to the annoyance of the other, who makes a desperate effort to keep in the running. Unfortunately for him, an elderly maiden lady takes a great notion to him and makes his life miserable. There are many amusing situations and laugh-provoking incidents before the unlucky lover is compelled to admit his defeat and drink a toast to the success of his rival.

Scene from "A Summer Flirtation" (Great Northern).

"A JUST VERDICT" (Lubin).

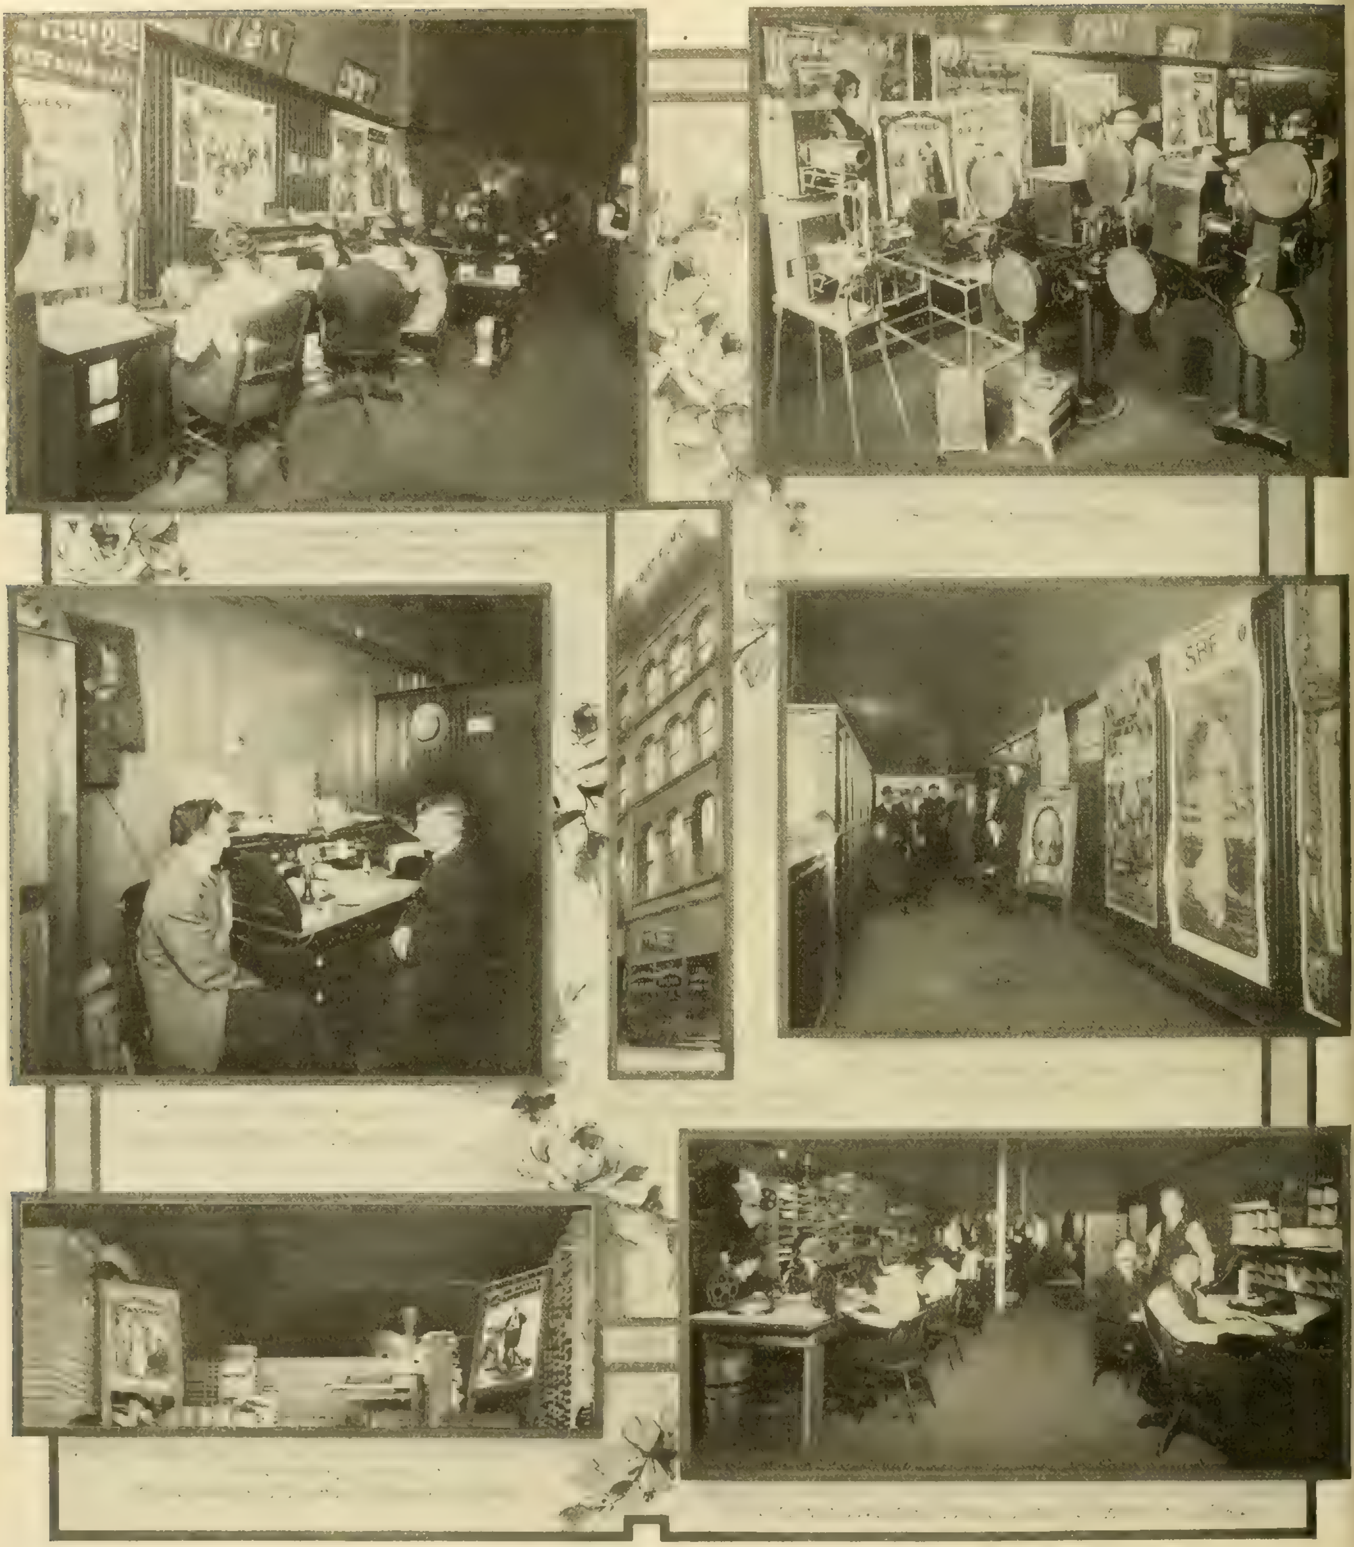
The Lubin Company will, on January 18th, release an unusually dramatic photoplay named "A Just Verdict." The story is as fully told as if played upon the stage and would in the hands of a good playwright make a melodrama of intense quality. Dorothy Ellis and Frank Dean are a lovely pair of sweethearts, but Dorothy's father does not favor the match. Dean is worthy but not rich enough to satisfy the banker's ambition. Moreover, he has set his mind on a match for his daughter that will help him in financial difficulties.

One day the lovers are amusing themselves at target practice. Ellis comes upon the scene and after a spirited quarrel orders Dean to leave the grounds. Dorothy pleads for her sweetheart, but it is of no avail and dejected Dean leaves, and in so doing forgets to carry away his revolver. Ellis picks it up and puts it in his pocket. A few hours later the banker receives a telegram informing him that in consequence of his reckless speculations the bank will be forced to close its doors on the morrow. Being unable to face the disgrace of the situation Ellis writes a letter to his daughter and leaving it on the table of his study shoots himself with Dean's revolver and which unfortunately bears the owner's monogram.

Another complication arises, a Mr. Warner, who is a somnambulist and walking in his sleep goes to the study and falls over the suicide's body; this awakens him and grasping the pistol he believes that he has killed his host in his sleep. Dazed and terrified he also picks up the letter and without reading puts it in the pocket of his dressing robe. The revolver being found Dean is arrested and placed on trial for murder, and Warner is on the jury and resolves to confess, but the chambermaid of the family finds the letter and rushes with it to her young mistress. Dorothy saddles a horse and gallops to the court house and is just in time to save Warner's confession and acquit her lover.

LUBIN COMPANY FOR SOUTH.

The Lubin comedy players, under the direction of A. D. Hotaling, has left for the South, making the first stop at Augusta, Ga., where they visit at the invitation of the Chamber of Commerce of that city. Some twenty players will be taken, including Miss Mae Hotely, Miss Helen Marten, Miss Elsie Glynn, Spottiswoode Aiken, George Reehm, William Louis and others. The company expects to be gone until the photographic weather in the vicinity of Philadelphia gets better.



Offices of the Anti-Trust Film Co., 28 West Lake Street, Chicago, Ill

The accompanying reproductions of the Anti-Trust Film Company's present quarters at 128 West Lake street, Chicago, shows the wonderful growth of this company in the past three years. On February 15, 1909, the Anti-Trust Film Company came into existence. It was. and is to-day, the only real Independent exchange, as all of the others were formerly connected with the Patents Company and have since discontinued their affiliation.

Three years ago the Anti-Trust Film Company commenced doing business in two rooms, located at 79 Clark street, containing about 500 square feet of floor space. Two men and one girl easily handled the business.

Those who remember the strenuous times and various hardships encountered by Independent exchanges three years ago, realize that to exist and grow was a task easier said than done.

By strictly living up to the policy originally outlined and most necessary in the film business, viz., a "square deal" to everybody, they were able to overcome all difficulties, and to-day located in their large and pretentious quarters at 128 West Lake street, occupying over 7,500 square feet of floor space, employing forty people, they are reaping the benefit of this business policy.

Mr. C. R. Plough, the General Manager, is very optimistic in his views of the film business, and too much credit cannot be given him for the most wonderful growth of this "square deal" exchange.

"FATHERS AND SONS" (Champion).

With a real story of strong human interest, the Champion Film Company have put over a very interesting picture entitled, "Fathers and Sons." The picture opens with one father and his son in a business office. The son is caught in the act of looting the cash box. Surprised and angered beyond expression, the father turns the erring boy over to the police. In another scene we are shown quite a different picture. A loving father is about to send his son to college and there is a pathetic parting from home surroundings as the son goes away to gain an education.

Shortly following these incidents the father who has sent his son to jail employs the father who has sent his son to college. The fathers are strangers to each other and the family affairs of each are unknown to the other. In course of time the boy at college comes home and there is an affectionate greeting at the office where his father is employed in the presence of the other father. As an outcome of this meeting, the father who has sent his son to jail is invited to dinner at the other more happy home and accepts. By chance the college boy meets the other and less fortunate fellow, who is now in dire circumstances. He takes him home and fixes him up for dinner. By this means the father and the erring son are brought together again. This scene in the picture is splendidly portrayed and is an intense climax to a well-developed plot. The Champion players are deserving of commendation for this evidence of ability and the Champion photography is up to its usual excellent quality.

"AVIATOR AND AUTOIST" (Champion).

As a sort of introduction to the Champion series of aviation pictures, an early release will be entitled, "Aviator and Autoist, or A Race for a Bride." The story has nothing in particular to commend it, but there is considerable interest attached to the aeroplane which it was designed to show. This is, possibly, one of the best aviation pictures that has yet been shown. A number of very close views of aeroplanes in action are shown.

Scene from Aviator and Autoist (Champion).

DE WITT WHEELER WILL MAKE MOTION PICTURES.

A new motion picture company has been recently incorporated in New York State to be known as the Ajax Motion Picture Mfg. Co. Mr. De Witt C. Wheeler, who, as a song slide manufacturer, is well known in the photographic and theatrical world, is the treasurer and general manager of this company. The office and the studio are located at No. 120 W. 31st St., New York City, and Mr. Farrell MacDonald will be the director of the dramatic company. The Ajax Co. plans to specialize in motion pictures. Two separate departments will be maintained, namely, the Photoplay Department and the Industrial Department. Further announcement as to their plans and the dates of their releases will be made shortly.

"EAST LYNNE" (Two Reels—Thanhouser).

A feature that has much to commend itself to Independent exhibitors is the production of "East Lynne" in two reels by the Thanhouser Company. The subject is one that will never lose its popularity, and the filming of it by the Thanhouser artists brings out with commendable clearness all the great dramatic moments with which the story abounds. The Archibald Carlyle of the films is a true and fine counterpart of the Archibald Carlyle of the story. The photography and the settings deserve great praise. The advantage which the motion picture story enjoys over the conventional stage was again made manifest in this production by the marvelous realism of the railroad accident in which Lady Isabel lost her youth and her beatuy. The wreck is visualized with more than common skill, the black-robed sisters ministering to the victims of the catastrophe making a most impressive picture. (See illustrations on colored insert.)

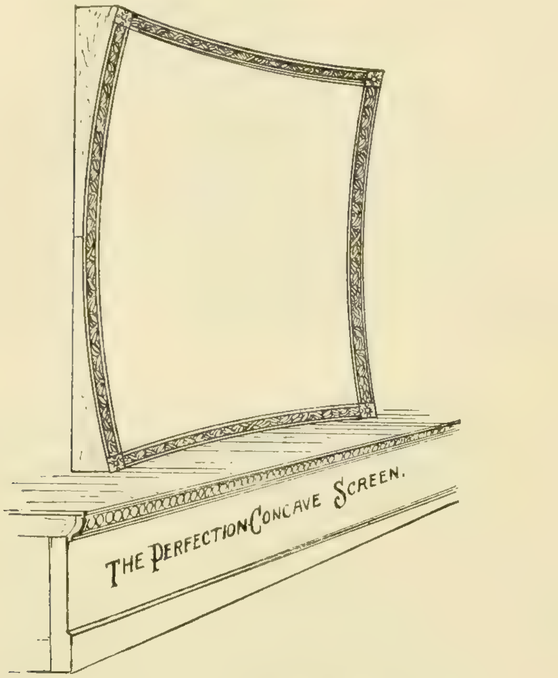
COMET SENDS A COMPANY TO JACKSONVILLE.

Seven members of the new Florida company of the Comet Film Co. reached Jacksonville January 5th, and are located at Hotel Jackson until permanent quarters are completed, when other members will arrive to complete the company. Those now there are: William Gray, manager; Miss A. J. Cowles, lead; Robert Taber, lead; John Henderson, comedian; Arthus Keiter, comedian; L. J. Vermilyea, scenic artist, and J. E. Rivoire, operator.

THE PERFECTION CONCAVE SCREEN.

Having received many inquiries, both verbal and written, from various parts of the country regarding the new "Perfection Concave Screen," manufactured by the Inventors Specialty Manufacturing Co., of Chicago, we have investigated their claims that we might more comprehensively reply to inquiries on the subject.

The concave feature of this screen is, to say the least, an innovation. We first secured a little descriptive booklet issued by the manufacturers to ascertain the points of improvement over the old style screens claimed by them, then started out to learn the truth or error of their assertions. We will confess that we were very agreeably surprised and would hardly have believed that the few inches variation in the lengths of the rays of light in the different parts of a picture on a flat surface were responsible for so many defects which seem to be entirely overcome by a screen so concaved that all rays are exactly the same length from the lens to point of contact with the screen.



THE PERFECTION CONCAVE SCREEN.

The perspective was faultless, the characters and objects standing out in bold relief—the distance normal and the scenery and actors displayed in uniformity in all parts of the picture from center to circumference. One of the most noticeable features was the fact that while occupying a front seat at the extreme side, we could view the picture with satisfaction, the distortion so objectionable in flat pictures apparently being entirely eliminated, and we believe that their claims that the concave feature furnishes a sounding board with correct acoustic properties are well founded by the effect which we noticed in the clearness with which the sounds of the voices of the singers were conveyed to the front side-seats.

Another feature which was a surprise to your scribe was that while we had expected to see a screen hollowed out in soup-bowl proportions, the concavity is so slight that with the plastic relief frame or ornamentations with which all that we viewed were encircled, it would scarcely be noticed at all. The designs for the plastic relief work are furnished by Mr. M. J. Doner, who is interested in the company, and whose more recent works have been to furnish the relief work for the New Columbia, and Lincoln Theaters in Chicago, and who is now working on designs for the new theater being erected in Albany, New York.

In this way they are amply able to make good their claim that the mountings on no two screens will be alike in the same city.

These screens so far have been made of a plastic composition with a fine mounding plaster for the basis, or of a light-weight wood fibre or, as some call it, a wood pulp, so moulded as to conform to required concave shape.

The surface coating which is a very important part of the composition is in all cases made of a private composition of their own, which is in color slightly removed from clear white, but just enough of a bluish tint to bring out the "true to nature" effect in colors and outlines, without having enough blue in it to give the metallic look so objectionable to many.

To sum it all up, we believe the "Perfection Concave Screen" shows a picture that may be seen with comfort and satisfaction from seats that would be unsatisfactory with the ordinary flat surface; that it improves the sound of the music; that it produces a picture that is uniform; that ghosts and glimmers are reduced to a minimum; that the materials used are well adapted to the purpose; that their surface coating is proper; that the concave feature is practical and scientific; that the company is apparently able to make good their claims, and that their productions have come to stay.

NEW ENGLAND.

The association of Massachusetts exhibtors was incorporated in 1909, and has done some very fine work in the way of defeating the laws backed by some of the "peanut politicians," with a view to hurting this business. The interesting part of this activity is in the fact that this is the first sign of life that the association has exhibited in over a year. That active worker and sterling friend of all moving picture people, Frank Howard, started the ball rolling, and something is sure to turn up at the meeting. It is stated that there are two agencies that are responsible for this recent activity: (1) The Moving Picture World, and (2) the recent trip made by the New England boys to the Vitagraph Company's New York plant. A new organization will probably be started at the meeting of the Board of Directors. A full, detailed report of the meeting will be chronicled in these columns of next week by this writer.

The Rev. W. W. Bowers, of the Methodist Church, Boston, Mass., had a good word to say for the photoplay houses not long ago. The Rev. Bowers stated that "There may be some of these shows that we should turn our backs on, but there are others which may be the means of doing much good. It is wrong to justify or condemn amusements without discriminating." If this last sentence had been made the motto of the so called reformers, it is sure that at least nine-tenths of the abuse and condemnation hurled at the business would never have occurred. Critics should be specific in their rebukes, and not deal in generalities.

Messrs. McCue and Cahill, the well-known moving picture men, are to open still another house. Weymouth, Mass., is now sure to have the best there is in Motography, because Messrs. McCue and Cahill always give excellent shows. The theater will be in the Town Hall Opera House.

The Kinemacolor pictures were exhibited at the Cummings Theater, Fitchburg. Business was only fair.

The Globe Theater, Concord, N. H., was destroyed by fire on December 9. The loss was partly covered by insurance and the theater will be rebuilt. No fatalities resulted from the conflagration, as the house was "dark" at the time. The cause has not been ascertained.

A new photoplay house will soon be opened in Boston, as work is well under way for Messrs. Novack, Wasserman and Rosen. The house is located at Ruggles and Washington Streets. The house will seat 800, the limit allowed all houses not conforming to the "regular theater" regulations. The new house will be called the Eagle and will play vaudeville and pictures.

The Colonial Theater, Haverhill, Mass., was opened Monday, December 18. A crowd of Massachusetts exhibitors went to Haverhill to attend the opening. The house has a seating capacity of close to 1500, and is the most up-to-date in the city. Vaudeville and pictures are now being offered, in addition to a seven-piece orchestra. Mr. James A. Sayer is the resident manager. The house is estimated to represent an outlay of $100,000 and is one of the best in the State devoted to vaudeville and pictures.

The Edison Kinetoscope is having a boost in and around Boston, as Mr. B. M. Corbett is in the city. Mr. Corbett is affiliated with the sales department, and has many friends in New England.

Messrs. Toomey and Demara, who operate the Premier and Nickel Theaters, Lawrence, Mass., evidently aim to make themselves the theatrical magnates of that city. They have taken over the Broadway Theater, of Lawrence. Messrs. Toomey and Demara intend to run vaudeville and pictures in the Broadway, as does the new Nickel. The Premier will continue to play a straight bill of Licensed pictures and illustrated songs.

Moving picture managers of Massachusetts will be interested to learn that henceforth Captain Atherton, of the State Police, will censor all pictures. This is with reference to the Sunday programs only. This is the first change made in this department for some time. Chief of Police Whitney is too busy to personally censor the pictures, but in Captain Atherton he has chosen a man well adapted to the work.

Mr. John F. Adams, manager of the Colonial Theater, Lawrence, Mass., earned the appreciation of the local Elks when he gave a vaudeville entertainment for the local lodge. The Colonial is doing well with vaudeville and pictures.

The Palace Theater, Boston, is exhibiting "The Crusaders," and found business good. The pictures will be held over for a two-weeks' stay. As the Palace changes its regular picture program daily, it is a distinct boost to the owners of the reels that the stay was lengthened.

"The Pacific Fleet at San Diego," will be seen at the Comique, Boston, December 14-20. The Comique is a daily change house, but made an exception in this instance.

The photographs of the Pathe players are receiving a lot of favorable comment from local managers. Talking of Pathe brings to mind that the two-reel subject, "In the Grip of Alcohol," is pronounced by local managers to be one of the most remarkable films seen in many a day. The advance booking is tremendous.

After closing for three days, the Music Hall, Taunton, Mass., decided it would reopen, and is again playing pictures and songs.

The fact that the exhibitors of Bridgeport, Conn., have formed an association has been noted in these columns recently. The newly-formed body has certainly gone right to business. One of the first results of the association was a vote that the price of admission should be immediately raised to ten cents and that all five-cent houses should change their prices without delay. The idea may be excellent, but its materialization cannot be effected in a moment, as the Bridgeport exhibitors seem to think the first opposition to this raise of prices came from an unexpected quarter. No sooner had it become known that the prices were about to be boosted than outside concerns made it known that several houses will be built to operate at five cents. The Bridgeport men are now hesitating. Let these exhibitors first raise the quality of their theaters and programs, and the raise in price may be effected in time, but to try and do this at once will be disastrous.

Mrs. Elizabeth Devine applied for a license to operate a photoplay house at 25 South Huntington Avenue, Boston, and is meeting with very strong opposition. It is understood from a most trustworthy source that Mayor Fitzgerald held a hearing on the matter. Property owners and Captain Hanley, of a near-by station-house, spoke favorably for the license. It is stated that the following were opposed to the license: W. M. Bragger, who asserted that the theater would be injurious to the children of the neighborhood, and also charged that Mrs. Devine had obtained favorable sentiment by promising free tickets. Mrs. C. Traverse, representing the Parents' Association, of the Jefferson School, opposed the petition. The Rev. Dr. Kidner, representing the Vincent Hospital and the Old Ladies' Home, also was a remonstrant. The matter is under consideration. When the "Old Ladies' Home," et cetera oppose the photoplay, what can ordinary people do? Boston is nearly on a par with Montclair, N. J., judging from this episode.

The Selectmen of Whitman, Mass., recently voted against issuing a permit for a moving picture theater. A local firm had wished to operate a show in the town hall. There are no theaters in the town at present.

The Bowdoin Square Theater, Boston, playing Licensed pictures and vaudeville, has just installed a five-piece orchestra and is receiving favorable comments from its patrons.

Mr. Joe Schessinger, of the Congress Hall Theater, South Boston, Mass., recently left that theater to take a position with McCue & Cahill's Ward Street theater, Brockton, Mass. After working a single week at the Ward Street theater, Mr. Schessinger was informed by the Brockton Union that he must either give up his position, or pay a fine of $100. Mr. Schessinger is himself a union man, but neglected to present his "card" to the Brockton local before starting in at the Ward Street theater. Mr. Schessinger, through this oversight, broke some union rule, and has decided to leave Brockton, rather than pay the fine.

Manager S. Poli, operating a string of houses throughout New England, many of which are devoted to vaudeville and pictures, won a legal and financial victory. The suit was against the G. D. Nelson Estate and the William Fox Amusement Company, jointly. Mr. Poli acquired the Nelson Theater from these people and lost the house when he was evicted by force. Mr. Poli only had possession of the house from March to June, 1909. Mr. Poli was awarded damages of $3,535.02. It seems that the court sustained Mr. Poli at the time, and gave him back the Nelson Theater. Mr. Poli was suing for the loss of money he sustained during the period he lost the house due to the eviction and up to the time he was reinstated by the court. The Nelson is playing vaudeville and pictures at present to good business.

The Worcester (Mass.) Advertising Club understands the value of moving pictures. This club, whose members are all engaged in some form of business closely allied to advertising, holds regular monthly meetings. The winter program was started on December 1, 1911, and a lecture entitled, "A Trip Through a Paper Mill," illustrated with both motion pictures and stereopticon views, was given by Mr. C. W. Dearden, of the Strathmore Paper Company, Mittineague, Mass.

Burlington, Vermont, is to have a new theater very soon. Reliable reports state that the new house will be the finest in that city. The plans call for a thoroughly fireproof theater. The seating capacity will be just a little over 1,000 people. The house should be ready for occupancy not later than March 15, and vaudeville and pictures are to be offered.

Mr. Joseph Mack, the well-known manager of the Hub Theater, Boston, Mass., has instituted a clever stunt, and one which is pulling the business. Manager Mack sets aside every Friday as the "added attraction night."

On these nights Manager Mack gives his patrons an inside view of the picture plants, by means of slides showing different scenes from the factories. Slides of the popular photoplayers are also exhibited. Manager Mack explains the slides to the audience and tells them little anecdotes. Manager Mack has had an Edison, a Lubin and a Vitagraph night. The idea is good, as it only whets the appetite of his patrons "for a little more of the same."

The Poli Theater, Worcester, Mass., which had been presenting stock-company attractions, has found those offerings not oversatisfactory, and has changed its policy to vaudeville and pictures. Business is reported to be better.

The moving pictures which are exhibited at the Danvers, Mass., Institute for the Insane are now under the supervision of Mr. G. B. Curtis, a Boston man. Pictures are a regular diet for the inmates of the asylum, and they are said to thrive under this treatment.

A new moving picture theater is promised for Burlington, Vermont. Messrs. Hutchinson and Lockwood are nearly ready to give out the contracts for the house, which is expected to be a fireproof, first-class house in every way. Vermont has always lagged behind other New England States in the matter of building moving picture theaters of the better sort, but a change has been in evidence of late, and a half-dozen high-grade houses will be in operation in Vermont before very long.

Several moving picture theaters have been put to a great deal of annoyance lately because of the throwing of a preparation around the house that causes everybody to sneeze. In fact, one house had its whole show broken up, due to the work of some hoodlum. The laws are very explicit on this matter, and anyone caught breaking up a performance in this way is liable to find himself in jail for a long while to come.

The Bijou Dream Theater, Boston, Mass., was the scene of great activity on Friday, Dec. 22, as 800 school children from the senior classes of grammar schools in Charlestown and Roxbury, Mass., were entertained at a special performance of moving pictures, and a specially made-up musical program. The children were the guests of Mrs. E. C. Ripley, and the pupils were made very happy. The pictures selected by Mrs. Josephine Clements, manager of B. F. Keith's Bijou Dream, were as follows: "The Battle of Bunker Hill," "Colorado Springs and Battle Creek," "The Kiddies' Christmas," "Wild Animals in Captivity," "Evangeline," and a "Day at West Point."

After the last picture was exhibited the children arose and sang "America."

As an example of what the pictures can accomplish, this event is worthy of special attention. Miss Clement stated that it was her wish and hope that the Bijou Dream would be used for this purpose every Saturday morning for the school children. Miss Clement also reports that she has interested the "Youths' Companion," a magazine for young folks, and Mr. Brown, of the 20th Century Club, in this idea. On her part, Miss Clement will attend to the selection of pictures best adapted for the school children, and will see that the whole program has a strong, educational flavor. The Bijou Dream is doing a wonderful lot of good for motion pictures, in that it is educating the people to see the merits of notography, and also is gaining the good-will of those people who are high up in educational and social matters. B. F. Keith's Bijou deserves special mention for its policy. From a box-office point of view, it should merit some thought as a lot of new patronage, and possibly free advertising, should result. Think it over, Mr. Exhibitor, and communicate with the Dream if you want any details as to how it is done.

Truant Officer Gaffney, of Chelsea, Mass., is undoubtedly the friend of motion pictures. It seems that the worthy truant officer had about fifty boys, who had a tendency to play "hooky" from school. Mr. Gaffney is firmly of the opinion that kind, humane treatment of these delinquent youngsters will do more real good than by employing harsher methods. And so Mr. Gaffney manifested the Christmas spirit by taking these boys to a moving picture show in Chelsea, instead of putting them through the "third degree." After the show, Mr. Gaffney told the boys that he might have put them into court, but that he had given them a pleasant and enjoyable time instead. He then asked the boys to promise to be better, and told them that their second offense would see different treatment. Every boy sincerely promised never to play "hooky" again, and voted Mr. Gaffney a king of men. It's a trite fact that "sugar catches more flies than vinegar," and that truism can be well employed in these cases. The list of things which the photoplay can set right is growing larger every day.

Mr. H. S. Streeter has opened his new Bijou Theater, West Main Street, Springfield, Mass., and reports good business. Mr. Streoter has operated a photoplay house in another part of Springfield and knows his business well.

Walter Bigelow finds that good shows devoted to photoplays and illustrated songs are sufficient to draw the crowds to his Nickelodeon, Fall River, Mass. Other Fall River houses are using vaudeville in connection with their picture programs.

While the "legitimate" theaters of Boston, Mass., were doing very poor business the week before Christmas, the moving picture managers were made happy by the good crowds in attendance. Christmas shopping may lighten the purse, but there is usually ten cents left to see the "movies." Several 'legitimate' theaters in Boston were closed for the week.

Mayor Fitzgerald, of Boston, Mass., visited three moving picture theaters recently and reported that he found conditions unsatisfactory and that he will ask for better policing. The mayor visited the Beacon, Comique and Star Theaters, between four and five o'clock one Tuesday in December. At the Beacon the mayor found a lobbyful of people waiting for admission, and ordered the management to cease the sale of tickets until the crowds had thinned out. At the Comique the mayor found the auditorium over-crowded and directed that the house be partially emptied. The Star Theater received no orders from the mayor. The mayor found all three houses to be employing their special officers as ticket takers, and takes decided issue at this course. His Honor wishes the special officers to be employed in no duty other than exercising a general watchfulness and keeping an eye open for any possible disturbance. Chief License Clerk Casey had been investigating conditions together with the mayor. The Boston Sunday American says: "Doubtless the mayor was inspired by high motives to investigate Scollay square, but he might be reminded that it seems hardly fair to confine his investigations to one small section of the city."

A new set of Italian war pictures were secured by the Premier Theater, Boston, Mass., and will be exhibited during the week of January 1, 1912. This house is doing a good business lately, due to the special releases of one sort and another which have been exhibited.

On December 31, 1911, the Reverend Anthony Carbinello, of St. Anthony's Catholic Church, Fitchburg, Mass., gave the first motion picture show ever held in a Fitchburg church. The Rev. Carbinello is extremely interested in his innovation and left no stone unturned to gain a large audience. The event was advertised throughout the city by means of posters. The idea is to keep people off the streets on Sunday and prevent any possible mischief.

The Rev. Carbinello stated that "every picture cannot be of a serious nature, if we wish to accomplish our purpose, but the show will serve to keep the people quiet on Sundays. I believe that it will benefit the 3,000 members of the Italian colony more to sit in my church on Sundays and look at moving pictures than to be playing cards and doing things they should not do."

Brockton, Mass., exhibitors are handing out a very unusual story. During the Brockton Fair, the Edison Company took a picture of the best scenes, as reviewed in the "World" of December 30. These pictures were exhibited at the Commercial Club of Brockton, as was noted in these columns. It seems that a gentleman by the name of William Green was snapped by the Edison photographer. Said Mr. Green was sauntering down the Midway. But the lady at his side was not Mrs. Green. Messrs. McCue and Cahill, the picture magnates of Brockton, decided to exhibit the reel in their house, and everyone came in to see Mr. Green and his mysterious companion. Mrs. Green came in—and the trouble began. At present every indication points to a divorce. Messrs. McCue and Cahill report the biggest week's business on record during the exhibition of the pictures, as the Green family is very well known in Brockton.

Joseph McCarthy has been appointed to the position of manager of the Franklin Square Theater, Worcester, Mass. Mr. Fred Belmont has been transferred from the Franklin Square to Shea's Theater, Manchester, N. H.

The White Rat Actors' Union held a meeting in Boston recently. Messrs. Callahan and Cooke, of the W. R. A. U. were the chief speakers. There was discussion regarding the methods of several Boston booking agents. Considerable activity has been going on in New England recently by this union, with a view to obtaining more equitable contracts and better wages for the actors. It is stated that the results of this recent campaign have been satisfactory. The campaign was directed in part against the photoplay houses using vaudeville.

A. R. Driscoll, formerly with the Savoy Theater, Fall River, Mass., has left that position to take up a position in the Massachusetts Senate, as page.

Mr. John C. Hemment, the photographer who was with Mr. Paul Rainey during his recent trip to Africa, has accomplished a great photographic feat. Mr. Hemment succeeded in taking a motion picture while in a aeroplane, flying over Marblehead, Mass., at a height of over 1,200 feet from the ground.

The Shawmut Theater, Blue Hill Avenue, Roxbury, Mass., opened Monday evening, January 1, 1912, at 7.30 p. m. State officials and theatrical managers are expected as specially invited guests. The Shawmut has a seating capacity of 2,000 and will offer vaudeville and pictures. The Shawmut has one balcony. The proscenium opening is 40 feet by 30 feet high. The building is fireproof and up to date in every way. Mr. Frank L. Browne, who formerly was manager of several Boston, Mass. photoplay houses, will manage the Shawmut. The house should do well, as its only local opposition is the Zenleon Temple. The admission rates are 10 and 20 cents. The Shawmut Theater Company expects to offer one of the best shows possible. Independent pictures are used.

The Columbia Opera House, North Adams, Mass., has been leased by Mr. William Lothe who is offering pictures and songs to good houses.

The Magaire Theater, Lawrence, Mass., which was damaged by fire sometime ago, has been renovated and is again playing its regular program of pictures.

Mr. J. R. Sheehan is now in the New York office of P. F. Shea, who operates a string of theaters. Mr. Sheehan was formerly manager of the Worcester Theater, Worcester, Mass. Mr. John Burke is now managing the Worcester, having come from Bridgeport, Conn., where he was managing a local theater.

Mr. F. C. Collier, manager of the Old South and New Washington Theaters, Boston, Mass., has been ill in bed lately.

HENRY.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, of Chicago, Ill., has changed its name to Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Illinois State Branch No. 2.

Warner Judy, of Hoopeston, Ill., has purchased the Derthick Opera House property at Belvidere, Ill. The place is now leased by W. A. McDowell.

Hathaway Harper has sold the Metropolitan Theater at Oklahoma City, Okla., to Charles A. Garnett, representing Polen & Welch, of Indianapolis, Ind.

Mr. and Mrs. William Burkhart opened a new moving picture and vaudeville theater in the Bleitz Building, at Sandwich, Ill.

Vandals recently visited the Virginia Theater, at Hoopeston, Ill., and with some sharp instrument tried to destroy the motion picture machine. When Ogel Travis, the operator, went to the theater one morning, he found the double doors standing wide open and parts of the machine badly battered.

Richards Brothers have opened a moving picture show in the Duckwall Building, at Mt. Auburn, Ill.

The St. Louis Women's Christian Temperance Union believes that if women police officers were appointed there would be better supervision of moving picture shows and other so-called evils ad lib.

M. H. Harris has purchased the interest of E. E. Nicholson in the new modern Princess Theater, at Beardstown, Ill.

A cash prize of $5 was offered for the most suitable name for a new moving picture show opened in the Otloe Building, at Pana, Ill.

A new opera house, 90 x 90 feet, is being built at Brady, Tex.

Zed Reddish, of Jerseyville, Ill., has a very comfortable little show house, seating six hundred without crowding. As he gives only evening shows I was unable to determine the quality of his performance, but if it is up to the standard of the house, the people of Jerseyville should be satisfied. His place is big enough and well enough arranged to offer dramatic attractions, but at present he is giving three reels of pictures and two and three acts of vaudeville for five and ten cents. This is a town of about 4,000.

A picture film is blamed for fire which recently broke out in Mrs. Sam R. Hamilton's brick building at Farmersville, Tex. Lewis Brothers lost their moving picture outfit at an estimated loss of $1,000.

The opera house at Garrett, Ill., has been sold to the U. S. Brokerage Company, of Decatur, Ill.

The Imperial Theater, on North Sixth Street, between Washington and Austin, Waco, Tex., a handsome brick building, is near completion. The property belongs to Mrs. O. D. Streeter.

Fort Worth, Texas, papers give Fire Marshal A. D. Deninger, appointed November 1, credit for making motion picture houses in that city safer. He is paving the way for quicker egress and reducing the amount of standing room to be sold.

Here is another of those accurate accounts of moving picture fires from a Moline, Ill. paper:

"A moving picture show just over the entrance of the Royal Theater at 127 East Third Street, Davenport, exploded during the last performance Friday evening and in a moment the front of the theater was in flames. As it was the last show of the evening, there were only about a dozen people in the house and these found their way through the smoke to safety. $300 worth of films and a $125 machine were destroyed and there was a damage of $200 to the building."

Fred Beck, the Philadelphia National outfielder, singer, recently completed an engagement at the Gaiety moving picture theater at Jacksonville, Ill.

The Leisy Brewing Company, of Peoria, Ill., is planning to build a new two-story structure, to contain a theater, hotel and saloon, at Walnut and Adams Street.

The Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill., recently purchased a moving picture film, cut it up and gave away the pieces as souvenirs.

Action by the city council of Joliet, Ill., toward the increase in the license fees of motion picture theaters and other amusement houses is rumored.

Building Commissioner McKelvey, of St. Louis, is said to be waging a campaign against crowded aisles in moving picture houses.

A. N. Kerns has opened the Gem moving picture show at Deland, Ill., and will give performances twice a week.

Charles H. Hale, editor of the Sangamon Sawyer, Kilbourne, Ill., who operates a weekly picture show in that city, gave two performances a week during the holidays, offering three reels for five and ten cents.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hammer are now in charge of the Parson's picture show at Delavan, Ill. Mrs. Hammer was recently piano player at the Star photoplay house in Lincoln, Ill.

M. Silvernail, of Canton, Ill., has opened a moving picture show at Washington, Ill.

Manager Hayward, of the Bijou Theater, Waukegan, Ill., announced a five-piece orchestra for Saturdays and Sundays.

The Gordon Square Amusement Company, of Cleveland, Ohio., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are Joseph Hedy, E. E. Rodd, S. M. Davis, George B. Harris and Joseph J. Klein.

The Ohio National Exclusive Film Exchange Company, of Cleveland, Ohio., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000. The incorporators are L. L. Lommosson, John C. Barkley, John P. Dempsey, Richard Cerglis and George A. Welch.

Motion pictures will be made this winter of actual farm methods as demonstrated in the agricultural college short course, at St. Anthony Park, Minn. In return for this concession the college will be given a set of films. Dexter D. Mayne, professor of pedagogics and principal of the agricultural school, has arranged for motion pictures every Monday and Saturday evening in the chapel for the 900 students, Historical events, such as incidents in the life of Daniel Boone and the battles of Yorktown, Concord and Lexington, the manufacture of the largest cheese in the world, recently completed at Waupaca, Wis., and Shakespearian plays will be shown.

J. P. Sautzman, of Athens, Ill., probably will erect a new building to house his moving picture and vaudeville show, as the opera house in which he is now operating will be used for mercantile purposes.

The Greenville, Ill. Advocate gives six free tickets to the Idle Hour Theater to readers who find misspelled words in its advertising columns.

Lyman H. Howe, the picture impressario, who last year gave away tickets to children who wrote commendable papers on the subject, "What Animal Loves Music Most?" made a regular guest of Carl Gill, a Litchfield, Ill., small boy. This youth's gem was:

"I think the mouse loves music most, for one time while my father was playing the jew's harp a little mouse came out and listened. Now any living animal that can sit and listen to my father playing a jew's harp certainly must love music." Mr. Howe looked him up on his recent visit to Litchfield.

Lyman Howe's moving pictures were shown in the high school auditorium at East St. Louis, December 19, under the auspices of the Teachers' Association of that city.

The opera house in Lockhart, Tex., has been removed to North Commerce Street and reopened.

The film of "The Awakening of John Bond," is being used in Milwaukee in connection with the Red Cross seal sale of the Milwaukee Tuberculosis Commission. In St. Louis moving picture houses the seals were sold in the theaters by members of the Graduate Nurses' Association after the films had been shown.

Jacob Barnet has purchased a half interest of Dan J. LaBar in the Crystal Theater, 305-307 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn. It is announced that a five-piece orchestra will be used in connection with moving pictures. Other plans, including alterations costing $15,000, will make it a "part vaudeville house."

Prof. W. T. Hewetson recently delivered a very commendable address on "The Motion Picture Problem" before the Women's Club in Freeport, Ill. Whether his information was secured first hand or merely through compiled works, he gave an excellent idea of some of the greatest productions, their expense and the ability required. In part, he said:

"The motion picture has such a tremendous educational value. The knowledge we obtain from books is always second hand and often unreal and practical. It lacks what the French call "exteriorite," that which comes through the senses. On the other hand, it is likely to be more vital and impressive. Everyone knows the value of travel in broadening the mind and in enlarging the sympathies. To look at good pictures of distant peoples and scenes is to be a stay-at-home traveler, and to enjoy many of the advantages of real travel without its dangers and trials. Any discussion of the educational value of moving picture shows must involve a consideration of their moral influence. And here, let me say, that we have to meet the prejudice that existed against the cheap theater before moving picture shows came into existence. The dime theater, with its cheap vaudeville artists, its melodrama, its ballet girls and its sensation hunting crowds, was a menace to good morals and an object of just alarm to parents. But the moving picture belongs in a different class, and it is gratifying to note that it has well-nigh driven these cheap theaters out of existence.'

Proprietors of two motion picture houses in Clinton, Ill., are publishing a paid notice to the effect that they have been asked by clerks and others to open their places on Sunday. The purpose is to ascertain, if possible, the sentiment against the Sunday show.

The announcement that the Board of Education of Springfield, Ill., is kindly toward the proposition to use moving pictures in connection with the course of instruction in the grammar and high schools has attracted considerable attention in all newspapers in the Mississippi Valley. Following this comes the news that Gerald T. Smith, superintendent of the Peoria, Ill. city schools, has faith in the innovation but wants to wait and see what success it meets elsewhere. In Springfield, geography and history will first be taught by this method, provided the plan is carried out, and other subjects will be added later. Film companies will demonstrate to the board the possibilities. The Moving Picture World recently published an interview with Superintendent J. H. Collins, of Springfield, in which he endorsed the plan at that time and told of his own awakening to the possibilities in learning geography.

Harry T. Loper, proprietor of the Lyric Theater, of Springfield, Ill., has sued the City of Springfield for $11,000 for three-fourths of the property damage suffered in the race riot in that city in 1908. This riot practically forced Loper into a successful moving picture business. Loper and his automobile were deputized by the sheriff to convey two negro prisoners sought by a mob, to a neighboring jail. The revengeful mob wrecked his restaurant, the leading place of the city. He restored it but never did a good business and finally replaced it with the now prosperous Lyric.

Moving pictures are credited with having separated Harry Glory, Harry Havicamp and Joseph Carey from happy homes in a wild desire to scalp picture Indians. The boys started West by moving from Philadelphia to West Chester, where the police stripped them of their firearms, applied a few bumps where they would hurt, but serve a useful purpose, and shipped them home after a night in jail. All of the boys are over 16 years of age. They were received at home by able fathers, properly equipped for the usual parental function.

Chevalier C. C. A. Baldi, of the Italian colony in Philadelphia, journeyed to Wilmington, Del., to file a protest against the showing in that city of films reproducing scenes of war in Tripoli. The police granted his request and all war films will be barred until they can be proved authentic. The improvised films of the Italian war are barred in Philadelphia, under an order issued by Superintendent Taylor, of the Bureau of Police.

Sigmund Lubin has made a present of a fine moving picture machine to the Northwest Business Men's Association, through Benjamin Schwartz, secretary to Congressman R. O. Moon. The machine will be used in connection with the social life of the organization, and for displaying election returns.

Because he refused to stop smoking when he boarded a trolley car, Mr. Jack J. Frawley, of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, was arrested on December 13. The conductor ordered Frawley to throw the cigar away, and when he indignantly refused, he was ordered from the car. At the hearing, before Magistrate Beaton, the next morning, he was fined $4.50, which he refused to pay, declaring such a fine was illegal. The magistrate then sentenced him to the House of Correction for twenty-four hours.

The State Department has taken an appeal to the Superior Court from the decision of Judge Staake, who held that the act of 1907, assessing a yearly state tax of $500 on places of amusement, did not apply to moving picture houses. The Exhibitors' League of Penna. have waged a bitter fight against the enforcement of this act against moving picture houses. The League has retained prominent lawyers to defend the case. Their contention is that the new law applies only to places fitted up and conducted for theatrical and operatic entertainments, and it would be an unlawful hardship to apply it to moving picture houses, here, which pay the city an annual license fee of $100.

While on a Western business trip, Mr. Frank L. Hough, Jr., a salesman for the Thomas A. Edison

Company, Orange, N. J., met Miss Sue M. Dickey, of Minneapolis, Minn. Announcement has just been made that they will be married on January 2. Mr. Hough is the son of Mr. Frank L. Hough, sporting editor of a morning newspaper in this city, and one of the owners of the Worlds' Champion "Athletics."

State factory inspectors in Pottsville, Pa., have decided to vigorously prosecute all theaters and places of amusement that continue to crowd the aisles of their houses. They claim that if fire should break out there would be an appalling loss of life.

At the very outset of the new "Reform" administration The Moving Picture World published an interview with Director Porter of the Department of Public Safety, in the course of which he clearly announced that he expected the managers of picture houses to protect their own interests, and to act as their own inspectors and police. He pointed out that the protection of large property rights was the duty imposed especially upon those to whom the property belonged and that so long as the managers of picture houses censored their own exhibitions and safeguarded their patrons, they had nothing at all to fear from him or any attache of his Department.

This announcement, like the declaration that the police force would be made up of policemen and not politicians, was greeted with good-natured jeers by some of the wise managers boasting of political pull. Hardened by more than twenty years of lawlessness under police protection, these men could not bring themselves to understand or believe that all the politics in the police department was to be kicked right out of the individual policeman, and that for four years at least, he would be a plain cop, doing naught else but the duties of a real policeman, including taking all of his wages home on pay-day, with no deductions for politics or dividends for politicians.

These men proceeded to fill their aisles and to hand the policemen conversation and when nothing happened one or two of them unwound reels marked with the official X here.

Then came the top notes from the front. Director Porter asked councils to authorize the appointment of five inspectors with authority of both a policeman and a fireman; to fix the salaries of these inspectors at $1,000 each, and to compel the picture houses to take out inspection certificates at a cost to cover the expenses of the proposed Bureau of Inspection.

This will be bad enough for four years, during which time there will be nothing worse happen than real inspections, a rigid enforcement of the law and the perpetual annoyance resulting from this special surveillance. Four years hence, when the "Reform" administration ends, and the Old Guard resumes business at the old stand, as doubtless it will, these inspections will be made by phantoms, but the bills will come in regularly, and the man who has them to pay will have to push important money across or shut up. The Philadelphia system has always contemplated cash payments and the retirement of a cop who never drew more than $1,500 a year salary, with a fortune of more than $250,000, indicates the possibilities of Philadelphia politics and the police department.

All this was brought about by a very few men who thought they could beat the new system, which is a strictly business proposition, with no favors asked for or shown.

The trouble started by those who thought there was more money in smut vaudeville than in pictures, and cut out the pictures altogether. This brought up the mooted point of taxation, based upon the hairline dividing a picture house from a theater. So long as the pictures were regularly shown there was no dispute and no effort was ever made to impose a theater tax on the moving picture houses showing vaudeville. This policy was born about the time the new administration took charge, and the new director conceived the idea that some one thought him an easy mark, and wanted to see how far he would go along. They all know now.

Those who have any doubts may find food for thought in the fact that Assistant Director Murphy, seventy-two hours in office, grappled with two highwaymen in the street and dragged one of them to a police station, where he had to introduce himself to the officer in charge before he could land his prisoner in a cell.

Director Porter is a sane, reasonable, liberal and decent citizen: a broad-minded and generous official, but he is the Director of the Department of Public Safety, and he proposes to direct every second he is in office, and anyone who has his doubts about this will do well to sell out his picture house and move elsewhere.

Several of the moving picture theaters of Wilmington, Del., have refused to admit children after 8 P. M. unless accompanied by parents or guardians. The time worn statement that the moving picture has a bad moral effect on children brought about this step by the proprietors.

Mr. George W. Bennathum has added another moving picture house to his already long list of houses. He has taken over the Lincoln Theater, at Forty-ninth Street and Woodland Avenue, which was formerly owned by Daniel S. Bader.

Messrs. Nixon-Nirdlinger have added a new house to the circuit, the new Point Breeze Theater. It is a modern, fireproof structure, at Twenty-second and Morris Streets and Point Breeze Avenue, and is one of the largest and best paying moving picture houses in the Southern section of the city. The house will be operated in conjunction with the Nixon-Nirdlinger circuit of vaudeville and moving picture theaters. There will be one performance every afternoon, for which the charge will be five and ten cents, and two performers every evening, for which a uniform price of ten cents will be charged. There will be complete changes of program twice a week and the pictures will be changed every day.

A moving picture house in Waren, Pa., recently admitted every child that presented one potato at the door. Several bushels were realized, and these were distributed among the poor.

The Erie Avenue Amusement Company have purchased the dwelling at No. 615 Erie Avenue, adjoining their theater. It is thought that extensions are planned, but it has not yet been announced. The assessed valuation of the dwelling is $14,000.

Mr. James M. Neeley, for years lessee of the Academy of Music, at Lebanon, Pa., and interested in various theatrical enterprises in central Pennsylvania, died at Harrisburg, Pa., on December 24, aged 68 years. Mr. Neeley served in the Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry and won for himself a splendid reputation.

Competition has become so great among the moving picture houses of Clayton, N. J., that prizes of dolls and turkeys are being given away, and all sorts of advertising schemes are being resorted to, to attract crowds.

CLEMENT V. CONGDON.

PITTSBURGH.

Christmas Day saw the opening of the Harris Theater, on Diamond St., near Smithfield St. This theater is the newest home of high-class continuous vaudeville, with motion pictures as a feature, in the downtown section of this city. With a seating capacity of about sixteen hundred to the performance, and with the nominal admission of ten and twenty cents, the success of this amusement emporium is assured. The theater will open at one o'clock and close at eleven thirty. The house is very beautifully decorated, both in the interior and exterior. The fresco work being done by a noted artist. The owners are The Harris Amusement Co., of which Mr. J. P. Harris is the general manager.

The Minerva Theater, on Fifth Ave., can claim the honor of being the finest theater in this city to run a moving picture of German manufacture. The film was a three-reel production, called "The Road to Ruin."

The management of the Bijou Dream had a pow-wow with the Pittsburgh Press, this city's largest newspaper, and the result was that on Sunday, Dec. 17, that paper used up a quarter page to tell the gentle reader that the Bijou Dream was the most interesting, best regulated, better managed and refined theater in Pittsburgh, always and all ways. Readers who wished to convince themselves of this proclamation, if they were not over fourteen years old, could gain admittance to the special entertainment throughout the Christmas week, by merely using a pair of scissors to snip a coupon out of the Pittsburgh Press.

"In Union There is Strength," seems to be a watchword in Braddock, if one is to judge from the mutual agreement agreed to by the five moving picture men in the town. The gentlemen of the agreement have all been in the moving picture game for quite a while. The idea of this agreement would be recommendable to all towns. The agreement goes as follows:

1st. The price of admission on all holidays, namely: Decoration Day, 4th of July, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day, and New Years' Day, shall be ten cents in place of heretofore five cents.

2nd. No exhibitor shall on the above named holidays exhibit more than three reels of film, the said three reels of film must not be subjects of two or three reels.

3rd. All photoplay subjects consisting of two reels or over, must be classed as "Special Features" and the admission for same will be, adults, ten cents. Children under twelve years of age, five cents, on all days except the above named holidays.

4th. Children will be admitted only from the time of opening until five o'clock P. M., at the rate of two for five cents, after the said five o'clock P. M., children must pay five cents each.

5th. All children accompanied by adults must, if they occupy a seat, pay admission as per above prices.

[These exhibitors would have done a wiser thing if they had also made the same agreement in regard to Saturdays. It has been tried many times and proven that the public will stand for a raise to 10 cents on Saturday nights and Sundays. Ed.]

The Metropolitan Theater, at 4771 Liberty Ave., has enlarged its seating capacity to about 400.

[illegible] in theatrical circles in Louisville. The lease is now held by E. D. Stair, and runs to July 1, 1913. It is said that the Princess Amusement Company will take charge of the theater January 1, Mr. Stair having decided to abandon the house. It is stated that the Avenue is no longer a money-maker as a legitimate theater and that it will be converted into a moving picture house. Allen Kinney, of the Princess, has refused to confirm the rumor, while other officers also are reticent on the subject.

The Bijou Dream Theater has opened in Louisville. It is located at 226 West Market Street. The admission price is only five cents, a feature that is unusual among Louisville moving picture shows. Three pictures will be run daily, also two illustrated songs.

The Golden Gate Trio are now one of the features of the Novelty Theater. They have been in vaudeville for several years. The trio is composed of W. J. Schwartz, baritone; Jack Lawlor, first tenor, and Henry Weber, second tenor. The singers appear at each performance and have many admirers in the Gateway City.

The Lyric Theater opened at Winchester, Ky., recently, with good crowds. The Lyric is one of the few in that place which was constructed for a photoplay house. Miss Lucy Clark, pianist in the new house, has gone to Lexington, Ky., being replaced by Miss Ettaviene Foote, who has had several years' experience in the business.

Plans for the erection of a theater for colored people exclusively have been completed in Winchester, Ky. The new structure will go up on Maple Street. Experienced theater men are backing the proposition and work will begin at once.

Miss Martha Russell, of the Essanay Film Service Company, has practically completed her tour of Kentucky. She has drawn big crowds at every appearance. Her last performance was at the Lyric Theater in Winchester, Ky. Miss Russell held the interest of hundreds there, giving a complete description of the methods employed in making the pictures.

The Royal Theater, located at Eighteenth Street and Broadway, Louisville, has done a splendid business since their determination to give away ten turkeys on Christmas and New Year's day was announced. Thousands of people have visited the place, each receiving a numbered coupon on entering the theater. Five of the turkeys will be raffled the day following Christmas, the other five the first day of January.

Cy Reinhardt, who is appearing at the Orpheum daily, is one of the chief attractions of that house. Reinhardt has a big following in Louisville and an announcement that he will appear is usually followed by a packed house.

M. Switow, owner of several moving picture houses in Louisville, has returned from a trip to New York. Mr. Switow made the trip on important business connected with the formation of a new film exchange in Louisville. Details will be forthcoming later. It is understood that the main points of the proposition have been settled and that Louisville men will be engaged in the enterprise.

If the Talbott Syndicate, of St. Louis, is to enter the Louisville field, they are keeping negotiations under cover. Moving picture proprietors in the Gateway city have heard nothing of the plans since they were first announced. The report is generally considered as premature. Buildings in the central part of the city are at a premium now, and any big deal could not escape the limelight of publicity.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

NEW ORLEANS.

B. Anthony, of Ponchatoula, La., visited the city recently and arranged a new independent service with the Consolidated Film & Supply Co. Mr. Anthony deserves great credit for maintaining a photoplay theater in Ponchatoula and making a success of it, because of the small population there.

H. Langlois, former manager of the Dreamland Theater, Lake Charles, is in the city seeking employment. He is very capable in any part of a photoplay theater.

Business at the Consolidated Film & Supply Co. is very good. Manager Shear reports that new customers are coming in every day. This office is certainly a live one and leaves no stone unturned to meet the requirements of the exhibitors. Their purchases have been increased as the Independent manufacturers increase their output.

J. E. Pearce has resigned as manager of the local office of the General Film Co. In the future, Brother Pearce will devote his entire time and attention to the fine string of houses owned by J. Pearce & Sons.

Josiah Pearce & Sons are erecting a first class photoplay theater on Canal Street, at a cost of $30,000. This house has not been named as yet.

J. E. Hennessy, special representative of the General Film Company, has left the city for Dallas, Texas. Mr. Hennessy has had charge of the local office since the resignation of Mr. Pearce, and will look after same until Pearce's successor is named.

The new $10,000 Alamo Theater, Vicksburg, Miss., owned by the Fitchenberd Enterprices, of New Orleans, is ready for its grand opening. The general arrangements and acoustics are conceded to be the best of all the photoplay theaters in the South.

The Fitchenberg Enterprises are using high class singers and entertainers in all of their theaters, much to the delight of the local amusement lovers. The Alamo and Dreadworld are the most popular of the high class string of theaters.

The Lafayette Theater, New Orleans, La., is a photoplay theater. This is the finest of the local opera houses controlled by Klaw & Erlanger, and its advent into the ranks of the photoplay industry is hailed with great joy by any lover of the silent drama. This is perhaps the only theater owned and managed by Klaw & Erlanger that is devoted to the motion picture. It seems queer, indeed, to sit in this spacious palace and watch motion pictures where heretofore we saw such notable stars as Mrs. Leslie Carter, Mrs. Fiske, John Drew and many others. What does this mean? Dame Rumor has it that all of the Klaw & Elranger houses in the South will be converted into picture houses after this season. Must we say, "I told you so?"

J. A. Brown has closed the Temple Roof Garden, and has arranged with the Consolidated Film & Supply Co. for a first-run service, to be used in the Temple Theater, which he will open soon.

ST. LOUIS.

Frank L. Talbot's new Hippodrome was opened Sunday, Nov. 12. At the opening performance a high-class performance was given, including several feature vaudeville acts. Three reels of high-class Licensed pictures were also shown. Mr. Frank L. Talbot, manager of the Hippodrome, was suddenly overtaken by a nervous breakdown, which was caused by overwork in getting things arranged for the grand opening. Basil Webb, advertising manager of the Hippodrome, states that while Mr. Talbot is confined to his room at the American Hotel, he expects to be out in a few days, after which he will go to West Baden, Ind., for his health.

The Rainbow Theater, at 107 N. Broadway, was opened recently, with high-class motion pictures and illustrated songs. The admission is 5c, with Independent service.

Mr. J. M. Dubbs, chief producer of the O. T. Crawford Co., has, with great care and pains, organized some of the best musical comedy companys ever seen in 10c show houses. Mr. Dubbs always makes it a point to give the public what they want. The consequence is, that the O. T. Crawford houses are always packed. When not producing plays, Mr. Dubbs keeps things moving in the neighborhood of Union Easton, where the Union Theater is situated.

The Mikado Theater Co. has bought over the vaudeville and picture theater which was built at Hamilton and Easton by the Union-Easton Amusement Co. Mr. O. T. Crawford was elected president of the new company. The stockholders are as follows. O. T. Crawford, 5,399 shares; Jas. Hageman, Jr., 2,600 shares; and W. C. Cass, 1 share. The house cost $42,000, and is decorated in Japanese style. It has a frontage of 100 feet. It was opened Nov. 29, with high-class motion pictures and vaudeville, with admission of 10c.

In answer to a request from Rev. Andrew Schmitt that children under sixteen years old be prohibited from entering moving picture shows unless accompanied by their parents, Mayor C. Haynes, of Minneapolis, said that he believes a state law will be necessary to bring about this restriction. The mayor was also asked by a delegation from St. Boniface chunrch to use his influence to prevent the location of more photoplay houses in East Minneapolis.

OTTO SCHAEFER.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

Governor A. O. Eberhart, of Minnesota, speaking before the Teachers' and Parents' Association of the Bremer School at Minneapolis, urged the parents and teachers to provide motion pictures in the school auditoriums as a means of curbing the desires shown by pupils to attend the regular photoplay houses.

Moving pictures of work at the Minnesota State Training School, at Red Wing, were forbidden by Mayor J. C. Haynes, of Minneapolis. It was not deemed advisable to exploit the countenances of the young people who are sent there for correction.

Mrs. Annie Jacques, employed at the Isis Moving Picture Theater, in Seattle, Wash., was struck by an automobile. The machine stopped with the radiator partly over her body, but she did not suffer a scratch. She fainted from fright.

The new owners of the Washington Moving Picture Theater, First Avenue, foot of Columbia, Seattle, Wash., will give away a Chickering grand piano March 11.

The city council of Seattle, Wash., has passed a bill providing for a board of censors to censor plays and moving picture shows in the city.

Fitzherbert Lather, architect, has been engaged by former Councilman W. H. Murphy, of Ballard, Wash., to prepare plans for a $15,000 moving picture theater at Ballard Avenue and Allman Street. It will have a seating capacity of 800.

Moving pictures have become a regular part of the amusement equipment at the isolated coast defense garrisons along the Pacific coast. Until recently Chaplain E. P. Easterbrook, situated at the forts in the artillery district of Puget Sound, entertained the men at regular intervals with picture shows, bearing the expense himself. These became so popular that each of the post exchanges at Forts Casey, Flagler and Worden have purchased modern machines and made arrangements for film service, so that each post may have a show each week in the gymnasiums.

A building permit has been issued at Milwaukee, Wis., to M. Guttenberg, to erect a $7,000 moving picture theater at 1173 Holton Street. Another permit has been granted to the Paris Theater, at Twenty-second and Center Streets.

A certificate showing that motion picture theaters in Minneapolis have been inspected by the fire marshal on a certified date has been prepared by Walter Scott, secretary of the Minneapolis Fire Department. This certificate shows the number of exits, the precautions against fires and the date on which the theater was last inspected, this to be thrown on the screen before each program. Inspections are to be made at stated intervals.

Charles C. Stewart, speaking before Milwaukee real estate men, urged the use of moving picture films to advertise the advantages of the city.

Manager G. E. Raymond, of the Orpheum, Minneapolis, surprised his patrons with pictures of a portion of the automobile endurance race from Minneapolis to Helena, Mont., last July. The pictures were taken in the Prickly Bear Canyon, north of Helena, and the first films made were defective. It was thought it would be impossible to exhibit them, but A. Seebolt, motion picture maker for the Great Northern Railroad, subsequently ran off some others, which were successful. Nothing was said about the existence of the pictures until they were exhibited at the home of Louis W. Hill, president of the Great Northern, at an entertainment for the Western governors, and the alert Manager Raymond secured them.

F. H. M.

MONTREAL.

One of the first moving picture houses one meets on St. Lawrence Boulevard, is that cosy little theater, The Palace, capacity 300. Edison and Powers machines in use. Vaudeville of the Griffiths circuit.

Mr. Z. Renaud, formerly manager of the Gaiety Theater, has left with the whole staff, to take charge of the Casino Theater, Ottawa, Can. Mr. B. Thompson, the operator, has taken over the managership.

Mr. Charles Surate has taken charge, as manager, of the Lune Rousse, a cozy moving picture theater in the east end of Montreal. He reports flourishing business under his control.

The Casino Theater, one of Montreal's foremost photoplay houses, has cut out vaudeville and are only running first-run pictures.

Another large photoplay house, namely "Fairyland," opened recently in the west end of Montreal. It has one of the finest show fronts in Montreal

The Moulin Rouge Theater is featuring Independent films. Two male singers and one female singer sing the most popular airs of the day. The latest songs are sung in trios, which is well received by the crowds who visit this popular east end theater.

DAVIS LIVINSON.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Fire starting in the film booth at the Illinois Theater in N. Illinois Street, a few days ago, caused a loss of about $300. The fire was confined to the booth and a panic was prevented among the spectators. Robert Gavin, son of J. A. Gavin, the machine operator, was slightly burned about the face.

A moving picture theater will be operated by the newly organized Fotoplay Amusement Company, which has been organized and incorporated here with an authorized capitalization of $25,000. Those interested in the company are W. P. Pfaff, F. A. Todd and W. D. Walker.

The owners of the Princess Theater at Anderson have purchased the Star Motion Picture Theater in the same city from Joseph E. Hennings.

A. B. Marcus, of Gary, is remodeling a building in that city for the purpose of establishing a motion picture theater.

Frank Steinmetz is remodeling a building at Peru in which he will establish a motion picture theater to be known as the Photoplay Theater.

CLARENCE L. CUMMINS.

Among the Exhibitors

Rome, N. Y.—Martin Pfluke, proprietor of the Romohawk Theater, has installed a new motiograph 1912 projection machine in his theater.

Perth Amboy, N. J.—The interior of the Masonic Hall will be opened for a moving picture house when remodeling is finished and will be conducted by Rusk & Andrews.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Fairview Amusement Company. Capital, $6,000. O. W. Bennett, Henry Siebel, and Karl Lueders.

McKeesport, Pa.—The Merlin Amusement Company, of Wilkinsburg, will erect a new theater on North 1st Street.

Clinton, Ia.—The Superba, Lyon's up to-date moving picture theater, has changed hands, the owners, Messrs. Herman Dressen and John H. Dressen, having disposed of their interests to unknown parties.

The Sign That is Making Good
CHANGEABLE ILLUMINATED PROGRAM SIGN

"PATENTED"

Easily operated, Quickly Changed, Inexpensive

St. Joseph, Mo., Dec. 12th, 1911.
Zenith Mfg. Co., Cincinnati, O.
Gentlemen.—

Your sign received and well pleased with it. Think it is the best thing in the way of a program sign I have ever seen. It is only a matter of time when all the first-class vaudeville and moving picture theatres will be using a sign of this class, as I have figured I can more than save the cost of your sign in six months. The letters show up very plain and is surprising how quick one can change the wording in the entire program. In fact the entire sign can be changed while they were taking the list of acts and pictures to the printer.

Yours truly,
(Signed) FRED COSMAN, Mgr.,

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY

80 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY,
Plaintiff,
vs.
CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE,
Defendant.

In Equity
No. 28,605.

This cause having been brought to final hearing upon pleadings and proofs, and upon Defendant's motions to strike out testimony taken on behalf of the Plaintiff and for leave to take further testimony on behalf of the Defendant, and having been argued by Melvin Church, Esq., of counsel for the plaintiff, and by Harry N. Low, Esq., William Houston Kenyon, Esq., and William J. Wallace, Esq., of counsel for defendant, and having been duly considered by the Court, it is, by the Court, this 23rd day of December, 1911, Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows :

I. That reissue letters patent No. 12192, granted by Thomas A. Edison, on the 12th day of January, 1904, for Kinetoscopic Film, referred to in the plaintiff's bill of complaint, are good and valid in law as to the 2nd claim thereof.

II. That Thomas A. Edison was the original, first, and true inventor of the improvements described in said reissue letters patent and particularly claimed in the said 2nd claim thereof.

III. That the plaintiff, Motion Picture Patents Company, has good title to said reissue letters patent.

IV. That the defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, has infringed upon said reissued letters patent No. 12192, as to the said second claim thereof.

V. That a perpetual injunction issue against the said defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, prohibiting it, its officers, directors, attorneys, agents, servants and workmen, from directly or indirectly making, using or selling Kinetoscopic or Motion Picture Films containing or embodying the invention set forth in said reissue letters patent No. 12192, and particularly covered by claim 2 thereof.

VI. That the plaintiff do recover from the defendant the profits, gains and advantages which the defendant has received or made or that have accrued to it by reason of its said infringement of said reissue letters patent No. 12192 since the date of reissue letters patent, and also the damages which the plaintiff has sustained by reason of said infringement, to be assessed as provided by law.

VII. That this cause be and is hereby referred to the auditor of this Court to take and state an account of said gains, profits and advantages and to assess such damages, and to report thereon with all convenient speed ; and that the defendant herein, Chicago Film Exchange, its officers, directors, attorneys, clerks, servants and workmen be and are hereby directed to attend before said Auditor, from time to time, as required, and to produce before him such books, papers, vouchers and documents and to submit to such oral examination as the said Auditor may require.

VIII. That the plaintiff do recover of the defendant its costs in this suit to be taxed by the Clerk of this Court.

IX. That defendant's motion to strike out parts of rebuttal testimony of the plaintiff as not being proper evidence in rebuttal, and defendant's motion to be allowed to take further testimony strictly in surrebuttal, heretofore reserved for the final hearing, are hereby denied.

WENDELL P. STAFFORD, Justice.

Decree entered December 23, 1911.

The Independents Still on Top
Here are the Cold Facts:

On January 8th, 1912, the United States District Court for the Southern District New York dismissed the suit of the Motion Picture Patents Co. vs. the Yankee lm Company, and also dismissed the suit of the Motion Picture Patents Company s. Steiner, Miles and others. The court awarded costs to Yankee Film Co., Steiner, Miles d others, and $150. additional in each case, because of the unreasonable and vexious conduct of the Motion Picture Patents Co. These suits were begun in November, 10, and motions for preliminary injunction were made in them and granted by the . S. Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, but on appeal to the Circuit ourt of Appeals for the Southern District of New York, the decisions were reversed d the injunctions were vacated. The surrender by the Motion Picture Patents Co. Edison reissue patent 12037 caused these suits to abate and was the ground of e dismissal.

In the Matter of the Recent Decision in Washington, D. C., against the hicago Film Exchange, for infringement of the Edison Film Patent 12192, the facts re as follows:

The Case was Argued in May, 1911, and was not decided until December 21st, 911. No opinion was written by the Court. A decree was entered on December 23rd, 911, for an injunction and an accounting under one of the claims of the patent; but on e same day an order was entered suspending the issue of the injunction and accountg pending an appeal, which has been already taken.

On March 10, 1902, the Circuit Court of Appeals, for the Second Circuit, in considring the original Edison patent for this film, held that the claim for the film was invalid, aying:

> "The Film was Not New, and if the other characteristics of the product are not new, or are new only in the sense that they add to the article merely a superiority of finish or a greater accuracy of detail, the claim is destitute of patentable novelty."

Edison Then Reissued the Patent, claiming this same film in a narrower way. s no opinion was written by the Court in Washington, it is impossible to tell why this ame reasoning did not lead it to hold the reissue invalid. Our Counsel advise us that n their opinion it is invalid, and that they are confident that this decision will be reersed on appeal. This appeal will probably be argued some time during the Spring of 912. We are advised by our Counsel that a further appeal can be taken to the United tates Supreme Court, and that such an appeal would probably be reached for argunent about the Fall of 1914.

WITH the STING and BLOOM of the West in his cheeks, blew into the AMERICAN'S office one day last week. "Came," he said, "to find out just where AMERICAN FILMS were made."

"ABSOLUTELY TRUE TO LIFE—THOSE COWBOYS WERE REAL COWBOYS"—COULDN'T FOOL HIM—"WHY SOME OF THOSE BOYS WERE BOW-LEGGED FROM HORSE-BACK RIDING!"

Contagious, wasn't it—and highly gratifying! "Gallery-God Applause is the Sincerest Form of Flattery," is an old Theatrical Wag and We Must have felt like the Star Heavy Lead on a first night when the Gallery Burst into Howls of Delight!

AMERICAN FILMS depict the West as it is to-day—the Great Rolling Prairies, Mighty Mountain Ranges and Sylvan Dales—with its rough, almost primitive life, its Healthy, Wealthy, Quick-witted, Emotional Inhabitants!

AMERICAN photography is Stereoscopic, clean-cut, and flawless, with backgrounds of surpassing beauty, obtainable only in Beautiful, Historic, Dreamy El Cajon Valley, Southern California.

AMERICAN PANTOMIME is founded on a stock company especially selected, drilled and equipped to produce the HIGHEST POSSIBLE GRADE OF WESTERN PICTURES.

"THE MORMON"

Release January 25th. Approx. Length 1,000 Feet (Western Drama).

A tale of the early days when wagon-trains were held up by Mormons in the hope of forcing white women to join their polygamous faith. Stirring, historically true, charged with quick action. This film will pack houses. It's an epoch-making picture well worth your particular attention.

"LOVE & LEMONS"

Release January 29th. Approx. Length 1,000 Feet (Comedy-Educational).

Combining the educational with the story-interest. Will teach much concerning the lemon industry of South California. Throughout runs a love story, absorbing, dainty, delightful, centering about the purchase of a lemon grove by a charming Eastern Miss.

"THE BEST POLICY"

Release February 1. Approx. Length 1,000 Feet (Western Comedy).

A tale of three train robbers retiring into the bush to divide the swag. It's "double-cross" upon "double-cross." Screamingly funny. A bully good story with a laugh in every picture.

"THE REAL ESTATE FRAUD"

Release February 5. Approx. Length 1,000 Feet (Western Social-Drama).

A charming, delightful story centering about the efforts of two real estate sharks to swindle an inexperienced but pugilistic young man and how that attempt was frustrated by the "Boss's" own stenographer.

FILM STORIES.

BROWN PERPLEXED (Cricks & Martin—Jan. 19).—Did your wife ever send you on a shopping tour? You surely can imagine what it would be like to be told to get a dozen eggs, a dozen oranges, a headcheese, a rabbit, a string of sausages, an umbrella, a pair of boots and a few other things of equal importance. When these articles commence to do unbelievable things it will seem different Guess it would astonish you.

BUFFALO HUNT IN COCHIN-CHINA (Mondia—Jan. 17).—The African water buffaloes are mammoth in size and frequent swampy lands. The hunters slowly round up the herd and then single out one of the beasts. He is driven down to the spot where the huntsmen lay in wait and is shot. Then the party gather about and divide the trophies.

A ROMANCE OF THE ALPS (Meisters—Jan. 21).—Gretchen is loved by Hans, a game warden. But Hans is not liked by Gretchen's stern father. Gretchen is also admired by Rudolf, a bold, bad fellow of uncouth appearance and little refinement. Hans catches Rudolf poaching on the Baron's preserves, of which he is the guard. He arrests him. but Rudolf turns the tables, captures Gretchen in the bargain and would do his worst by each were it not for faithful Koenig, the hunter-dog of Gretchen's. Koenig runs home, gives the old man a warning bark and sets off on the trail. All are apprehended, the two prisoners are freed and the guilty are brought to the authorities for swift punishment.

THE BEAR TRAP (California—Jan. 21).—Baptiste is a desperado whom the police are after for slaying a man in the woods. John Baxter is sent out after him. He goes alone and he gets the man. They make a camp and John goes for wood, which is pointed out to him by Baptiste, who has cleverly led him into a bear trap. The officer is caught in its vise-like grip and left to die. But the Creator had willed otherwise, for Baptiste has still a spark of manhood and he goes back, after reading a chapter in his Bible on "Do unto others, etc.," releases John, carries him to police headquarters, and again makes off. He is soon captured, however, and brought back to meet his reward.

FIRE AND ROCK (Savoy—Jan. 20).—Pietro gets work in the mines and his wife takes a humble little hut for their new home. Their employer is a brute and a driver. He admires Pietro's pretty bride and tries to win her from her loving husband. Twice he is thwarted by the watchful lover-husband. Then he gets her alone and attacks her. But a friend overhears her cries and Pietro soon has the older man in his power. He binds him and together Pietro and his wife flee to the mountains. He tells his comrades and as the mine owner is freed and starts in pursuit of the fleeing pair, Pietro's friends spring a blast upon the pursuers and as they pass the point all are slain by the explosion.

WHEN GRANDPA WOOED GRANDMA (Deutches Bioscope—Jan. 20).—Over a hundred years ago this took place, for grandpa and grandma told it to father and mother long, long years ago. And so, it is really the story of great-grandpa and great-grandma. They wore pretty, picturesque clothes then, and they read by candle light and used spinning wheels and stately coaches, and powdered their hair, for it was in the days of Washington.

You see, great-grandpa had to elope with great-grandma and great-grandma had always kept the letter telling about it. And so, when grandpa and grandma wanted to wed and grandma's father would not permit it, why they did the same thing as the older pair had done, and when caught, great-grandma showed the letter to great-grandpa and he had to admit that he had set a wrong example, and so all was forgiven.

THE STORM (Aquila—Jan. 19).—Count Dolardo is a banker and a man, until the opening of the story, of extreme wealth. Suddenly, as if by a cloudburst, he finds himself ruined. And he takes his life, leaving his daughter Rosita in the care of her lover, Ricardo Novelli. But Ricardo's father is also a noble and a suicide is a disgrace to him and he forbids his son to wed the daughter of the self-murdered Count. So, Ricardo marries without his consent and is banished and disowned. Ricardo, two years later, meets with a tragic death and in her despair his beautiful young wife goes to the gate of Ricardo's father's home and pins a note to her child and sends it in. The tot toddles to its grandfather, who learns from the note who she is and that her mother is about to take her own life It is too much and he rushes out and rescues the widowed daughter-in-law just before she can jump from the high cliff.

WONDERFUL VALLEY STURRA (Aquila—Jan. 19).—In the Italian Alps lies this wonderful valley, its mountains piling up on all sides with 'the majesty of their Creator's grandest building. Deep gorges carry the swift rushing waters down the valley and on to the sea, the snow melting on the hill tops as the water runs its way. Beautiful and picturesque villages, such as you have dreamed of visiting some day "when that bank-roll gets big enough," villages such as you have read of, but have never seen. Tiny huts, big houses, all gabled and thatched, with queer fences and funny barns and outhouses.

LIEUT. ROSE AND THE ROYAL VISIT (Clarendon—Jan. 15).—In this story the British naval officer through shrewd judgment and much skill, to say nothing of a daring beyond most heroes, saves the life of his sovereign and his queen. Anarchists have plotted to blow up the pier upon the arrival of the royal party, and that failing, to blow up the warship which His Majesty later boards for an inspection. Lieut. Rose secures the dynamite from the pier and tosses it into the sea, he then learns of the second plot, follows the anarchists out in their boat, dons a diving suit and sinks below the waters, where he meets the diver of the plotters, combats with him, slays him, and sends the bomb aloft to the rescuers above. The guilty ones are pursued, caught and brought to justice.

SMILER HAS STAGE FEVER (Cricks & Martin—Jan. 19).—Smiler watches a pair of tumblers at a vaudeville show and straightway he begins to imitate them. He is thrown out of the garden after breaking a table and chairs in his antics. Then he hits the highway and from here on it is one screamingly funny series of attempts on Smiler's part to become an athlete. We won't tell you all he does, it would spoil your fun when you see the film.

WAGES OF SIN (Washington) (Jan. 18).—Two prospectors slay and rob an old miner. "When thieves fall out honest men have their way." Again is another parable proven true. The two murderers suspect each other. First one gets a bottle of wolf poison and drops some into the steak he has cooked for his partner. The other repeats the act with another bottle, putting some into the tea he has drawn for his pal. Both die from the results. And thus do honest men have their chance in that ragged land of gold and wilderness.

THE WHITE MAN'S VOW (Mohawk) (Jan. 19th.)—A settler leaves his wife and child and journeys on through the forest with his comrade. They are fired on by redskins and the married man is captured. The other escapes and gets back home. To save his own life, the captured man pretends to be in love with the Indian chief's daughter and he is at once taken into the tribe as a redman. He longs for his wife and child, runs away, and by a strange chance, his wife, who had meantime set out to find him, comes across him as he lays exhausted from travel, lack of food and abuse. The Indian maid also meets him with her own Indian lover and she relinquishes all claim on the white man as soon as she learns he is already married and the father of a child.

THE CONVICT'S SISTER (Hepwix—Jan. 16).—William Hawkins is a "bobby" of His Majesty's police, and William is deeply in love with Mary Robbins. Mary has a brother who has not walked the straight and narrow path and as a consequence he has been sent to prison. He escapes and goes to Mary for aid. William calls and becomes suspicious. But John takes in the situation from his hiding place and gives himself up to the officer. Love triumphs over duty, however, and William lets John go, giving him a bit to help him on his way.

HILDA'S LOVERS (Hepwix—Jan. 18).—Hilda is admired by two lovers, a police "bobby" and a civilian. In jest the policeman arrests the other as an escaped convict and locks him in a closet. In revenge the other pretends to be dead and the rival is then arrested on a charge of murder. All is eventually straightened out to the satisfaction of everyone save the two lovers, who discover that Hilda is already engaged to a sailor-lad.

THE LIFE OF A SMUGGLER (Deutches Biograph—Jan. 16).—A smuggler has a sweetheart who is desired by one of the coast guards. This revenue officer makes himself obnoxious to the girl and insults her more than once. Her lover threatens the military man, but once his back is turned the coward repeats his acts. One night the smugglers land with their cargo of goods which they convey to the cove. The revenue officer is on the watch but so is the sweetheart, and when he finds her she lures him away from the smugglers, though her lover sees them, and in a fit of jealousy springs after his hated enemy. A fight ensues, other guards arive and the smuggler is arrested. In her despair the girl runs to the sea and gives herself to the pounding waves!

SOLOMONIC WISDOM (Deutche's Biograph—Jan. 21).—Herr Carl Grossman goes to business, leaving his charming wife to her own diversions. Herr Emiel Kinderkopff calls on Frau Grossman and gets into trouble when the husband returns.

PRACTICAL JOKERS (Messters—Jan. 21).—George and Bill get together one dull day at their club and decide to start things going. They advertise in the papers that a man would like to meet a marriageable woman at a certain restaurant, and in another advertisement that a woman would like to meet a marriageable man in the same place. Result: A room full of clamoring men and women. The joke is spotted as are the jokers, hence the chase. The two are caught and soundly snow-balled.

TROMBANA RETURNS (Deutches Biograph—Jan. 21).—Mr. Trombana returns from the United States and calls on his two fair cousins. He gets into trouble as soon as he lands at the depot, and when he arrives at the house he makes a wreck of the place in no time at all. He finally jumps out of a third story window, lands on his feet and makes off, the girls after him. The rest is a mad chase in which indescribable trouble is created.

A FATAL CONFUSION (Messters—Jan. 15).—Did you ever send two letters to two different people and put them in the wrong envelopes? Then you are a lucky mortan, for it is one of the most embarrassing things you can do. What happens is shown in this picture.

WIDOW JENKINS' ADMIRERS (Jan. 23).—When Widow Jenkins publishes the news that she has been left a valuable estate and other properties, including a grocery store, all the eligible men of the neighborhood seek to win her hand. The most persistent of her admirers is Alkali Ike, who absolutely refuses to remove himself from her immediate vicinity and guards her so well that none of the other suitors are given a fair opportunity to propose. After many vain efforts to gain Mrs. Jenkins' consent to marry, Alkali evolves a wonderful scheme. Not only is the widow a grocer, but she is an agent of Uncle Sam in the capacity of the postmistress of Snakeville, so Alkali addreses a letter to himself in which is stated that his grandfather has died and left him a fortune. His surmise that the widow will open the letter proves correct and Mrs. Jenkins now readily consents to marry Alkali. They are hardly more than safely tied when a pretty young woman steps into the store and asks for Alkali, presenting him with a letter which reads that if he marry the young lady, his cousin, he will receive half her fortune of $200,000. This is more than Alkali can stand and he collapses.

ALIAS BIILY SARGENT (Jan. 25).—John Steele, a wholesale jeweler, is visited in his office by a Mr. William Sargent, representing himself to be a diamond broker, and a probable big customer. After examining Steele's stock of diamonds, Sargent says he will consider the purchase and make an appointment with him later. That night Sargent calls up Steele's home and leaves word with Mrs. Steele to have her husband meet him at the Arms Hotel at 8 o'clock. Steele returns a few minutes later with tickets for the opera and his wife forgets to give him the message, until after they have returned from the theater. The incident causes a serious breach between them until Mrs. Steele puts detectives on the trail of Sargent and learns a week later that the "diamond dealer" has been arrested and is about to serve a term in the penitentiary for big jewel robberies. Steele now realizes that instead of losing a big sale his wife, in all probability, has saved him from financial ruin.

ECONOMY (Jan. 26).—Jinks and his wife decide to save money and Mrs. Jinks carries with her a small savings bank into which Jinks is forced to contribute all their savings. There is some inconvenience in the new scheme for instead of taxicabs they walk. Jinks must roll his own cigarettes, eat thirty-cent meals and wear $6 suits. At the end of two hours they have saved just $50. Later in the day Mrs. Jinks returns home with a large hat box. It contains an elegant creation of the milliner's art, but the price tag bears the figures $50. Jinks is so indignant that he smashes the hat over his wife's head and resolves never to save another penny—never, never again.

DOOLEY'S REWARD (Jan. 26).—Dooley is a homeless cur who is tormented by mischievous boys, chased by the policeman and generally mistreated until one day he chivalrously picks up a lady's purse, takes it to her home and is justly rewarded in receiving a good home, where he is cared for and loved for the rest of his days.

THE OATH OF HIS OFFICE (Jan. 27).—Bob Graham gains the consent of Grace Allen to marry before he leaves for the fall round-up. Bob takes with him a locket given him by Grace as a token of remembrance. Jed Brown, who has also loved Grace, goes with the punchers across the range and when opportunity offers steals the locket and forges a note which he returns and gives to Grace, making her believe that Bob has jilted her. Womanlike, she turns her affections to Jed and they are married. Bob learns of the trick and makes a solemn vow some day to get even. The opportunity presents itself when Jed, a few months later, is pursued by a crowd of cattlemen, who threaten to lynch him for beating his wife. Jed goes to the sheriff, who, to his dismay, proves to be Bob, and begs for protection. Bob is about to turn the man over to the mob but he is reminded of his duty when Jed thrusts a Bible in front of him and begs him to remember his oath of office. Bob gives the man protection, but going to the home of his former sweetheart finds that the mistreatment she has received at Jed's hands has resulted in her death.

LUBIN.

A JUST VERDICT (Jan. 18).—Dorothy Ellis and Frank Dean are in love, but Dorothy's father objects owing to Frank's lack of wealth. While the two sweethearts are engaged in target practice, Ellis angrily orders Dean to leave and a quarrel ensues, which same is overheard by the servants. Dorothy tearfully pleads for Dean, but in vain and he leaves, forgetting his revolver (upon which is engraved his monogram) which Mr. Ellis finds, and places in his pocket. John Warner, a friend of Mr. Ellis, arrives for a short visit the same day that Ellis receives a telegram informing him that, through his reckless speculations, the bank will be compelled to close its doors. Ellis, after the household has retired, writes a letter to Dorothy, enclosing the telegram, which he leaves upon the library table, from the drawer of which he takes Dean's revolver and shoots himself.

In the meantime, Warner, who is a somnambulist, has arisen from his bed, donned his bathrobe and decends to the library, just as Ellis has fallen dead with his head resting upon the table. As Warner, still asleep, reaches Ellis, he stumbles over the body, one hand grasps the revolver, the other the letter. Awakening with the revolver in his hand and seeing the dead body, Warner decides that he has killed Ellis while asleep, and, panic stricken, rushes back to his room. Unconsciously he has slipped the letter in his bathrobe. When he reaches his room, he discovers blood stains and, as he is called by the excited members of the household, he hurriedly removes the robe and places it in the bottom drawer of the bureau.

The police are summonded and the body is found alongside of which lies the revolver with Dean's name upon it. The butler tells of the quarrel which he overheard between the two men and upon the strength of this evidence, Dean is arrested, accused of the murder. Warner is summoned to serve on the jury which will try the case and determines to save the latter, whom he knows to be innocent. The day of the trial arrives and Dorothy, ill from the shock, is confined to her home. The household maid, in cleaning up the guest chamber which had been occupied by Warner and vacant since the tragedy, finds the bathrobe from the pocket of which the note drops. She hurries to her mistress, who, amazed at the maid's discovery, is quick to realize that she can save her lover's life. Hurriedly donning a wrap and hat, she hastens to the stable, saddes and mounts her horse and starts for the courtroom, arriving just in time to prevent Warner's confession and save Dean from conviction.

A COMPROMISE (Jan. 20).—Mr. Wallace, a traveling salesman, just returned home to find that Mrs. Wallace has all new servants and very pretty at that. Mr. Wallace just can't resist the temptation of kissing them. It does not take his wife long to see what is going on and she immediately discharges them. The next day he finds all new male help. Mrs. Wallace thinks up a scheme whereby she will cure her husband of flirting. She starts in flirting with the help. Mr. Wallace gets sore and fires all the men. Mr. and Mrs. compromise and now we find all colored servants in the Wallace household.

A BOARDING-HOUSE ROMANCE (Jan. 20).—Bessie and Ned, sweethearts, are boarding at the same house. One day at the dinner table they have a quarrel which should amount to nothing, but Ned tells the landlady and she, in a spirit of mischief, suggests that he shall pay her a little attention and make Bessie jealous. The star boarder sees it and makes a similar suggestion to Bessie. Then the landlady gets jealous, the game on both sides works too well and everything is on edge until all parties see their folly and the real lovers kiss and make up.

THE LADY POLICE (Jan. 22).—At the recent election at Clearfield, the suffragettes made a clean sweep. The first thing the women did was to start a new police force. A number of the bravest women in the town were appointed policewomen. The new "coppers" have no trouble in arresting prisoners, in fact, it is the ambition of all the men in town to be arrested by the fair cops. The prisoners are entertained royally by the police. They do such a business that it is necessary to put a sign outside of the police station reading, "No More Prisoners, the Cells All Filled." The married women of the town hold a meeting to protest against the police force, claiming that their husbands are in jail in place of home. They all go in a body to the police station, where a riot starts, the wives dragging their husbands away from the lady police and taking them home. The picture closes with the lady police all angry because their nice prisoners have been taken away, and the whole force have a good, long cry.

THE HEART OF A "BOSS" (Jan. 24).—Riding one day with his little daughter, Madeline, in his automobile, the bank president, Charles Brandt, sees a little newsboy knocked down in the street. He stops the machine, picks the boy up and little Madeline binds up a wounded arm with her handkerchief. Then the bank president takes the newsboy home. Some few weeks later, as the boy is selling his papers, a letter is put into his hand instructing him to call at a certain lawyer's office. There he finds the attorney dismissing his office boy for idleness and unclean appearance and the newsboy is engaged for the position. Years roll by and little Hughy Johnson, now grown to manhood, becomes a political boss; he is the powerful ruler of his district. Brandt is arraigned for supposed misuse of the bank funds and the case goes against him. There is only one appeal, which is a pardon by the Governor of the state, and this he refuses. Boss Johnson overhears the decision and brings his influence to bear on the situation. He tells the Governor that he believes Brandt has been made a scapegoat and unless he is pardoned he (Johnson), will withdraw his influence in favor of the Governor at the coming election. The Governor pardons Brandt and at the election both the Governor and Boss Johnson are defeated. Brandt is reinstated at the bank and hearing that Johnson is "down and out," visits him. He finds the boss dejected and he is caressing the little girls' handkerchief which he has treasured for the past many years. Brandt offers Johnson a position of trust in the bank, which is accepted. Eventually Madeline falls in love with the ex-boss and the picture closes with an embrace and the engagement ring.

THE OFFICE FAVORITE (Jan. 25).—Spike Martin, a crook, makes a specialty of office safes and he is out of a job. He persuades Marie, his sweetheart, to answer a "Want Ad." The woman presents herself at the insurance office of Donald Douglass, secures the position, dresses well and her blue eyes do the rest. The office staff, from John Cameron, the manager, to Jimme Watkins, the boy, dislike Marie especially for the reason that the newcomer is working to the disadvantage of Josie Olmstead, the favorite stenographer, and not only crowding her out of a job, but her prospect of winning the boss, to whom she has become attached. The inevitable happens, despite her four years' faithful service. Douglass resolves to part with her and make Marie the confidential. He consequently writes two letters, the one dismissing Josie and the other doubling Marie's salary. This letter is dated St. Valentine's Day, with a remark that he, the boss, "hoped she would understand." He is then called away to New Orleans, and handing the envelopes, still open, to Jimmie, instructs him to deliver them. Jimmie does a very reprehensible thing. In his love for Josie he transposes the two letters. Marie getting the supposed discharge, informs her crook lover and they agree to rob the safe, and get even. Josie, feeling secure in her position, is working late one night when "the job is on." She hears the crooks at work and 'phones for the police. Spike, seeing that they are discovered, floors Josie with his club. The crooks are arrested and Josie sent home. Douglass, still in New Orleans, reads of the robbery and quickly returns. Jimmie confesses his part in transposing the two letters. The boss forgives him and restores the little office favorite, Josie, to confidence, and all are now waiting for the minister.

THROUGH THE DRIFTS (Jan. 27).—Mrs. Alder, a young widow with a little daughter, Ruth, is in charge of the general store and Post Office in a northwestern lumber settlement. She is courted by two men, John Holmes, the post-rider, who carries the mail bags to the different posts, and the other suitor is Frank Headly, a young lumberman. Mrs. Alder favors Holmes, and is indifferent to Frank, who is inclined to drinking, but otherwise a good fellow. One day Holmes sets out in the sleigh to go to the next post office, and takes with him little Ruth, who wants a sleigh ride. They are caught in a blizzard and lose their way. When the horse gives out Holmes shows the "yellow streak," abandoning little Ruth amongst the drifts and starts out for himself. Next morning, back at the store, when Holmes and Ruth do not appear,

Mrs. Alder goes in search of help. Frank is in the saloon, the other men are at work in the woods. He starts out on snowshoes and after a search, finds Ruth cuddled up in the abandoned sleigh. He knows Holmes is a coward. Headly takes the child home. Mrs. Alder's joy at the return of Ruth is clouded by the absence of Holmes. Frank shows his unselfish love by keeping silent as to Holmes's cowardly act, and again going out in search of him. He finds Holmes and succeeds in getting him back to the post office after superhuman efforts. In the meantime little Ruth has recovered consciousness and has told her mother what happened. Mrs. Alder soon sees the difference between the two men and rewards the heroic lumberman with her hand, the heart will doubtless follow.

MELIES.

COWBOY vs. TENDERFOOT (Feb. 1).—Dick Ford, a young Easterner, just arriving in the West, is introduced by Dawson to the latter's daughter Triss, in whose eyes he meets with great favor. But he has a treacherous rival in Jose, a cowboy, whose suit, however, is not at all favored by Triss. Matters come to a stage where action is necessary, so Dick writes Jose, giving him warning that if he comes between him an Triss "one of us will be killed." Jose cunningly communicates the threat to Mr. Dawson, but the shock, instead of having the desired effect, causes apoplexy and proves fatal. Jose flees, leaving the torn note behind.

Scene from "Cowboy vs. Tenderfoot"—(Melies.)

The sheriff arrives to find part of the note, containing the words, "one of us will be killed," and signed "Dick Ford," and circumstances would seem to be very strong against Triss' lover. He is jailed. Not satisfied with even this revenge, Jose and his friends storm the jail and drag Dick to be lynched. Meantime, however, Triss finds the other half of the note, addressed to Jose, and the real story is divulged. In a race against death, she and the sheriff come upon the lynching party in time to save Dick and mete out justice to the worst of villains.

EDISON.

THE STOLEN NICKEL (Jan. 23).—Little Billy Harmon wants very much to buy a live mud turtle from a small boy friend of his, but his father and mother do not believe in giving little boys money to spend. Now it so happens that the next day Billy meets little Bessie Smith on some little errand, carrying mother's pocketbook, full of small change. In showing it she drops the money and Billy helps her to pick it up and it isn't until she has gone on her way that he discovers a five-cent piece which they had not noticed, and then the temptation assails him and after some little struggle with himself, he finally yields and puts the coveted coin in his pocket. He buys the turtle and then his conscience begins to trouble him and he sees visions and dreams. The next morning he is unable to eat any breakfast and finally decides that the only way out of the difficulty is to go to work to earn the money and pay back the full amount. This he proceeds to do in installments, one cent at a time, the fourth cent being bargained for with his mother for washing the dishes. She leaves him to his task to go to a woman's society and he drops a plate. Of course, he feels that this ends everything, and leaving a note to the effect that a white rag hung out as a signal that his mother is not mad will be the only means of bringing him home again, he goes forth to get his last penny. This is hard to earn and he is finally obliged to sell his pocket knife, a cherished treasure. And then he returns the five pennies to Mrs. Smith, and Mrs. Smith, noting the difference between five pennies and one nickel, understands what the small boy's problem has been. His father, coming by, is told by Mrs. Smith of the circumstances and goes home to tell the little mother where they stand. Of course, when they understand the boy's temptation and what it had led to and how he had worked the problem out for himself, the white rag is immediately hung out and they moreover decide to give him five cents a week to spend for himself.

FATHER'S BLUFF (Jan. 24).—We see one of those families in which everybody works but father, and then we are soon made acquainted with the way father voices his protests against any insubordination or thwarting of his selfishness, by a threat to end his life.

A young sewing machine agent comes to fix the machine and incidentally to make love to father's daughter. As father is afraid that this will take one of his laboring serfs away from him, he objects to the flirtation and orders the young man from the house. The young man drives up a day or so later in his buggy and unloads a keg of gunpowder, a bottle of poison, a rope, a knife and other murderous-looking weapons which he proceeds to deposit in the woodshed. He then wins the girl and her mother to his way of thinking and they decide to call father's bluff. The next time that he makes some outrageous demand upon them they are to rebel. The time is not long in coming and the young man promptly appears upon the scene. Father seizes a long pair of shears and lifts them high above his head with the announced determination of ending his own life. But contrary to the usual custom, nobody stops him. There is an embarrasing pause while father does not know exactly what to do. The shears do not descend and he makes a second attempt. This time the young man takes him gently but firmly by the wrist and leads him to the woodshed. There father finds everything prepared for his easy and quick dispatch and the family bidding him a fond farewell, leave him to his fate. Then he begins to understand his situation. He must either make good or lay down his hand. When he suddenly discovers that the fuse to the gunpowder keg on which he is sitting has been lighted by the young man, he makes a very quick decision and the cure is instantaneous. Consequently when the young lovers come from the house again they find papa industriously sawing wood, an exercise which he has long denied himself, and he shamefacedly apologizes for his bad behavior.

FOR THE CAUSE OF THE SOUTH (Jan. 26).—The story opens with auntie telling her niece, who is about to marry, why she has never become a wife; and here the picture fades to a young girl in her teens who has fallen in love with a West Point Cadet prior to the opening of the war. News of the beginning of war is received, the girl goes South and the young man is appointed Captain of a cavalry of the north. The girl's father joins the Southern troops as a Colonel and under orders from Robert E. Lee, he attempts to carry a message to Stonewall Jackson, on which the fate of Richmond depends. In crossing the lines he is attacked and chased by the Union troops, but eventually reaches his home, where he proceeds to defend himself. Firing through a hole in the door, they defend themselves from being captured. At the critical moment, the young Unionist Captain, with whom the daughter is in love, arrives upon the scene and here occurs that strong dramatic situation in which the girl is forced to choose between her loyalty to her country and her love for the man; but loyalty to the South wins and she is forced to kill the man she loves.

THE NEW EDITOR (Jan. 27).—Miss Jessie Brown, a business-like young woman from the East, has just completed negotiations for the purchase of a newspaper in a town of the far West—Tough Notch by name. Immediately upon her arrival in town she assumes the duties of her office as editor of her new possession, the "Tough Notch Daily Observer." The first thing attracting her eye is a sign on the wall which reads, "Don't shoot the Editor, he's doing his best." She treats this matter lightly, but the importance of it dawns upon her shortly after when she hears several volleys of shots being fired in the immediate vicinity. Peering through the partly open door she beholds a surprising and rather terrifying sight—a crowd of cowboys amusing themselves by shooting at objects and whooping like so many wild Indians. Startled at this apparent lawlessness, she forthwith has the sign on the wall changed from masculine to feminine and then writes a scathing article about half tipsy cowboys who take possession of the streets, etc.

The following day this article appears in the newspaper and creates great indignation among the cowboys, who swear that they will wreak vengeance by shooting up the editor. Mounting their horses they start off to carry out their threat, stopping several times on the way to imbibe courage. Arriving at the "Daily Observer's" office, they dash pell-mell with drawn revolvers, to find to their great surprise and astonishment only the charming Miss Jassie Brown, who pleads guilty to having written the article which caused their wrath. The transition of their behavior is highly amusing, for instead of carrying out their threat, they each pay for a year's subscription to help the new editor boost the good cause along.

U. S. VOLUNTEER LIFE-SAVING CORPS, NEW YORK CITY (Jan. 27).—Among New York's many municipal activities there is one whose importance is seldom realized by the average citizen—namely, the United States Life-saver's work. Even the bootblacks at the Battery form a trained division and are ready to respond at a moment's notice to a call for their services. A typical rescue of this division is shown in the film. During the progress of the picture we also see how young girls are taught to swim in the Municipal Baths, and how they are trained to do rescue work. We are shown the work of the Life Guards at Coney Island and can well believe that, through their vigilance, many a bather is saved from the fatal effects of carelessness or over-confidence. In this connection views are shown at close range of different methods of rescue, showing how the drowning man is prevented from dragging his rescuer under water. The close of the picture shows the rescue work among the tide rips of Hell Gate.

VITAGRAPH.

THE BLIND MINER (Jan. 22).—"Old Tom," the blind miner, lives with his daughter Mary, who is courted by Martin West, an industrious miner. On his way to work Martin stops to see Mary, and steals from her a kiss, which is overheard by Old Tom's keen ear.

Martin, with the rest of the miners, descends the shaft and they are seen picking into the great black sides of their chamber, when the dull, sickening sound of an explosion is heard. Quick as a flash Martin and his associates beat a hasty retreat, trying to escape from the fatal gases which are fast filling the mine. Reaching a corner in the mine, they fasten a brattice cloth to one of the timbers, diverting the foul fumes.

When the towns-people hear of the explosion they know too well what it means. Every means known to rescue the imprisoned miners is employed. Mary caries the news to her father, Old Tom, and he bids her lead him to the mouth of the shaft, where he implores the foreman to allow him to descend, saying: "The blind can hear what the eye cannot see." His wish is granted and he descends with two miners in safety helmets. Old Tom will not be hampered with these attachments, preferring to depend upon his past experiences in the mines, appearing to be filled with a superhuman endurance. They press on and on, led by the blind miner, who feels the way to the famished and near dead men, who are led and dragged to the bottom of the shaft, from which they are lifted and restored to their loved ones. Martin rushes to Mary's side, followed by Old Tom, who is led by the hand. Tom is embraced by his daughter and his future son in-law, while the surrounding towns-people cheer and hurrah.

JEAN INTERVENES (Jan. 23).—"Love me, love my dog" does not appeal to Billy Hallock. He is very jealous of his wife's attentions to her dog "Jean." Florence Hart and Dick Green, a couple of young friends who are engaged to be married, call on Billy and Sue Hallock, and during their visit, they call Billy's attention in a [illegible] his wife's fondness for "Jean." [illegible] this incident, Billy and Sue, having [illegible] for the theater, are about to take [illegible], when the maid is unexpectedly [illegible] Mrs. Hallock refuses to go out and leave her dog alone. This convinces Billy that she cares more for her dog than she does [illegible] he informs her that it is time for them to separate. He leaves her. Some months later, "Jean," who notices the lonesomeness of his mistress and the different atmosphere of the home, grows very restless and seems to grasp the cause of it all. During the separation of Billy and Sue "Jean" has occasionally met Mr. Hallock, and she formulates a plan to reconcile her mistress and former master.

Mrs. Hallock is sewing on some tiny garments in preparation for the reception of a little stranger when "Jean," unnoticed, steals one of the tiny garments and runs off to where she knows she will find her master, and insists upon presenting it to him. Billy suddenly realizes what it all means. He hastily follows "Jean" to the home of his wife, where he lovingly and tenderly enfolds her in his arms and asks for forgiveness for his uncalled for and foolish jealousy of the thoughtful and faithful "Jean."

CAPTAIN BARNACLE'S MESSMATE (Jan. 24).—Captain Bunce comes ashore after a cruise, meets some old friends and as a consequence, finds himself [illegible] in a strange town, with very little cash. He goes to a lodging house kept by a widow, one Mrs. Mulligan. He takes a room, but when asked for his rent in advance, he cannot pay it. Mrs. "M," however, is anxious to marry again and thinks she sees in Bunce an easy victim, so she takes him as a lodger, and when some weeks later he is still bankrupt, proposes that she will cancel the debt if he will marry her. Bunce consents, but as the wedding day draws near, he repents and tries to escape. She brings him back and takes away his shoes and his hat so he cannot escape.

He gets the servant to send a letter to Barnacle, telling of his plight. Barnacle arrives on the scene, pretends to sympathize with Mrs. M. and to be horrified at Bunce's lack of taste and at last gains admittance to his friend. There he sternly upbraids Bunce for his conduct, but left alone with him for a minute, he slips him a coil of rope, and also, wishing to be strictly honest, deposits the amount due Mrs. Mulligan on the table. He then gets Bunce's shoes, locks him in the room and offers to go for a parson. Instead of that, he goes around to the back yard where Bunce has let himself down out of the window, helps him over the fence and they start to run. Mrs. M. sees them and gives chase, but they reach Barnacle's boat, which is anchored at the pier, and escape. The final scene sees Bunce sitting at Barnacle's fireside, smoking his pipe in peace.

LOVE FINDS THE WAY (Jan. 26.—Jack Alger and Margaret Durand are very much in love with each other. Wallace Hardy, shrewd and calculating, has made up his mind to make Margaret his wife at all odds. He has the advantage of Mr. Durand's respect for his business ability, while Jack is only a clerk in the employ of Mr. Durand. Margaret's father receives an urgent demand to pay a note for $50,000. This he is unable to do and Hardy offers to loan it, with the understanding that he can have Margaret. She demurs and declares her love for Jack, who is immediately discharged. Hardy is triumphant and Margaret demurs. Jack loses no time in securing a position as a railroad employee, making himself generally useful at one of the way stations.

Hardy insists upon marrying Margaret at once and her father, with his daughter and his would-be son-in-law, start for the parson's in Mr. Durand's automobile. At the crossing near the railroad station where Jack is employed, the automobile becomes fractious. Jack sees Margaret and while Hardy and her father go for gasoline, she tells Jack of her father's plan. Jack glances at a hand car standing nearby and proposes an elopement. Immediately he and his fellow workmen lift the car on the track, Mary takes her place with Jack at the handles and they are off. Durand and Hardy jump into the automobile and the chase is on. The two elopers speed the hand car down the track, keeping slightly in advance. For miles it is nip and tuck, until they come to a trestle over which the hand car spins. The pursuers are obliged to make a long cut around the railroad and find themselves underneath the crossing. At a safe distance from the point where they left their followers, the elopers meet a minister on horseback. They press him into service, take him on the hand car gliding along at a fifty-mile rate, and are married. Hardy, with Mr. Durand, meet them further down the track, but too late. They have lost, Jack has won. After a little coaxing Margaret brings her father over to her side and the newly wedded couple receive his blessing.

FOR THE HONOR OF THE FAMILY (Jan. 27).—On account of his extravagance and dissipation, Col. Ryder disowns his son and casts him off. Guy, resolved to redeem himself, joins an Indian regiment as a private, and leaves England. Ryder dies five years later and leaves Alice, his daughter, to the guardianship of his old comrade, Col. Lawrence. Lawrence is ordered out to India and takes Alice with him. He is in command of the regiment in which Guy is now a lieutenant, under the name of Denton. Guy knows his sister, because he has heard of his father's death and will, but she does not recognize him. Major Jervis lays siege to Alice. She is young and easily flattered. Guy sees what is going on, but is at a loss to know what to do.

He overhears Jervis persuade her to come to his quarters. That night he goes there too, and finds Alice waiting for Jervis, who has unexpectedly been called out. She is at first angry with his interference, but he reveals to her who he is and she sees her folly. Jervis returns and tries to keep Alice, but Guy makes her go. He quarrels with Jervis, who tries to draw a pistol on him. They struggle. The pistol goes off and Jervis is slightly wounded. He accuses Guy of having attacked him, and Guy refuses to speak in his own defense, for fear of compromising Alice.

Alice hears what has happened and confesses her folly to Col. Lawrence, who goes to Jervis, forces him to resign and to write an exoneration of Guy. Guy is honorably discharged by the court martial on this evidence and restored to the arms of the sister whose honor he protected.

BIOGRAPH.

FOR HIS SON (Jan 22).—A physician, through his love for his only son, whom he desires to see wealthy, is tempted to sacrifice his honor by concocting a soft drink containing cocaine, knowing how rapid and powerful is the hold obtained by cocaine, even in the most minute quantities, feeling assured that there will be an enormous demand for the drink. As he expected, the drink meets with tremendous success, and his balm to his conscience is the thought that he will be rich. But his son, ignorant of the ingredients of the drink, cultivates a liking for it, unknown to the father. The father discovers his son's weakness too late, for he soon becomes a hopeless victim of the drug. What a powerful lesson the final scene teaches, as we see the stricken father mourning his son's death. He did not care whom he victimized until he found the result of his dishonor at his own door.

WITH A KODAK (Jan. 25).—Mr. Hobb's secretary and Mrs. Hobb's maid are sweethearts, but Mr. Hobbs has a tender feeling for his wife's maid, while Mrs. Hobbs forms a liking for Hobbs' secretary. Both are fired for an offense of which they are quite innocent, and while strolling in the park taking pictures with a kodak, they hit upon a scheme which secures for them a reinstatement in their former positions, but not for long.

PANTS AND PANSIES (Jan. 25).—May's sweetheart is a traveling salesman, and on the last day of his trip he writes May that he will arrive the following day and will call as soon as possible. On his way to the hotel he procures a bunch of pansies to send her. While writing the note, "I hope to see you wearing these when I call," he knocks the ink bottle over on his trousers. He must send them to be cleaned, so he sends the hall boy on both errands. On the way the boxes become mixed, and May receives the pants with the letter—"I hope to see you wearing," etc.

KALEM.

THINGS ARE SELDOM WHAT THEY SEEM (Jan. 22).—Jimmie Sharp, a vaudeville artist, arrives in the West for a vacation. Having secured comfortable quarters in the local hotel, he mounts his horse and rides out to see the country. Becoming lost, he inquires the way from Dorothy Dix, a ranchman's daughter, with whom he falls in love at first sight. Notwithstanding that she is engaged to Burt, a young cowboy employed by her father, Jimmie enters the race.

Jimmie plans to make Dorothy think Burt is a trifler. To carry out his scheme he dresses as a girl and makes Burt's acquaintance. The young cowboy is susceptible and apparently falls an easy victim to the wiles of the captivating young lady.

While Burt is very busy trying to make himself agreeable to his new acquaintance, Dorothy puts in an apearance and starts to make things lively. During the excitement the two girls get in a mix-up and Jimmie's wig is pulled off.

This exposure makes Burt the laughing stock, and he is very glad to make his peace with Dorothy. Jimmie immediately discovers there is nothing doing for him, and that night takes his trunk and hikes back to Broadway.

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN (Jan. 24).—Clarence, just returned from the city, is proud of his clothes and his automobile. While out riding he meets Ruth, an old schoolmate, whom he invites to ride with him. She accepts, much to the displeasure of her sweetheart, Bill. The joy-riders have a fine time until they have proceeded about two miles; then the automobile stops. Clarence climbs over it, under it and around it. He tinkers here and there, takes out the spark plugs, tries his carbureter and makes a general study of his engine, and cranks the machine until his arm and shoulder are sore, but without the desired result, the machine refuses to budge. Just then Bill comes riding by on a wagon. Ruth thinks, "Here is my chance to get home." Bill stops, looks the situation over, but refuses to permit the young lady to ride with him. Bill starts on his way, but after making a turn in the road his conscience reproaches him and he returns to the automobile, telling Ruth she may ride in his wagon, but absolutely refusing to allow Clarence the same privilege. The last we see of the young man, dressed in city clothes with a stout rope over his shounder, he is pulling the automobile home.

HOW JIM PROPOSED (Jan. 24).—Jim was all right and could have had the girl for the asking, but whenever he got ready to propose some unfortunate accident occured that would frustrate his plans and make him ridiculous before the girl of his choice.

HIS MOTHER (Jan. 26).—A party of Americans visiting the Lakes of Killarney, Ireland, hear the sound of sweet music coming from a nearby cottage. On investigation they find a young man playing the violin and in rapt attention his old mother sitting by the fireside. One of the tourists, John Foster, recognizing the musical genius, gives the lad, Terence, his card and tells him if he ever comes to America to call and see him at his office. For weeks and months after the tourists have paid their visit to the humle cottage Terence dreams of a musical career in the States. To gratify his desire his self-sacrificing mother surrenders her life's savings to pay the boy's passage. Arriving in America Terence locates the office of John Foster and tells of his ambition. The kind-hearted banker arranges to start the Irish boy on his career. A year later we find Terence the lion of the season, but sad to say he thinks seldom of his old mother and Killarney.

The mother in despair, when no news comes from her boy, tells her trouble to the good parish priest, who readily helps her to go in search of her son. Arriving in New York she learns that her boy is to play that night at the Opera House. Buying her ticket she climbs to the dizzy height of the gallery and listens enraptured to her son's performance. One of the stage hands of whom she inquires her son's home address offers to pilot her to his home. Arriving at the house the butler refuses them admittance, but the husky stage hand forces his way in and insists that Terence be advised of his mother's presence. Although surrounded by a party of friends, Terence at the sound of his mother's voice rushes to the anteroom, embraces her and brings her into the room. He presents her to his friends, telling them her self sacrifice made it possible for him to achieve the results he has obtained.

THREE IMPS EVERY WEEK

Just see this bully variety of Imp Films

The beauty of having three separate companies producing Imp films is shown by the excellent variety on our program for the fourth week in January. It consists of four subjects, each totally different from the others and each the best of its particular kind.

A Triumphant Thursday Imp

"The Worth of a Man" will be released Thursday, January 25th. DON'T YOU MISS IT! Here is a combination of love, pathos, exciting drama, climaxed by a hospital conflagration—making one of the best Imp dramas ever staged. Ask for "The Worth of a Man." Copyright 1912.

A Sensational Monday Imp

"Building the Greatest Dam in the World." Where is it? At Panama? No. It is at Keokuk, Iowa. To get a comprehensive moving picture of it, the Imp camera man risked his neck by being carried aloft in a swinging bucket. You never saw a more interesting picture in your life. Your patrons will be simply delighted. Be sure to get it! Released Monday, January 22d. Copyright 1912.

And a Corking Saturday Split

The first half is a domestic comedy called "All a Mistake." It will hit you right where you live. The second half of the reel is "A Day on a Buffalo Ranch," full of thrilling deeds of horsemanship, roping, expert knife work and so on. Not a dead foot in the entire 400. Released Saturday, January 27th. Copyright 1912.

Alexandria, Egypt. The Caravan of the Sacred Carpet, coming from Cairo and going to the Holy City of Mecca, passes through the city. And many others.

LOVE'S TERRIBLE SACRIFICE (Jan. 23).—An Indian prince falls desperately in love with a beautiful dancer of the Goddess of Siva. However, things are not to be all clear sailing, as the wife of the prince is exceedingly jealous and seeks to revenge herself both upon the dancer and the prince. In consequence, the beautiful girl is kidnapped and taken to a sorcerer's cave and her beauty is disfigured. Later, when she seeks the presence of her lover, she hides her face, that he may not cease to love her, disfigured as she is, and he rising to magnificent heights of adoration, puts out his eyes with a stiletto, thus being able to carry in his mind's eye only, the lost beauty of his love.

THE SIOUX'S CAVE OF DEATH (Jan. 24).—Settlers, traveling across the plains, are attacked by Indians. A man and his infant child are captured by the savages, while his wife is left on the ground for dead. The daughter of the Indian chief, however, when they reach camp, manages to save the life of the baby and permits the man to escape. Ultimately he joins his wife, who has been revived by some trappers who have found her. The chief's daughter, however, is culpable in the eyes of her tribe and is condemned to death in a cave filled with snakes.

A WINDY DREAM (Jan. 25).—Billy has a gigantic pin wheel with which he has amused himself all day. At night he goes to bed and dreams wild dreams. He mounts the pin wheel over the chimney and draws all the furniture and all the inhabitants of the house up the flue. Finally he too travels via the same route, reaches the moon, is chewed up by the man in the moon, spit out, and lands in a puddle, whence he emerges only to throw a loving couple back in. Many other wonderful and terrible things happen to Billy, too terrible and difficult to relate.

SWIFTWIND'S HEROISM (Jan. 27).—Swiftwind is an Indian, and much interested in the love affairs of a young couple. Later, the cowboy lover, is accused of having committed a murder, tried and condemned to be hung. Swiftwind, however, thinks to save him and offers himself as a substitute for the cowboy, persuading the latter that his sweetheart desires to bid him a last farewell. His ruse is discovered, however, and the cowboy returns to take his medicine like a man, but at the last moments his innocence is discovered and everything turns out beautifully.

LIFE IN OUR PONDS (Jan. 25).—This educational subject is highly interesting to both old and young. It shows the life, manners and customs, of daily quarrels and love affairs between the scaly inhabitants of our fresh water ponds.

THE COUNTESS DE CHALLANT (Jan. 26).—The Countess de Challant has the misfortune to be married to a most disagreeable man, and it is small wonder that she falls in love with a young courtier, who finally, in order to still more win her favor, kills her husband. The night watch finds the body of the slain man and follows the trail of the assassin, which leads to the home of the countess. The house is searched, but the countess has permitted the young man to escape. Nevertheless, a bloody hand print on a pillow betrays him as well as his enamorata, and she is accused of being an accomplice of the crime. She is tried, condemned to death and her lover witnessing the execution from the crowd, falls dead at the foot of the scaffold.

THANHOUSER.

HER LADYSHIP'S PAGE (Jan. 23).—Her Ladyship, the Countess, had a faithful little Page, whom she chose as her constant companion. The Lady was wooed by a wicked Baron, whom she loathed, and seldom permitted to enter her presence. The Baron retreated to his castle by the sea, and there plotted revenge on the fair lady who spurned him.

About this time, the Prince started out on a tour of adventure with a few boon companions. He went in disguise, to be surer of catching his underlords unawares, and of finding how they were fulfilling their stewardships. By accident he met the fair Countess at a wayside shrine, and not knowing who she was, his heart went out to her. The wicked Baron finally succeeded in carrying off the fair Countess to his lonely castle. At the time of her capture she was accompanied only by her little Page, whom the Baron also carried off, so he could not tell her people where to find her. The little Page was a very small chap, indeed, and managed to slip through a tiny window in the Baron's castle, which had never been regarded as a possible means of exit. Securing the Baron's horse, the Countess' small defender rode off for aid, and encountered the Prince and his friends.

A timely band of monks happened to pass the Baron's castle shortly after he had taken the Countess prisoner. The holy men were invited to feast at the Baron's table, and afterward, one of their number was commanded to wed the Countess to the Baron. Just when the Baron thought his plan sure to succeed, he found himself face to face with the Prince, and a few brave hearts, who rescued the lady and carried her safely off, to later become the consort of the Prince himself, and the tiny Page, let it be said, was duly knighted.

EAST LYNNE (PART ONE) (Jan 26).—Lady Isabel Vane, the daughter of an impoverished Earl, marries Archibald Carlyle, a rising young lawyer. Carlyle's boyhood friend is Richard Hare, and prior to his marriage the gossips had suspected that Carlyle would marry Barbara Hare, Richard's sister. Barbara is secretly in love with Carlyle, but he does not suspect it, and his feelings toward her are purely brotherly.

Almost immediately after her return from her wedding trip, Lady Isabel hears of this supposed romance, and is disposed to be jealous of Barbara. Circumstances seem to confirm the gossip, for the husband and Barbara are surprised in a secret conference, soon after his return from the wedding trip. So Lady Isabel's life as a bride opens with the belief that her husband is not true to her.

Her husband does not explain, for she fails to tax him with his supposed treachery. The fact is, that Carlyle's friend, Richard, is a fugitive from justice. The father of the girl he loves is slain, and the evidence points strongly against Richard, although he is innocent. Barbara's conferences with Carlyle have been concerning her brother's case, as she is the only person he can trust to bring messages to Carlyle, his lawyer.

Some years later, Sir Francis Levison, a fashionable rogue, is a guest at Carlyle's home, and determines to win Lady Isabel. Finding that she is jealous of Barbara Hare, he goads her to fury by bringing the wife to the place where they meet. Lady Isabel, not knowing that her husband has just been in conference with Richard Hare, misconstrues his actions, and to revenge herself, agrees to elope with Levison, leaving a note telling her innocent husband that he has driven her to it. Carlyle receives the message, and is comforted by his baby son, who is all that keeps the husband from utter despair.

EAST LYNNE (PART TWO) (Jan. 26).—Lady Isabel, the wife of Archibald Carlyle, deserted him and eloped with Sir Francis Levison, who had traduced her husband. She soon bitterly regretted her foolish action, but not knowing what to do and being friendless, drifted along for a year before she summoned up resolution enough to decide that she would separate from Levison. This action she took immediately after learning that Levison had deceived her, and that her husband was an honorable man.

Accompanied by her infant child and the latter's nurse, Lady Isabel crossed to France. There the train on which she was traveling was wrecked and many passengers killed. The woman's child and nurse were among the victims, and through an error her name also appeared among those who had been killed.

Although she did not die, Lady Isabel was severely injured and lingered in a hospital for months. While convalescing, she read in an old newspaper that she had been reported killed, and decided not to attempt to correct the error. At the hospital she was known as "Madame Vine," and under that name she diceded to live a new life.

While companion for a woman she is unexpectedly offered another position as nurse for her own son, a lad, who she learns with horror is in delicate health. Her mother love determines her to risk the chance of detection, and carefully disguised, she appears at her old home as a menial, but happy because she can again see her darling boy.

She has many heartaches, however. She sees the woman she once regarded as her rival, now the happy and honored wife of her former husband and hears her singing to him the songs that had once been sung by the Lady Isabel. Still she puts up with everything, working and praying for the recovery of her child, who is gradually sinking into a decline.

Her petitions are not granted, and the boy dies. Before he passes away, however, the frantic woman reveals herself to him, and is surprised by her former husband. She appeals to him for forgiveness, he grants it, making her last moments peaceful and happy—the strain and grief had been too much for her and she sinks dead at the feet of the husband she had so cruelly injured.

The man who had wrecked her home did not escape. Arrested for a murder he thought would never be traced to him, he was convicted and executed, while Barbara Hare's brother, wrongfully suspected and for years a fugitive with a price on his head, is cleared at last, and his sister rejoices that the last cloud has been lifted from her life, and that she can be happy with the love of her husband and the brother for whom she had sacrificed so much.

REPUBLIC.

A BLUE RIDGE ROMANCE (Jan. 27).—Jack Wilson, a young revenue officer, falls in love with Edith Murray. Edith does not love him, however, and tells him so. She later maries Dick Noble, a young Virginian, whose supposed occupation is that of a lumberman. After the honeymoon the young couple go to their home in the Blue Ridge Mountains. Everything is happiness for Edith until by a chance she learns that instead of being a millman her husband is a moonshiner.

Jack Wilson is detailed by his superior officer to arrest Noble. The very night that Edith has discovered Dick's illegal occupation; Jack and a fellow officer are trailing him through the mountains and getting evidence against him. At a cross road Jack and his companion separate, Jack getting the right trail, soon catches up to Dick, whom he follows to his home.

When he arrives there, Dick meets Edith, who is in tears and heart-broken over her discovery. He promises her to give up his illicit pursuits and he has hardly done so, when Jack Wilson dashes into the room and places him under arrest. The scene which follows is absorbing in its tension, enough to say that love triumphs and Dick and Edith seek the new life in the Great West.

POWER OF INNOCENCE (Jan. 28).—Lucy Davis, of Hamilton, Ind., not contented with the lowly comforts afforded by her mother and grandmother, decides to seek employment in New York City. After writing several big concerns and receiving one note with a little encouragement, she prepares to leave home.

Arriving at the little station in Hamilton, she attracts the attention of George Edwards, a traveling salesman and intimate friend of several notorious people in New York City. He presses his attentions upon her and insists upon helping her on the train, having previously wired Violet Bowers, an old friend of the underworld in New York, advising her the time of their arrival. Violet, much interested in seeing new faces, prepared to meet George and his "find" at the Pennsylvania Railroad Terminal in New York. Lucy, on her arrival in the metropolis, is much amazed at its magnitude and is an easy prey for the clutches of George's friend, Violet Bowers. Violet has little trouble in persuading Lucy to take quarters at her house until such time as she secures a position. Arriving at the beautiful residence sustained by Violet Bowers, Lucy tells the story of her family's early prosperity, her father's untimely death, later of their want and poverty, and that she has come to the city in order that she might provide more comforts for the folks at home. Violet is touched by the innocence and youth of Lucy and decides to save her from the many pitfalls of friendless girls in the big city.

George Edwards arrives, demands an interview with Lucy and when refused by Violet, decides to accomplish it by force, when he is intercepted by Jones, a friend of Violet. A short quarrel ensues and George leaves swearing vengeance on Jones. Violet returns to Lucy, insists upon her accepting a loan and induces her to return to her mother. She accompanies her to the station, waves a fond good-bye and feels the better for having saved an innocent girl from a life of misery and shame.

BUILDING THE GREATEST DAM IN THE WORLD (Jan. 22).—With the exception of the Panama Canal, the engineering works in progress at Keokuk, Iowa, are the greatest in the world. The dam across the Mississippi is approaching completion and it has involved the building of the largest monolithic concrete structure in existence. Such an undertaking as this necessitated some great mechanical and constructional devices. The picture includes views of the work as it is being carried out. For example, we see huge concrete mixers with a capacity of 1,500 cubic yards per day, and we see rock being crushed at the rate of 500 car loads. There is a power-house, a third of a mile long. An inclined railway carries material to the concrete mixers; a very large cantilever traveling crane places the concrete in the dam. There is a view of a great new lock in course of construction. It was necessary to saw a channel in the bedrock of the American continent and the work of doing it is shown. Excavators, traveling cranes, concrete dumpers, and other great pieces of machinery are shown at work. (Copyrighted, 1912, by Imp Films Co.)

THE WORTH OF A MAN (Jan. 25).—When Arthur Severn went up to his university the fact that he was a hunchback brought him into ridicule at the hands of his fellow students. The gentle commiserations of Elsie Woodward, the president's daughter, alleviated his sufferings to some extent, but the glaring fact remained that he was generally despised for his deformity. But he stuck to his work and became a successful surgeon with a hospital position.

Chance threw Elsie in his way as a patient. She was taken to the very hospital where he was at work. A difficult operation had to be performed on the girl and to Arthur Severn was assigned the duty. He had almost completed his task when the hospital took fire. His assistants sought safety in flight, but Arthur coolly and bravely stuck to his work, defying flames and smoke and when he had finished the operation bore the unconscious girl to a place of safety. Her life had been saved in a double sense. But Arthur suffered for his heroism. He was burnt and disfigured. The man met his reward, however. Elsie's father placed her hand in that of the young hero who had saved her life. (Copyrighted, 1912, by Imp Films Co.)

ALL A MISTAKE (Jan. 27).—Percy Vane's young wife had gone out for the day and had left her house all locked up. Hubby arrives home unexpectedly early and not being able to enter by the front door of the house tries the fire-escape route. A policeman sees him, arrests him and marches him off to the station. Percy convinces the magistrate that he is not a burglar, and is allowed to go free.

He makes his way indoors at last to discover that his wife is out and that she has left an unfinished letter on the table. That letter is addressed to a man. Rage and jealousy take possession of Percy's breast. He packs up his belongings preparatory to leaving home and is in the midst of it when his wife returns. A quarrel ensues; she packs up her things; and the stupid young couple would have inevitably parted if it was not revealed that the letter the girl was writing was meant for a relative and not for a lover Percy apologies for his haste and is forgiven. JUSTICE OF THE SAGE Jan. 18 .—Jack Wilson and Bill Galoway, the sheriff, loved Bessie, daughter of the ranchman. In a spirit of fun Jack kissed Bessie, and, panic-stricken, mounted his horse and galloped off. Bill, quarreling with the [illegible], struck him with a wrench and left him for dead. Seeing his chance to fasten the guilt on Jack, the sheriff hastily organized a posse and soon captured Jack. He was summarily tried in a neighboring saloon, when Bessie, loving Jack, hurried to his rescue.

OBJECTIONS OVERRULED (Jan. 22).—Leading a generally dissipated life, Jack is sent into the West by his father. He meets Dare-Devil Anne and she reforms him. When Jack wired his father that he intended to marry Anne, the old gentleman took the first train West. The cowboys took him prisoner and he was treated to the unique ceremony of watching his son marry through a large telescope on the mountain side. Still obdurate, the "boys" playfully held him over a yawning chasm until he consented to the marriage. Later, the father met Dare-Devil Anne and what follows makes 1,000 feet of good comedy.

THE MORMON (Jan. 25).—In the early days of the West it was customary for the Mormons to attack wagon trains, in order to secure new wives in the practice of their polygamous belief. The young son of the Mormon elder was dearly beloved and faithful and was given the post of outlook, to locate wagon trains, ascertain the number of men and women in them and assist in the attack. One morning he spies through his powerful telescope a lone wagon crossing the prairie. He hastens to a council of the elders and tells them of the approaching emigrants. He is sent to ascertain the number of men with the wagon and encounters the girl. It is a case of love at first sight. He gazes earnestly in the girl's eyes and sees an answering light in their depths. Then he realizes his mission and that the capture of these women will make them the wives of the prophet. A fierce desire overcomes him to possess her for himself—a thing not possible in the church. He renounces his faith and warns the emigrants. He assists in fighting off his own people and at last they hold up the flag of truth. The old father learns that his son has become an apostate. Sadly he returns to his home to grieve over his erring son lost to him forever. The emigrant having been killed, the young Morman takes his place, and with the girl by his side turns to a new life with the woman he loves.

NESTOR.

A BRAVE LITTLE WOMAN (Jan. 15).—Daniel Lyttell is very ill, but Doctor Bozel assures Clara that the crisis is over and that her husband will eventually get well. In the dead of the night, a burglar enters the Lyttel home. His silent footsteeps reach the ear of the sick man. Clara, too, hears mysterious noises. She pacifies Daniel and tells him to rest and sleep. Softly she steals out of the room to investigate and soon discovers the burglar. Quickly rushes to the telephone, but finds that the wires have been cut. For a moment she hesitates and fears—fears for her husband. Goes to his bedside and rejoices to find him asleep. Hastily dons a wrap and envolpes her head in a black veil leaves the room and busies herself rumaging in the drawers of a desk. The burglar comes upon her but is unable to intimidate the brave little woman. Clara tells him she, too, is a thief; only she came to steal very important letters. When the man attempts to go into the bedroom for his "haul," she commands him to stay where he [illegible] the house well and can [illegible] it without making a break. Clara proposes to get [illegible] He agrees, but [illegible] decides to watch her every move.

Feverishly Clara goes to her dresser and draws forth all her jewels. The patient grows restless and she soothes and caresses him till he's quiet again; then she glides silently out of the room in search of the burglar.

The midnight visitor, however, is not a bad sort. He has seen, and the woman's brave deed brings back to him that spark of manhood long since departed. He refuses to accept her sacrifice, and vanishes into the night ashamed of himself and determined to lead a better life. Clara returns to her husband's side and hugs him for very joy.

THERE'S SOMETHING WRONG (Jan. 15).—Dolly is unexpectly called away to visit her invalid mother. She cannot wait for her husband's return home; so writes him a letter explaining her sudden departure and telling him where to find the door key.

Evening comes and so does Tom, Dolly's dear hubby. The house is both silent and locked. Tom vainly pounds on the door and calls for Dolly. A crowd gathers. Neighbor Brown comes to the rescue with a ladder. Tom, however, fails to gain an entrance. A policeman breaks in the door. They rush through the house looking for Dolly—for did not Tom hear her moan? Dolly is invisible, but her letter is found on the table—Dolly had forgotten to mail it.

THE FUGITIVE (Jan. 17).—Joe Egan has been denounced as the perpetrator of a hold up, and Sheriff Bentley and his men plan to catch him on his return home. Here Mrs. Egan tries to convince the sheriff of her boy's innocence and shows him the letter she has just received from Joe, telling her that he had nothing to do with the robbery and will soon prove it.

The good-hearted sheriff, however, is obliged to do his duty, and, on Joe's return, he captures him. In front of the jail, the handcuffs are removed and, in a twinkling, Joe snatches a revolver from one of the men and forces the sheriff and his deputy into the lock-up; then he makes good his escape.

Fully convinced of Joe's guilt, the sheriff endeavors to locate the fugitive, and at last, by intercepting a letter from Joe to his mother, he discovers his whereabouts. Mrs. Egan and her daughter go to meet Joe, little dreaming that the sheriff and his posse are following them. Joe falls into the trap and is again captured. The sheriff and the Egans start on their return to the village in a carriage. The journey is scarcely half over when the Brayton Gang holds up the sheriff and his party. Without much ado the outlaws escort the two men captives to a tree and bind them there. Joe recognizes the Braytons and unmasks them, but to no avail. Mrs. Egan pleads with the ruffians to spare her boy's life, but they lead her away and prepare to shoot the unfortunate men.

The Braytons had not reckoned with Miss Egan. The girl hid under a blanket in the carriage and was overlooked by the Road Agents. She acts swiftly and brings the posse to the rescue just in the nick of time. The dying confession of Jim Brayton fully exonerates Joe, and the sheriff becomes a life-long friend of the Egans.

DESPERATE DESMOND ON THE TRAIL AGAIN (Jan. 20.)—Desperate Desmond is mad clear through. Rosamond has written him to cease pestering her. Desmond thirsts for revenge. Rounding up Gomgotz and his gang of wild men, he sets up a trap for the lovers and at the psychological moment springs it.

Claude is marched up to the mouth of a flaming volcano and unceremoniously thrown in. Rosamond, like a true heroine, still refuses to mary the villain. Down the hill straggle Desmond, the wild men and the fair captive. The volcano is just a secret distillery, and the moonshiners volunteer to aid Claude. Barrel after barrel of the good old stuff is rolled out of the crater and then rolled down the hill after the desconding party. Desmond, Gomgotz, Rosamond, et al, are bowled over without much ado. The villain is easily captured and Rosamond once more resposes in the arms of her hero.

Fire and water for Desmond. He is placed in a barrel topped with a burning one and pushed out to sea. Without watching the fiend's finish, Claude and Rosamond leisurely ride away. Desmond manages to burn two holes through the sides of his habitation, grabs two stray oars and rows safely ashore. Reinforced by Gomgotz's men, he starts in hot pursuit after the lovers. Claude's vigilant ear apprises him of impending trouble. With Rosamond by his side, he dashes away and crosses the railroad tracks just ahead of a train. Without stopping, the lovers ride to the fort and summon the soldiers. Captured a second time, Desmond is sentenced to be shot. Twelve boys in blue level their rifles at him, take deliberate aim and—curse the luck! there is Claude embracing Beautiful Rosamond.

THE DEFENDER OF THE NAME (Jan. 21).—John Potter is the son of one of the most distinguished and courageous families in old Virgima. The stirring news that Sumter had been fired upon volleys its pregnant purport into the homes of the South. John volunteers to serve. In the red rays of the setting sun, disguised as a Union soldier, John starts on his mission of securing the Union forces' plans. As he steals through the Union lines he comes upon a squad of Union soldiers, and in their midst a Confederate spy. A sharp order and from the barrels of twelve guns the prisoner's punishment is meted out to him. Like a blow it dawns upon John that, if detected, that would be his fate. His courage fails him and he turns toward the Confederate lines. He runs to his home, and bursts in upon his sister, who alone is awake. A few brief words and she knows all. The boy, desperate in his shame, runs into

READIN' RITIN' AND 'RITHMETIC (Jan. 26).—Miss Parker, the school marm of the village school, is forced to distribute a parcel of punishment to Hezekiah Smithers, an unruly member of the class. Hezekiah runs crying to his father, a blacksmith, who determines at once to call upon the domineering teacher and give her a piece of his mind. He comes to the school. To paraphrase Mr. J. Caesar, "he came, he saw, he was conquered."

As the days go by, Smithers, Sr., confides to himself that he is falling in love with Miss Parker. Meantime, in the school-room, Miss Parker is diligently and delicately attempting to make something of her unpromising pupil. The boy is just foolish enough to misconstrue interest and determination for attention and affection, and he falls desperately in love with the little school mistress. Father and son proceed to love her.

One Sunday afternoon, it comes to pass that father and son don their joy clothes, with the heroic determination to call on the teacher and press their suits,—which, of course, they should have done in advance. Both covertly and curiously observe the other in his tonsorial efforts with a little wonder and a little "professional jealousy," and their labors at last at an end, unknown to each other, they set out to capture the unanimous prize.

They meet each other—and their downfall—at the teacher's home. Amazed and amused at the twin proposal, she solves the dilemma of a decision by introducing her sweetheart to the panic-stricken Rummy-oes.

REX.

ANGELS UNAWARE (Jan. 18).—The wife is becoming tired of the hypocrisy of their relationship, and suggests to the husband that they separate and subsequently obtain a divorce, when he receives a letter from his parents informing him that they intend to pay a visit to his home. He pleads with his wife to stay until the old folks depart, and entreats her to give his parents the impression that they are still as happy together as they were when he first left his father's roof to mate the woman he—loved. She consents.

One night during his parents' visit, while they are chatting and discussing little nothings, his father turns the topic of conversation to the romance of the younger people's younger days; out of the past he summons little pictures of a man and a maid knowing of nothing but each other's love and its happiness, little meaningless words significant of things no language can fully interpret—pictures and words forgotten in the oblivion of marital dissention. Husband and wife, in silent embarrassment, look into the mirror to conceal their chagrin, and there, as in a mirror of their souls, they see a vision. Fair skies and a rippling brook, green things and fragrant flowers and two looking into the eyes of each, translating the mystic meaning of life and the years—a vivid vision of the happy days of their courting and the tender truth of their troth.

The old folks depart, and with them departs the shadow. Hollow happiness they had substituted for monotonous peace; the glint of a sunbeam they had bartered for a grain of dust—and they see the folly of it all and the mockery. He takes the woman in his arms, and their lips—and the lives—meet again

AMBROSIO.

AN AUTUMN SUNSET DREAM (Jan. 10).—Pantea, a famous courtezan, wins Orseola away from a dogeress who loves him madly. The dogeress in revenge invokes the aid of a famous sorceress, who moulds a wax image and by the power of witchcraft causes pain to Pantea as the figure is pierced with pins and otherwise tortured. The dogeress in her unreasoning resentment and rage finally decides, through the figure, to burn Pantea, but to her horror discovers that Orseola suffers with her. The lovers are incinerated in a spectacular blaze of fire, and the dogeress, overcome with the enormity of her action, falls lifeless.

RELIANCE.

THE APPOINTED HOUR (Jan. 17).—Mrs. Neville is the neglected wife of a rich old man. Things come to a climax at a reception given by them, and she yields to the pleadings of an impassioned admirer and decides to elope with him. Twelve o'clock is the appointed hour. In packing up her clothes she finds a bundle of old love letters, and looking them over revives tender memories of her courtship. Weeping bitterly, the appointed hour is forgotten. Her husband gets wind of the contemplated elopement, and armed with a pistol he cautiously enters her room. The pathetic figure of his sobbing wife brings to him a realization of his neglect, and when she confesses and pleads for forgiveness he takes her tenderly in his arms and tells her that it is he who should ask her pardon, and with a full understanding and renewed love, the two look brightly forward to the future.

A MOUNTAIN TRAGEDY (Jan. 20).—Desperately poor, Carter, a mountaineer, falls and is rendered unconscious. He is found by two tough, drunken characters, who think him dead and play cards to see who shall have the widow. A quarrel arises and they step out to fight it out. The woman, desperate with fear, awaits their return with a loaded gun. The Mexican comes back alone and she fires but misses. A thrilling battle takes place between the frenzied woman and the drink-maddened man, interrupted by the husband who has revived. The Mexican turns upon the man and is shot down by the woman. At that moment a thundering knock is heard, and the couple fear it is the Mexican's partner, but it turns out to be the sheriff, who breaks down the door. He is in pursuit of the Mexican, for whose capture a reward of $1,000 has been posted, dead or alive, and the poor mountaineers receive it.

LUX.

A MAD DOG (Jan. 19).—Cleanliness is next to godliness, but oh! said Ponto, the pup, as he escaped from the fair hands of his mistress whilst she was giving him his bath, and rushed down the street with his jaws covered with the white soap lather. Seeing this vicious animal "foaming at the mouth," the good townsfolk take to their heels, remembering their numerous appointments at a distant part of the town. Many are the frolics that result, but they prove expensive to the fond owner when she finally recovers the lost Ponto.

THE HARM THAT GOSSIPS DO (Jan. 19).—The work of a farm laborer is distasteful to the intellectual Jean Michal. One day, whilst laboring in the fields, he observes an aeroplane flying gracefully over his head. The sight of this beautiful object, drifting and gliding as the breezes blow, sets fire to the ambitions of the humble laborer. He immediately commences to build imaginary aeroplanes in his mind's eye. Seeing him idle, the farmer who employs him becomes enraged and discharges him with many angry threats. His words fall upon the ever ready ear of the village gossip, who soon has a pretty tale floating around the village. When Jean decides to go into the world beyond and seek his fortune, his friends, who have listened well to the gossip's malicious tale, turn their backs upon him. Years afterward, the country yokel becomes a great aviator, and his return to his native village is seized upon as an opportunity for rejoicing. The aviator realizes how hollow all these mundane honors are, and prefers to return quietly to his home and shun the friendship all are so willing to offer him in the brightest days of his life.

MAJESTIC.

SPARE THE ROD (Jan. 21.)—John Morton is an upright citizen, but a man of stern parental principles. The boy's mother is of a far different calibre than her husband, and his strictness toward the son for any small juvenile lapses has caused her tender heart no small amount of agony during the eight years since the boy was born.

John Jr., fell from his pedestal of grace when, during the first light snowfall of the season, he knocked a gentleman's silk hat off. The old gentleman, instead of punishing the boy, only shook a warning finger at him and walked away, smiling over the reminiscences of his boyhood days. But Johnnie's act was witnessed by his father, who, calling the boy into the house, administered the bamboo rod to him so fiercely that his wife came running into the room, and taking the little fellow away from her husband, fled from the house threatening never to return.

Two years later we find that the "widow" Morton has won the respect of the little rural community where she is a school-teacher, while miles away, Mr. Morton is living a lonesome life; but his pride would not allow him to communicate with his wife, whose preambulations he kept track of.

News of her private affairs having reached the ears of the school-board, she was promptly expelled. Fate had it that on this very day Morton came to the village where he knew his wife was teaching. On his way to the lodging house at which she is staying he beheld two little boys fighting, and as he drew closer, he recognized one of them as his son, who, after a loving embrace, led him to his mother. There the family was again brought together and the father broke the rod, never to use another one on his son.

THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE (Jan. 26).—Harry Purdy finds it rather difficult to make both ends meet, but by strict economy by he and his wife they manage to maintain a cozy little home and to give their daughter a musical education and to also see that their little boy is receiving the proper training.

Harry receives $100.00 as repayment of a loan made many years ago to an old friend, which inspires him with a desire to have an automobile ride. Returning from the country in the evening, the hired chauffeur puts on an extra burst of speed and knocks down an old woman. While the doctor who has been summoned cannot find any external injuries, the woman complains of some terrible internal pains.

The woman's husband is a lazy old scoundrel and takes all Purdy's money. The doctor and Purdy have scarcely left the house when the old woman begins to jump around. Purdy places at the old woman's disposal his morris chair, his pianola and sends her a stipulated amount of money each week. This continues for some time until one day when Purdy, who has called at the old scoundrel's house to pay him his weekly allowance, finds that the woman is absent. The old man tells him that she is sleeping in the next room, but when Purdy is walking out of the house he encounters the woman who had visited a "neighboring oasis" and is returning with a can of beer.

Purdy grasps the situation at a glance, and after placing the old scoundrels in the custody of a policeman, he summons an expressman and has his furniture removed. He imparts the glad news to his wife and again they are in a position to give their children the proper kind of education.

POWERS.

FOUR YALE MEN (Jan. 23).—The spirit with which the men become imbued during their college days is strong enough to carry them all through life and though the members of a class may disperse to the four corners of the earth, any mention of their alma mater awakens the young feeling in the oldest men.

These four men agreed to meet at the frat house every fifteen years and compare notes of progress.

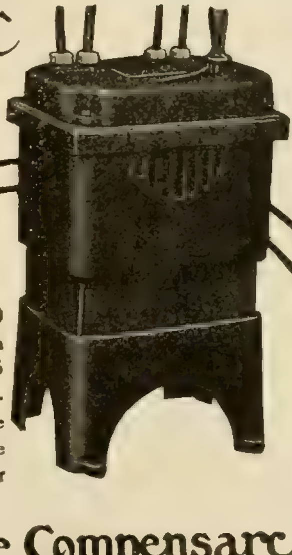
COMPENSARC

This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills



Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for 2/3 more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

The vicissitudes of life supply dramatic element for the story. From the enthusiastic young graduates, we see their meetings at intervals of fifteen years until we view the old gray-haired men that Father Time has changed them into. One by one they drop out of line, at the second meeting only three men are left to drink and toast their alma mater, but another and then another drops out until the lone survivor of the quartet keeps the agreement and appears at the appointed time, only to gaze at the three vacant chairs. Then he, too, terminates his membership in the way that is no man's own.

THE NURSE (Jan. 27).—There is an old saying which tells us that we cannot know people fully well until we have lived under the same roof with them. If the wife in this story had known it, she might never have entertained the friend who came to visit her; for it is this same friend, the chum of her girlhood days, who opens the first chapter of an intrigue which wrecks the happy home. But there is a Providence which presides over such matters and which in this case, sends a representative to earth, so to speak. This envoy is a little daughter of the couple through whom fate pulls her strings in such a way that before the picture is finished, her little arms are drawing her separated parents together into loving embrace.

MAMIE BOLTON (Jan. 16).—Tom Madison was broke—wiped out by speculation, and just about to ask the girl for her hand. But the boy was game and went to the girl with his story and she bravely consented to fight life's battle with him on condition he cease gambling in stocks.

After a year of wedded bliss, Green, a friend of Tom, tempts the latter into a "sure-thing" mining stock deal to bull the market. While at home, Tom receives a telegram which falls into his wife's hands. She reads the message and believes Tom is having an affair with a woman. She immediately sends for her parents and the fun begins. The story moves on briskly and culminates in an almost tragedy, anti-climaxed by a simple explanation of the mysterious telegram which brings about a happy turn of affairs.

LOVE FINDS A WAY (Jan. 23).—Unfortunate circumstances compel mother and daughter to give up their home and take lodgings in the poorer quarters. In order to keep them from absolute penury, Helen answers an advertisement for a maid, inserted by Mrs. Gray and secures a positon.

Her beauty and refinement attracts Fred, who falls desperately in love. Helen returns the affection and they succeed in keeping their secret from Fred's parents for a short time. They are discovered, however, and Helen is discharged, while another advertisement proclaims the need of a new maid, this time it specifies that a "middle-aged woman" is wanted. Fred finds a way to arrange matters and finally persuades Helen to assist him in his novel plan. Just how well they succeed is too good to tell here.

ECLAIR.

AN EVENING STORY (Jan. 18).—A young soldier comes home after a long time. To surprise his mother and sister, he does not advise of his coming. Seated around the huge fire-place are the game keeper and a number of his neighbor's telling stories. Grandmother tells a dramatic one which leaves a strong impression on all, which lingers even after they leave.

Some one has just warned the game keeper that a thief has been seen about the place and he goes out to investigate, leaving the soldier's mother and sister at home, alone. Happy at the thought of the surprise in store for his mother and sister, the young soldier comes to his home. He sees a light through the shutters. The idea of playing a joke comes to his mind. He knocks gently. The two women are frightened. Still thinking of the stories heard that evening, they believe a bandit is coming to harm them. The mother takes her husband's fowling piece and shoots through the window. Everything becomes silent again.

When the husband returns, he finds the two women quite excited. They tell him what has happened. At first he smiles and tells them they are foolish, but then decides to investigate. A soldier is lying on the ground. He rushes forward and recognizes his son.

WANTED, A GOVERNESS (Jan. 25).—In spite of being a good teacher, Margaret is unable to find employment. She must take in sewing to make a living. One day she reads an ad "Mrs. Willoughby wants a governess, but neither very young nor pretty." Though she is both, Margaret manages to be accepted as a governess, by transforming her appearance. Much fun follows. She looks so funny that Mrs. Willoughby's children cannot help teasing her, so much so, that the eldest son, Ralph, is obliged to take her part. Then Margaret, who never flinched before ridicule, is touched by sympathy. But she won't start an intrigue and she goes back to her mother, not without regret, however. She will resume her sewing and be in peace.

THE TURKISH POLICE (Jan. 25).—This film shows us the Turkish police taking the oath of fidelity to the Sultan, in pursuit of bandits who have taken refuge in the mountains, capturing them after a severe struggle.

SOLAX.

PARSON SUE (Jan. 17).—A parson arrives in the midst of a bunch of wild cowboys. Expecting a male parson, the boys set out in full force to receive him, but on the road when they suddenly run into the one-horse shay of a female parson, they keel over in surprise.

Right after her arrival the boys begin to lay plans to get in right—while the parson loses no time in starting a campaign for the defeat of Satan. She begins by posting a sign near the town horse-trough to the effect that "Cleanliness is next to Godliness." Of course the boys see the sign and immediately there is a sudden disposition among them to make use of soap, water and brush.

One cowboy in particular is very much in love with the parson. He shows his affection only too plainly, and so the boys decide to play a trick on him. Their practical joke unintentionally is not only the means of frustrating a plot against the parson, but it brings the parson and her lover together.

A MAN'S A MAN (Jan. 19).—Jacob Strauss, a peddler, is bullied by a disreputable man-about-town. Later his child is run down by this man's touring car. A mob, led by an honest and infuriated son of Erin, prepares to lynch the half-drunken owner of the auto, but he escapes and finds refuge in an apartment in a ramshackle tenement. The apartment is Strauss'.

The excited mob and the infuriated leader follow the man to Strauss' apartment. Strauss, who, like his ancestors, has inherited a dislike for blood and strife, protects his child's murderer from the violent mob.

A year later Strauss and the joy-rider meet at the cemetery near the child's grave. The joy-rider has learned a lesson and is now penitent. He seeks forgiveness. His humility touches the sentimental heart of the peddler and he is forgiven. The scene ends with both shaking hands across the grave of the unfortunate child.

CHAMPION.

THE BRUTE (Jan. 22).—The sodden wretch is seated at the table, the whiskey bottle is empty and he decides to go forth and replenish it. The pleadings of his wife that he remain at home are not only in vain, but serve to arouse the slumbering demon within him. He turns on her fiercely, then rushes from the room, striking at her and the children in his mad departure. Anon he returns with his bottle full of hell's fluid and himself the very devil. Crazed with drink he smashes the dishes on the table, and when his poor wife and children strive to remonstrate, in a terrible fury, he lays about him on all sides, breaking the furniture and hurling the bric-a-brac at their heads, until his wife falls cut and bleeding, a victim to his horridly bestial passion.

His innocent babe had gone long since from the house and had not returned. The mother and sister now desired to seek the little one, who was undoubtedly lost. But the unnatural brute they called father and husband sat by the door barring their exit, and no entreaties of theirs could avail to soften the callousness of his whiskey-sodden soul. Then he became seized with a fit; at one moment gesticulating like a fiend and at another jabbering like an idiot, frothing at the mouth and uttering wild shrieks.

His son had managed to elude him, and slipping from the house he made his way to a saloon where there were some cowboys. Big Jim Colfax was in the midst of a funny story when the boy rushed in and cried out that his mother and sister were being abused by his father. In an instant the cowboys were off to the rescue, big Jim at their head. When they arrived they were just in time to save the daughter from the clutches of the brute. Then what a lashing Jim gave him with his quirt! After that the boys went out with the mother and her children to search for the baby, and when they found the little one the body was lifeless from exposure and neglect.

In the meantime the brute, in one fearful paroxysm of delirium tremens, succumbed to the dread Reaper in a most horrible fashion. When they returned with the body of the child they found him stark and stiff and cold in death.

HER BROTHER'S PARTNER (Jan. 24).—William Caldwell loves Eleanor Caines and Eleanor loves William. Eleanor's love grows daily, and when the marriage knot is at last tied her life's happiness seems completed. But alas! The husband, subjected to adverse fate, falls in our estimation, though he still seems heroic to his faithful wife.

Driven to an extremity, he finds himself brutal in his conduct toward his wife. Her opposition to his unreasonable demands causes within him a submerging of his love for her and he becomes violent. They then part.

William Caldwell goes out West to retrieve, if not redeem himself in his own heart and soul. He did gain the mastery over his body, but the worm which dieth not gnaweth at his very vitals. His partner thought him the best, the truest and bravest of men, for his conduct now well merited that belief. And what of Eleanor? She was driven to the last ditch of despair. She strove hard to eradicate the image of her once glorious idol from her heart. She sank into the depths of poverty; then, hearing from a long absent brother in the West, she drifted thence and to her fate.

She arrived at her brother's place during his absence, but his partner was there to receive her, who was no other than William Caldwell. The brother comes in on the scene unexpectedly. No time is left for either to calmly explain or for proper consideration of the course to pursue. But by a glance and a cautioning look they agree to let the brother and partner remain in ignorance of the tragedy in their lives. Thus thrown into an unexpected propinquity the smouldering fire of the divine spark soon bursts forth into flame. Their old love is again renewed, but now freed from the carnality which first surrounded it, it becomes hallowed and life is again sweeter, brighter and better.

Among the Exhibitors

Winchester, Ky.—Messrs. Woodson Moss and Henry H. Phillips have leased the storeroom in the Fraternity Building and will open a high-class motion picture show.

Beloit, Wis.—John T. Needhan has sold his moving picture theater in Monroe to D. E. Sunderland.

Birmingham, Ala.—The Pastime Theater, corner of Second Avenue and Ninteenth Street, will be remodeled by R. D. Burnett, owner.

Omaha, Neb.—A moving picture show will open soon in a part of the Frantz hardware building.

Grand Rapids, Minn.—The Duffy Bros., who have been conducting a moving picture show at Coleraine, have leased the O'Leary Building, and will open a moving picture show house to be known as the Globe Theater.

Anita, Iowa.—Myers & Worthing have bought the Opera House and will put in a complete electric light plant, lighting the building inside and out. The front will be covered with lights and they expect to put in a first-class moving picture show at once with a mirror screen.

Omaha, Neb.—Edward F. Riley has closed the contract with A. P. Tukey & Son for the erection of a moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 650, at the southeast corner of Twenty-sixth and Farnam.

La Crosse, Wis.—Another motion picture theater will be operated in a short time on the north side. James Kennedy, of the Dreamland Amusement Company, closed a deal for a lease on the Fjelstad Building, 1204 Caledonia Street.

Freeport, Ill.—J. T. Needham, proprietor of the Crystal Moving Picture Theater here, has sold the theater to D. E. Sunderland.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Mikado Theater Company has taken over the vaudeville and picture theater which has been built on Easton Avenue, between Hamilton and Hodiamont Avenues, by the Union-Easton Amusement Company.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The Orpheum Theater has changed hands and Oma Smith will be the new manager. Harry Hillier, former manager, has disposed of his interest in the house and will devote his time to the management of the Temple Theater.

Garfield, Wash.—I. M. McCarthy, I. E. Gill, Clark Johnson and C. E. McCarthy have bought the moving picture show here, and have also leased the Opera House for one year.

Calumet, Mich.—D. E. Rice, who has conducted the moving picture theater in the Quayle Building, on Main Street, Ishpeming, ever since the house opened, sold it to Fred Zema and Arthur Herron. Mr. Rice has also sold his Lyric Theater at Laurium to H. R. Poore, who has managed the Ishpeming house for the past two months.

THE TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK

ARE now among the most popular pictures in the Independent market. They are thoroughly good, business-drawing, audience-satisfying pictures.

Every picture is a feature because of its strong plot with heart interest.

They are directed by one of the most careful and competent directors in the business and acted by an ALL STAR STOCK COMPANY, whose combined ambition is to appear in

PICTURES OF QUALITY

Friday, January 19th

"NEXT"—A light comedy love story—a real young fellow with a personality that the audience will "shine" up to—the girl has her way, too—once more the good plot—unexpected complications—a real, tender love story, full of comedy settings.

Approx. length 960 ft.

Sunday, January 21st

"SPARE THE ROD"—A big vital idea—the training and bringing up of a child is set forth tenderly—the iron will of an upright but too severe father is broken by the delicate, hitherto submissive little wife—a gripping story that will command the entire attention of the audience.

Approx, length 960 ft.

EXCELLENT FEATURES TO FOLLOW

FRIDAY, JAN. 26th, "THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE"—Comedy
SUNDAY, JAN. 28th, "A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE"—Strong heart drama
FRIDAY, FEB. 2nd, "AN OLD LADY of TWENTY" "LUCKY MAN"
—A high-class split-reel comedy
SUNDAY, FEB. 4th, "HONOR THY FATHER"—An intense drama
FRIDAY, FEB. 9th, "A GAME FOR TWO"—A society comedy-drama
SUNDAY, FEB. 11th, "ARRESTING FATHER"—A side-splitting comedy
FRIDAY, FEB. 16th, "HIS STEP-MOTHER"—A powerful sex problem
SUNDAY, FEB. 18th, PETTICOAT PERFIDY"—A prescription for the blues—comedy

Read the night letter received from Dolly Spurr, owner of The Royal Theatre, Marion, Indiana:

What's the matter with Majestics? They're all right. My patrons are simply going wild over them. Don't know what I'll do with my crowds if Majestics keep on gaining in popularity. Without a doubt Majestic pictures are going to be a strong rival to any other make of pictures I am running. The "Actress" was simply magnificent, photography superb, the acting perfect, best I ever saw. Am going to get that second release, even if I have to go to my exchange myself to get it."

The above is only one of many congratulatory telegrams and letters which we have received and it proves that we are giving the public exactly the sort of pictures it needs.

Every Exhibitor Should Demand Two Majestics Every Week.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and any one can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of three dollars ($3) cash with order, we will send by express, charges not prepaid, or $3.50 by registered mail, prepaid, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address

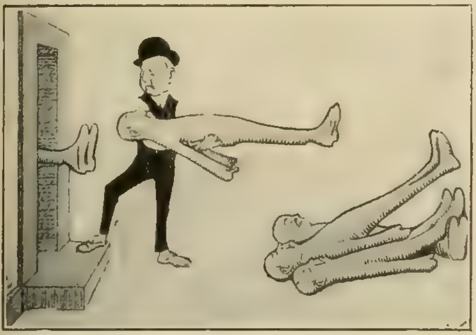
When you are hungry, and have the money to buy a meal, you would not fill up on peanuts, would you?

You are running a motion picture theater and want to cut down on your electric bills, and at the same time get the best light to be had on the screen, don't you?

Well, why expect to get these results with inferior and cheap current savers? You can't do it.

Buy a "Hallberg" economizer and the trick is done. If you got stung with one of the "imitations" throw out the "dead one" like our friend in the picture. Hallberg will allow you something for it in trade just to get it off the market.



Throwing Away the Dead Ones

The Eye Comfort System of Indirect Illumination

Since the first advertisement in this paper, a few months ago, theatres in all sections of the country have installed this system. All enthusiastic, and acknowledge that theatre lighting has been revolutionized.

Even illumination throughout your theatre can be obtained without a light in range of vision.

No glaring side lights to detract from the detail of your picture, and more perfect depth and perspective are assured.

Our engineering department will furnish you, free of expense, reports and recommendations on request.

Plant Ready for Taking Moving Pictures

The attention of Moving Picture Manufacturers is directed to a complete and fully equipped plant, ready for occupancy, and situated only 35 minutes from New York.

The former Winter Quarters of Miller Bros. & Arlington's 101 Ranch Wild West, situated between Passaic and Paterson, N. J., may be RENTED ON REASONABLE TERMS for the purpose of producing films. There is a bunk-house with kitchen and range, capable of accommodating 60 people. The buildings include car sheds and ample storage room for scenery. There is a private side-track with passenger, baggage cars and engines ready for use.

The property is located on a curve of the Erie Railroad, facilitating the production of railroad pictures. Plenty of open ground for drills, "chases" or cavalry pictures.

Horses, stage coach, cow-boys and Indians will be provided from California Frank's Famous Wild West Show at half rates for the Winter months. The full equipment of the Wild West Show will be available until about April 15.

A thorough investigation and inspection of the property is invited.

THE MORTGAGE

The Mortgage is due and Old Harvey demands payment, accepting as an only alternative, the hand of the pretty daughter in marriage. Anne, though she loves another, is forced to consent. But on the very threshold of the church the bridal party is halted by the breathless arrival of Tom, who has struck oil and reaped a fortune. The rest can be conjectured.

4 FEATURES YOU MUSTN'T MISS—CHECK 'EM AS YOU GET 'EM

RELEASED TUESDAY, JAN. 30

Last "Greatest January" Feature

AS IT WAS IN THE BEGINNING

An indifferent society girl of the present is introduced at a function to a man who impresses her as being "masterful." Later, alone and musing, she is carried back to a prehistoric age, and finds there a savage, the counterpart of the stranger at the ball, who fascinates and dominates her just as the stranger did. This story will make you THINK!

RELEASED FRIDAY, FEB. 2

Another Mystery Sensation

ON PROBATION

is a story with a climax that startles and thrills—that is high mystery and high surprise. Prepare for SOME wind-up here! Incidentally, let us say that the little girl in the garret will "go" straight to the hearts of your patrons, that they will have unbounded sympathy for her and then unbounded applause as the big twist at the end works out to her advantage.

I am Pulling For YOU!

Here's my latest scoop:

Cardinal Farley

was met by a special committee on a specially chartered boat, and my camera man was on that boat! See the great ecclesiastics and merchant princes posed for me; then I got the great spectacle of loyal Catholics who greeted him on his way to the Cathedral.

For* SATURDAY, JAN. 27th
(In place of "THE NURSE")

Is that proof that I'm pulling for you? Did you ever get such a galaxy of features in your regular releases before? Right on top of the $15,000,000 fire and Durbar reel comes this great scoop,—and Mildred Holland and Juliet Shelby still to come! And only Heaven knows what great feature I may get for you to-morrow! Don't that make you root for me? Have I shown you that I've got the guts to back up my word? Better get in touch with me now—my Boost Envelope is very fat this week. Feller writes me it's his Bible—it will be yours, too!

By the way—notice how I don't go into spasms every week about my releases? Here's why: I don't need to. Get 'em and you'll send me a sweet letter.

THE CHILD OF FATE

Adapted from Thomas' Famous Opera

RELEASED FRIDAY, FEB. 2ND

The photo-opera sensation. A revelation in exquisite scenic values. An all-star cast. A wonderful production staged regardless of expense. Shows a real house on fire.

These superlative adjectives are used advisedly. We are not "booming through our hats." Audiences will be more enthusiastic than we are after they have seen this feature production exhibited.

We will supply the Exhibitors, through their Exchanges, with special music, one-sheets and three-sheets. We will send direct, on application, special lobby-displays and handbills.

The Fixer Fixed

The comedy release of Wednesday, January 31st

Any man who is mean enough to try to "double-cross" anybody always gets the dirty end of it. The "Fixer" in this comedy tries to fix things for himself, with his cousin's money. He gets "in Dutch," and the pretty damsel marries a real man, and the fixer is fixed good and proper. Shows Billy quite to advantage. On the same reel is shown

The Wonderful Oswego Falls

A thrilling scenic picture well worth featuring. The pictures reveal vistas of unimaginable scenic beauty.

Frozen On Love's Trail

Released Sunday, January 28th

A half-breed Indian sacrifices his life for a white girl who has been kind to him. He is frozen to death in the snowy mountains, while his team of dogs and sled carry the one he idolized to safety. The story has all the qualities of one of those novels which keeps you up to the small hours of the night. The natural beauty of the scenery amidst which this story has been staged cannot be too strongly adjectived.

Released, Wednesday, January 24th, 1912
Length about 1000 feet

THE HEART OF A BOSS

A wonderfully pretty story, being the rise and fall of a newsboy, only to rise again to position and happiness. The newsboy meets with an accident and is succored by a bank president and his little girl. The newsboy later becomes a political "Boss" and has the opportunity to get the bank president out of serious trouble. Madeleine, the child, grows up to be a beautiful girl; the ex-Boss and newsboy falls in love with her, and the story ends with kisses and a ring.

Scene from "THE HEART OF A BOSS"

Released, Thursday, January 25th, 1912
Length about 1000 feet

THE OFFICE FAVORITE

Marie Jodson, an adventuress and sweetheart of a cracksman, gets a position in Donald Douglass' office and insinuates herself into his good graces, thereby undermining the office favorite, Josie Olmstead. The pair of crooks plan to rob the safe, and are discovered by Josie, who phones for the police, but gets a blow from the cracksman's club. Little Jimmie, the office boy, plays a big role in the story, and finally sets matters right, so that the Boss recognizes the value of the little office favorite, and they do say he will marry her.

Released, Saturday, January 27th, 1912
Length about 1000 feet

THROUGH THE DRIFTS

The widow Alder, postmistress of a lumber camp in the Northwest, is courted by two men, Holmes, the postrider, and Headly, a lumber Jack. The widow favors Holmes, and one day he took little Ruth in the sleigh for a ride to the next station. They are overtaken by a blizzard, and Holmes abandons the child to take care of himself. Headly goes out in search and rescues both, and when the child tells her story, the widow finds out which is the more worthy man.

THE POOR RELATION

This is a modern Cinderella story, not a fairy tale, but the realism of to-day. A little unfortunate, but with a moral that turns the laugh on the too-ambitious and selfish. Winnie is the Poor Relation, and is treated rather badly, but she wins out through innate goodness, much to the chagrin of her stepmother and her daughter.

The pictures tell the story very graphically.

on the pronunciation of

CIN-ES

It is not "SIGNS" — It is not "KINES"

Somewhat Americanized, it is pronounced CIN-ES with two (2) syllables, as if spelled "Sin-ees"

This isn't exactly like the original, either, which is more properly called 'Chin-ess,'' but what's the use of splitting hairs?

So please refer to Cin-es (Sin-ees), with accent on the first syllable, when you call for the film.

TRADE MARK

Thomas A Edison

The demand for motion pictures far outstrips the supply.

Get in the game! It is still young. Every good motion picture show has every chance of success in its favor. The principal problem is the choice of the machine. A cheap motion picture machine will destroy whatever patronage you build up, will eat up your profits on repairs and spells "down and out" sooner or later. A good machine, projecting the clear, steady pictures, maintains the patronage you build up and constantly increases it, brings back the same crowd day after day, night after night.

TRADE MARK

Thomas A Edison

THE Edison Projecting Kinetoscope

the best motion picture machine made, is none too good for you. It is by far the least expensive to operate and maintain, the simplest, the most accessible, requires fewest repairs and will outlast any other motion picture machine ever built.

Write us to-day for full particulars of the Edison Kinetoscope and copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

Facts and Comments

WE are once more passing through a period of monotony in moving pictures. Such periods, of course, are bound to come, but the present one seems to settle into a long tenancy. The monotony is especially observable in what are called photoplays. It is not the thinness of the plot which deserves blame and calls for correction, but the everlasting sameness. Happily the motion picture does not depend entirely upon the drama, as does the stage; otherwise it could not retain its hold upon the public. It has industrial, educational and scenic material to draw from and, when it finds itself swamped by a mass of stale and time-worn themes and seemingly finds itself unable to get away from this dreadful staleness and sameness, there is plenty of other stuff which is profitably filmable. It is natural for these spells of monotony to recur within certain times. The longer the policy of accepting none but "inbred," studio-made scenarios continues in certain quarters, the more frequent will be these recurrences of monotony, with consequent loss of profit, prestige and patronage. Granting that all "home-made" scenarios are the works of near-Shakespeares, they cannot bear fruit at every season, and the staleness and sterility, which is the worst blight of the motion picture, begin to set in.

This brings the scenario situation to the front once more. While some companies are showing themselves progressive in their dealings with scenario writers, others, among them the supposedly best ones, are the very opposite, and do all in their power to discourage talent by offering starvation prices. Even literary hacks of the cheapest type could not subsist upon the prices offered by companies who vaunt their liberality in many a column of bombastic advertising. It has been said, with only too much truth, that some of the greatest dramatists had to battle all their lives with poverty, and one or two actually died of hunger. If such things occurred in the days when the cost of living was extremely low, what shall be expected at the present time? The pick and shovel offer far more chance than the powers of imagination, plus the dramatic instinct and the literary quality. We seriously advise some of the distinguished companies offering such sums as five and ten dollars for scenarios to maintain a cheap provision store and offer cheap hams and canned vegetbles as a reward for the industrious scenario writers.

THE new year has brought together the legislatures of more than twenty States. It is certain that in some way every one of these legislatures will deal with matters of vital importance to the motion picture. Fire regulations, censorship, licenses, building ordnances, will be some of the important affairs calling for legislative action. This, then, is the proper season for the work of our organizations of exhibitors. In too many States the legislators are acting without advice or co-operation from exhibitors or manufacturers, and foolish, oppressive laws are enacted. Then comes the wearisome process of testing the constitutional soundness of these laws in the courts, and the exhibitors lose, even if they win. A little forethought and prompt action in due season will prevent all this, and now is "the accepted season." THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD on more than one occasion has offered its help in bringing proper facts and figures before legislative committees and co-operating in every way with organizations of exhibitors for the good of the industry. It is timely to repeat and emphasize this offer now.

WE quote this cable despatch from London:

> More Than 4,000 Halls in Great Britain and Ireland
> The growth of picture palaces continues unabated. There are now over 4,000 of such places of entertainment in Great Britain and Ireland. Fully $5,000,000 is said to be invested in the provision and working of halls alone, and over 3,000 persons are employed. This leaves out of account the people employed and the large sums invested in the development of auxiliary branches of the industry. A total of 2,000,000 persons represents approximately the daily audience at these picture shows.

Every one of the two million spectators look at more American-made than any other kind of films. The picture is no small factor in Americanizing the older countries of Europe.

THE invasion of the Wordless Play with Music, as predicted by THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD last September, has become a reality. One of the plays, called "Sumurun," based on a tale from "The Arabian Nights," has started a run at one of the prominent theaters in New York City. To a friend and student of the moving picture it was a remarkable thing to see a fashionable audience crowd a theater, paying from one dollar up to three to see a moving picture in the flesh. Professor Max Reinhardt, of Berlin, Germany, who is responsible for this new departure in the theatrical field, has a series of these wordless plays with music and it is said that, both in London and in Berlin, all his presentations were attended with distinguished success. It is doubtful, whether this success will follow the productions to these shores. There are some very clever actors in the cast of Sumurun, but no cleverer than a dozen or more American thespians of the silent stage. Considering the fact that the American moving picture actor has to enact widely different parts often within the range of less than a week, it is reasonable to assume that if he had a chance of developing his art like the German actors for a series of months his performance would challenge comparison with the best that has been shown in Sumurun.

IN a report of a raid on a place where films of an indecent character were exhibited to a "select" audience, the press of this city makes it plain to its readers that such films are not a part of the output of the organized manufacturers. A few years ago the raid would have let loose a torrent of editorial wrath upon motion pictures in general. While the police are doing such good work as raiding indecent exhibitors of this character, it would be well to have them look after a specially atrocious crime film, called "Tracy the Bandit," which with lurid and offensive posters and highly objectionable "literature, is going the rounds of certain theaters in New Jersey and New York.

Originality Versus Adaptation.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

COPYRIGHT will come with the big photodrama as a measure of protection to playwright and producer from weak imitations that always follow large ccess of any kind and to safeguard both exhibitor and blic from palpable frauds and impositions, whether or t a political appointee at Washington neglects what he paid to do. The registration of photoplays by their thors is first evidence that the work is at least regarded original, and it may draw a sharp line between ill- ited adaptations and dramatic compositions especially nstructed for screen presentation.

Mr. Sargent made a creditable struggle to obtain what e registry office was created to give, not to deny or to ohibit by costly and complicated process; but his irmish was unsupported, and attack must be made all ong the line. Original plays must be recorded to pro- ct both dramatist and producer against those who do t consider themselves liable to punishment under com- on law for taking what they may imagine has already en previously appropriated from some other source.

Most producers who are capable of turing out high- ass dramatic compositions for screen presentation, and e ready to do so as soon as the business emerges from present confusing scramble for quantity irrespective of ality, will probably find it necessary to register what longs to them, just as a publisher does a novel costing ousands of dollars to print, and these investors of time d capital will be staggered by the opinion expressed in r registry office that a photoplay is literature.

It is almost inconceivable that a public officer of aver- ge intelligence should have replied to Mr. Sargent's quiry in terms such as those of his letter published in r issue of January 20, 1912. Aside from his reitera- n of the copyright enactment, Register Solberg's com- unication seems to deplore the attempt of men of ideas shield from trespass what, more than any other form property, is in sore need of preservation from injury d theft. A man's original ideas are his very heart's ood as compared to what he earns by routine service, d the public register is a necessary regent with vicari- s authority in matters of this kind, appointed for de- nsive, not evasive duties.

His competency is now in question.

He plainly states that a photoplay scenario must be assified and dealt with as literature. Just as plainly this sertion is without other foundation than offhand per- nal opinion, because a photoplay scenario is not written r publication at all, nor even for spoken performance, nce it could not be consistently published as literature.

A drama is a story put into action, a story of human e told by representation so that its appeal is largely and mediately visual, sometimes with pantomime and music, metimes with pantomime and speech, and sometimes ithout words or music in support of the action. A otodrama is a story put into action for the same imme- ate, visual appeal, and it is very distinctly a drama. Its mposition is not a matter of literary construction at all, t merely a union of details into an individual whole.

The scenario of a drama for the stage is almost identi- l with that used for the screen, differing in amplifica- n according to its character rather than its importance, t the minor ones most need registry of a simple and in- pensive kind. The plot is developed, the course of the ory is unfolded, the scenes and movements are indicated, the characters and episodes are described, and the fact that this dramatic scheme is often shown in condensed form for purposes of convenience does not indicate that it is without value as an original composition. In reverse, it distinctly indicates no intention of publicaton as literature. It really constitutes the purest form of dramatic composition.

I am afraid Mr. Sargent has bothered the registry office. He actually wanted to know, you know, whether or not an American with original ideas expressed in pure dramatic composition could simply record his claim at a government office created and equipped for that express purpose. If the Register is annoyed by the prospect of recording what he characterizes as mere outlines and bare suggestions in one breath and would have classified as literature in another so the "office would have no difficulty in making registration," as he puts it, we can start a registration bureau at The World office; but he may change his mind. Perhaps he is guided by precedent rather than common knowledge, of would establish a precedent that a dramatic composition never intended for publication is not a dramatic composition, but literature for publication, on the ground that a registry bureau is not for registration.

The audience of the photodrama is one of many, many millions, and it can best be reached with the drama of ideas. Aside from private discourse, we used to go to high-class novels for mental stimulus, but the marvelous improvement in newspapers drew us away from books. In a like manner moving pictures will draw on theater patronage as the photodrama gains in quality, but we can not reasonably expect this betterment to come from the employment of venerable plots, characterizations and incidents given in the few novels and poems suited to dramatic representation on which the copyright has expired. For depicting certain aspects of life the novel is and will long remain ideally the best form, but while the novelist tells the great human story alone and unaided by means slowly grasped, by intellectual cleverness in handling his medium, the dramatist is only part and parcel of a composite arrangement for telling a story, and presenting an idea in the telling, by means of swift action easily comprehended in which many others on and off the stage play important parts. Brilliant novels are shorn of their chief value in the acted play, just as many dramas would lose heavily if they could not be seen in action. Novelists often fail as dramatists and playwrights as authors of "literature," if I may be permitted to use that word as ordinarily employed before the registry office got hold of it, because of wide differences of construction and intention. The fine photodramas of the future, those serving to increase the value of moving pictures in public estimation, will not be adaptations of what we have already enjoyed in a natural form, differing essentially from that of play-making, but will come from the brood of young and vigorous playwrights now reaching active maturity through constant exercise of their talents in the face of all sorts of difficulties.

Without original playwrights, the whole business would fall flat or merely serve to fill in time between some more interesting forms of action. Clearly visible to those who can read the signs of the times, if not to those who would need a Gabriel's trumpet to wake them up, is a tendency to help and not hurt the new dramatists of original ideas.

The Sectarian Film Once More.

FROM various sources in Utah and Montana and other adjacent States grave complaints and protests are made against certain films about to be released in the near future and supposedly dealing with incidents from Mormon life and episodes in the history of Mormonism. Special reference has been made in these complaints to a future release of the Great Northern Film Company, entitled "A Victim of the Mormons," and a proposed release of the American Film Manufacturing Company to be called "The Mormon." The press of these regions has taken the matter up, criticizing in a general way the choice of subjects and titles. We quote from the Salt Lake Tribune of January 11th:

> Incensed at what is termed a libel on Utah, threatening the material development of the entire state, the Salt Lake Commercial Club and the Utah Development League yesterday set in motion all their influence towards the suppression of moving picture films now being circulated about the country, purporting to be a representation of the Mountain Meadows massacre.
> Telegrams were dispatched last night to the Pathe Freres concern at Boundbrook, N. J., demanding the immediate withdrawal of the films. If these are not heeded, the Utah congressional delegation at Washington will be asked to take up the matter and the national film censorship bureau will be appealed to.
> Another telegram was dispatched to Frank Wiggins, secretary of the Los Angeles chamber of commerce, asking him to use that organization's influence to the suppression of the films in that section.
>
> It is in Los Angeles and surrounding California towns that the films have made their appearance within the last week or two and have created a widespread sensation.
>
> Reports began pouring into the Commercial Club yesterday from Salt Lakers in Southern California, calling attention to the pictures, and declaring them to be grossly exaggerated and an insult to Utah.
>
> The telegram sent by Joseph E. Caine, secretary of the club, to the Pathe Freres Company was as follows:
> "It is reported here that films produced by your firm alleged to be representation of the Mountain Meadows massacre in Utah are now being produced extensively in South California and other parts of the United States. We consider this a libel on the state of Utah and respectfully demand that you withdraw these films from circulation at once."
>
> The Development League, through its president, Frank M. Driggs, sent a telegram similar in substance.
> The telegram to Mr. Wiggins of the Los Angeles chamber of commerce was as follows:
> "Reported here that a motion picture film alleged to be representation of Mountain Meadows massacre is being shown in Los Angeles and at beach towns. We consider this a libel on Utah and request that you use your influence with the manufacturer to have it withdrawn at once. It is made by Pathe Freres, who has a branch factory in or near Los Angeles. Hundreds of Salt Lakers are now sojourning in Southern California and hundreds more will accompany Elks' excursion at an early date. In order to preserve the cordial relations existing between your community and ours, will you please do everything in your power to eliminate this libelous representation."

Mr. Lester Park, prominently identified with the moving picture industry in the sections mentioned, has written a lengthy and impassioned letter to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in which he expresses his conviction that the proposed reels are in effect libels upon the conscientious beliefs and traditions of the religious denomination called "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," more generally known as Mormons. He says among other things:

> In your edition of December 30th, a full page illustration of a scene taken from a three-reel production to be released as special on February 3rd, 1912, and termed, "A Victim of the Mormons," was reproduced, and it is against the presentation of this subject that I wish to enter a vigorous and justifiable protest, not only as a member of the religious body against whom this unwarranted and malicious attack is directed, but also as a film exchange representative, and a moving picture exhibitor, whose entire business interests and prospects are tied up in the future of this great industry.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD holds no brief either for or against the Mormons. It proposes to examine into the protests and complaints in a wholly dispassionate spirit, seeking no favors, entertaining no fears, but viewing the situation from the standpoint of a sincere and earnest friend of the moving picture. None of the reels objected to has as yet been released, but from the statements of persons who have seen the picture, "A Victim of the Mormons," from the letter and tone of the advertising matter sent out in connection therewith and from the published scenes of the reels a fair judgment may be formed as to the fact whether the complaints and protests made are groundless or not.

We have on more than one occasion condemned an attack in films on the religious tenets of any set of human beings. The Mormons are, it is true, unpopular in certain sections of the country. Their prophets and leaders have in the past on more than one tragic and deplorable occasion been made the victims of mob fury and have been done to death without the semblance of a trial. They are even to-day accused of disloyalty to the government and of practises contrary to the penal laws of the States in which they live. The controversy between Mormon and Gentile, though no longer disgraced by savagery of past practises, is still going on. We believe, however, there is great mutual forbearance and toleration, much of the ancient prejudice is dying out, the warring factions are beginning to recognize the merits and good qualities of each other and peace and amity have given place to strife and hatred.

It seems to us a bad use of the moving picture to threaten such a desirable condition of affairs. The stirring up of religious prejudice, the opening of old wounds, the renewal of bitterness is to be condemned utterly and without reservation. With every desire to be fair and just to the makers of the proposed releases it is impossible to resist the conclusion that the Mormons are attacked as a religious sect and made the objects of hatred, ridicule and contempt. If any films were to portray living men or women in such a manner and in such a light, the law would give them the right to sue for libel and prosecute their detractors criminally.

We cannot fathom the reasons which impel the production of such reels after the many bitter experiences which former similar efforts have brought down upon their perpetrators. It is quite possible that ignorance and a desire to be cheaply sensational account for these objectionable reels, and that there is no such deep-seated malice as the objectors allege. There are, however, two distinct kinds of ignorance: excusable ignorance and inexcusable ignorance. In view of our repeated warnings against sectarian films, in view of the disastrous results of such sectarian films to their makers, we are constrained to pronounce this continued ignorance as decidedly inexcusable.

We have no patience with the man who sees offenses where none are to be found. We have in the past always examined each case on its merits and have never been swayed by mere outcry and blatant noise. In the present instance, however, the evidence of the controversial, polemic, intolerant, sectarian and bigoted character of the films mentioned is simply overwhelming, and we take occasion to define our position once more with all the emphasis demanded by the situation.

We sincerely advise the prospective producers of sectarian films to heed that wisest of all counsels: "Judge not, lest you be judged."

A WORD IN SEASON.

Experienced and intelligent exhibitors know that between New Year's and Easter week is the best time for feature films of the sort of the Pathe "Passion Play," Dante's "Inferno" (Milano production), and "The Crusaders or Jerusalem Delivered." By a singular coincidence every one of the features mentioned is especially suitable for exhibition in and near the Lenten season. To put these features on fittingly and profitably get our booklets "How To Put On the Passion Play," "How To Put On the Crusaders," "How To Put On Dante's Inferno" (Milano production). They contain lectures covering every scene and running evenly with the pictures, musical suggestions and hints as to effects based on experience, together with other valuable matter too great to be enumerated in detail. "How To Put On the Passion Play" is in its second edition and the author has had numerous letters from pleased exhibitors, who have used the booklet to advantage. All these booklets are copyrighted and their author is W. Stephen Bush, whose lectures on motion pictures have attained much popularity, wholly based on their merits. The price of the booklets is nominal, a dollar will bring any of them to your address prepaid.

Music and Sound Effects for Dante's Inferno.

By W. Stephen Bush.

MUSIC.

IT may seem unnecessary to those who never had to combat the Powers of Human Stupidity to say that in the proper presentation of the Milano Films version of ante's "Inferno" music plays a great part, second in imortance to that of the lecture alone. After you have witnessed a performance of that great production with either faked" or shockingly unsuitable music, you feel as if it were solemn duty to prevent any further desecration by offerig a few simple suggestions.

Wherever possible an orchestra of six or eight pieces hould accompany the pictures. In the absence of such an rchestra there should be at least two instruments, a piano nd a good organ (one not over fifty years of age). It is olly to employ cheap men to play organ and piano. The methods of conducting a gent's furnishing store will not pply here. The organ's place is behind the screen; the iano had best be placed in the orchestra.

The musical program should be opened with the piano (in he absence of the orchestra), and almost any short overure will answer the purpose. Part of the "William Tell" verture is especially recommended, because it is generally t hand and the musicians are more or less familiar with it. There are, of course, many pieces more suitable than this, ut the ordinary orchestra seems paralyzed at the mere mention of Wagner or Liszt, and extraordinary orchestras are negligible quantities. After this overture follows the brief introductory of the lecturer and at its conclusion comes the next distinct number on the musical program, the "Garibaldi Hymn," which may be found in any of the ordinary collections of national anthems. This air is believed to be suitable for several reasons. It has plenty of fire and spirit, is in keeping with the initial titles in the original Italian and, last but not least, is sure to please the Italian part of your audience, which is generally large. Italians come to see the Inferno because they revere the genius of their immortal countryman, Dante Allighieri, who wrote the Inferno. The strains of the Garibaldi Hymn should be continued until the first scene of the Inferno proper appears, showing Dante lost in the gloomy forest, when the music gives way to the lecture.

The next distinct musical number in the performance comes with the scenes following the meeting of Virgil and Dante at the mountain's foot. This number is best rendered by the orchestra or the piano in front. Its character should be weird and mysterious; in a full orchestra the violin should dominate the situation. Let this music be continued without any interruption whatever up to the end of the title announcing the arrival of Charon on the shores of the River Acheron. It may be said here in passing that the music should always be busy while the titles are on the screen. There can, of course, be neither lecture nor effects while the titles are running, and to have complete silence makes a dead and disagreeable pause in the performance. The rest of the first reel has no distinct musical number.

If your first reel ends with the scene showing the great spirits of the ancient days on "the green enamel of the plain," finish with the strains of the "Evening Star" from Tannhauser. It is best to have your first reel end with this scene, such an ending being both natural and logical; the audience is led up, as it were, to the brink of the real Inferno. The proper atmosphere has been created.

The spectators, though they have not so far witnessed any of the more tragic scenes, are, with psychological skill, prepared for what is to come in the next reel. It goes without saying that here, too, we should be entirely guided by the spirit of Dante. It is part of such a program to pay attention to the order and sequence of the various cantos of the poem.

The Music for the Second Reel.

About a minute before the second reel is begun the organ behind the screen should get into action. The first scene of this reel shows Minos, the infernal judge, and his dreaded tribunal. By starting the proper music just about one minuate before the house is darkened, you resume your sway over the spectators' feelings. The most suitable music for this purpose is the playing of the Gregorian measure of the stirring and impressive hymn, "Dies irae, dies illa." The words and music of this ancient hymn will be found in any good-sized complete Catholic hymnal, which can be bought for about fifty cents. The very simplicity of the Gregorian measure makes it so powerful. It is very easily played and ought to offer no difficulty to an organist of fair, average ability. Now this hymn should be in full swing when the first scene of the second reel appears on the curtain. The music should stop promptly with the end of the title following this scene and the next musical number should be rendered by the piano. The music then should be something of a character to suggest "the stormy blast of hell," and such music is to be continued to the ending of the title announcing the spirits "injuring each other with bags of gold." There is no more distinct and special music until the announcement of Virgil's and Dante's passage across the foul waters of the Stygian swamp. Here let the organ resume the strains of the "Dies irae" up to the title ending with the words "assistance of an angel" when both music and effects give way to the lecture. When the lecturer has finished here, effects and music may be resumed, both diminishing, to end of this scene, which concludes the second reel.

Reel Three.

The music for this reel may be taken from the same source as the "Dies irae." I suggest that the organ play in rotation, or with variations, "Miserere," "In Exitu Israel," and "De Profundis." All these hymns may be easily found in the hymnal mentioned above; all are in the simple but sublime Gregorian measure, and all of them are easy for a fairly competent musician, pianist or organist.

The Last Two Reels.

Music of the character just indicated, all to be played on the organ, will be found most suitable in the fourth and fifth reel. In the fifth reel, during the scenes showing Ugolino and his offspring in the Tower at Pisa, music of a more secular character, to be played on the piano, may be found suitable and effective; for example, the well-known air from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." During the passage of the poets over the fields of ice the music should be mysterious rather than ecclesiastical in character, and the piano will be found to be better adapted for these scenes than the organ.

There remains one fine distinct musical number, which should begin at the middle of the second last scene of the fifth and last reel. When Virgil and Dante appear in this scene let the organ begin the "Gloria in Excelsis" from Mozart's Twelfth Mass and continue this to the very end of the performance. It gives a triumphant and satisfactory ending, doubly welcome to an audience that has just witnessed so much of terror and tragedy. Let the organist do his best here, play forte and with plenty of expression. Whenever the music ends simultaneously with the disappearance of the silhouetted forms of Dante and Virgil, its wonderful fitness will be felt and appreciated by every audience, composed in the main of human beings.

SOUND EFFECTS.

There are few pictures more capable of improvement through the introduction of suitable sound effects than the Milano production of Dante's Inferno, and there is none more easily and thoroughly spoiled through violent, unnatural and misplaced effects. In preparing a series of good sound effects for this feature, we must follow the example of the makers of the film, who, in turn, have followed with almost literal exactness the text of the cantos that have been filmed. Unless we consult the all-pervading genius of the great poet we are very likely to make the effects silly and offensive.

To begin with, we must reject the theory that an extraordinary noise outfit is needed in order to secure the best sound effects. Nothing could be more absurd than this idea, which seemed to guide one or two ignorant and incompetent individuals who, being utterly unable to understand a line of the poem, sought to drown their stupidity in a lot of unnecessary noises. The simplest outfit, such as is kept in all theaters, is amply sufficient. It is not the quantity, but the quality of effects which counts. At the psychological moment the most delicate and subdued effect will produce an impression on an audience which all the rioting of the average effect-man cannot hope to create. Nothing more is needed than a wind-machine, a bass drum, a thundersheet, rain, cocoanut shells, a horn, a chain, and a piece of iron or steel. The secret of working the sound effects successfully lies in the manner and method in which these simple tools are used. The guiding principle is to follow as closely as possible the letter or, at least, the spirit of Dante.

But Three Effects Needed in the First Reel.

An intelligent "effect-man" will husband his resources and not fire away all his ammunition in the first few scenes. The attempt to imitate noises which panthers, lions and wolves are supposed to make generally mars the otherwise beautiful second scene of the first reel. Either all the sounds will have to be imitated or none at all. It is stupid to have the panther growl and then have the lion "with head aloft and hunger-mad" stand there as if he had lost his roar through catching a cold, and the wolf follow in profound silence. The spectators are far more interested to know the meaning of the presence of these animals, as explained by a competent lecturer, than in having some one behind the scenes give a weird exhibition of what he thinks these animals might do just before feeding time.

In the next scene, where Beatrice ascends into heaven, it is the height of absurdity to make a noise like the wind on a stormy day around the Flat Iron Building. The ascent is that of a spirit, noiseless and swift. The first good effect in the reel comes after the title, "The Gate of Hell," where the robes of Virgil and Dante are seen to flutter in the wind, which comes up from the bluish, vapory depths below. Stop when the wind stops on the screen. Properly rendered, this is a fine effect, as it is the first and comes upon the audience with a proper introduction by the wind.

The next effect comes in the scene where the poets enter the gloom which greets them after they leave the rock with the fateful inscription: "Now was the day departing and the air imbrowned with shadows," etc. A clap of thunder just one second after the appearance of the poets in the imbrowned shadows, with a low rumble following, is effective; in the picture Dante is seen to turn around as if startled, and it appears as if the thunder had struck upon his ears.

There is nothing in the letter of the canto which would make these effects necessary, but the spirit of the whole description well justifies the effects, and the average spectator who knows nothing about the poem will understand the horror at the thunder much more readily than the recoiling "from some false resemblance in the twilight gloom." The third effect is a quick clap of thunder to accompany the lightning when Dante faints on the strand of Acheron.

The Second Reel Is Best Helped by Effects.

In many respects the second reel is perhaps the strongest, and it certainly is the one containing the most dramatic moments. A splendid effect may be worked in the second scene of this reel, "where the carnal sinners are condemned, in whom reason by lust is swayed." Dante describes the "stormy blast of hell" to be irregular and fitful. "As starlings on their wings are borne abroad, so bears the tyrannous gust those evil souls." His meaning becomes even plainer a few lines further on, where Francesca tells him her story, "while e'er the wind, as now, is mute." It appears then that Dante meant us to think of this wind as coming in gusts and fits with very short intermissions. Watch the picture closely and you will see that the film makers have carried out this idea most faithfully; the bodies move in groups, some resting for a moment, others in the main current of the hellish blast. Translated into instructions for the effect-man, this means that the wind-machine should be worked in fits and gusts, rising, diminishing to almost nothing and slowly rising again. With a proper rehearsal, following the motion of the groups, this effect is one of the strongest in the entire production.

Closely upon the Francesca da Rimini scene follow two scenes where simple rain effects skillfully and intelligently worked illustrate the picture wonderfully well. "Large hail, discolored water, sleety flaw through the dun midnight air, streamed down amain." It is, however, in the three scenes showing the passage of the poets through the foul waters of the Styx that the effects may be rendered overpowering. Here again we follow the spirit rather than the letter of Dante, for the poet, in his encyclopedic way, completes the description of the journey across the slimy pool in less than a hundred words. He says nothing of thunder or lightning. Both thunder and lightning may, however, well be introduced in harmony with the general spirit of the two cantos here filmed.

As soon as the title announcing Phlegas has been flashed on the screen there should be distant thunder, which may be best imitated by having the bass drum worked in the furthest background of the stage, as far away from the screen as possible, though, of course, straight back of it. The effect is then suspended during the showing of the "Philip Argenti" title, to be resumed with increased force when the title disappears, and worked to its height when the replying signals of Dis, i.e., the fires of Dis, the evil city, appear.

The drum should then be close behind the curtain and may be aided by the thunder sheet, and the effects should be continued fortissimo to the next succeeding title. After the appearance of the angel toward the close of the last scene of the second reel, finish the picture with rumblings of thunder, dying away with the picture.

Little Room for Effects in the Last Three Reels.

Except when the puffing of flames and vapors seem to make it appropriate, there should be little thunder in the third reel, and that little of a subdued character. It is wel here to resist the temptation to an anticlimax to the splendid finish of the end of the second reel. The scene showing Capaneus in the third reel allows of some vehement thunder and lightning. There are effects with a chain and piece o iron that may be worked in the scene showing the torture and death of Piero delle Vigne (Peter of Vigna). These effects, however, should be well studied and rehearsed, or else entirely omitted. There is, however, one magnificen effect that may be introduced immediately after Dante and Virgil have left the bridge from which they gazed down upon the lepers and before they enter the circle of the giants Says the poet: " . . . I heard a horn sounded so loud the peal it rang had made the thunder feeble." The momen the title announcing the giants is flashed on the screen the horn ought to be sounded, and the bolwing continued unti Nimrod appears with the horns about his body. Properly worked this is a most appropriate effect. There remains bu the Ugolino incident in the last reel. Here the galloping of a horse, first approaching and then dying away, may be imitated to good advantage, as well as the sound a key sharply thrown against the stones on the ground is supposed to make. This not only adds to the realism but take away some of the horror of the subsequent scenes. The idea of one effect-man to show the stumbling of Virgil' foot in the next to the last scene of the fifth reel by creating a noise like a riot on a bowling alley or at a wake is characteristic of the intelligence, or rather the lack of it, which moves some of these noise-makers; a sensible person wil of course avoid it.

Effects Subordinate to Music and Lecturer.

It should always be borne in mind that the pictures are to be chiefly illustrated by music and lecture, and effects are of value only when they fit in with the general harmony o things. Neither music nor lecture should ever suffer on account of effects. The idea that Dante's Inferno depend for its success on the amount of noise made behind the screen is a popular one with those whose intelligence carrie them no further, but it must always appear ridiculous to the general public, who possess an instinctive feeling of what i becoming, and whose taste, we grieve to say, is frequently much better and cleaner than that of the men who seek to entertain them.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE AMERICAN ECLAIR.

THE new American home of the Eclair pictures at Fort Lee, New Jersey, is an education in itself to any one fortunate enough to be allowed to visit it. It would hdly seem possible to visit a manufactory for moving pictu films more thorough than this one. Everything that Aerican energy and commercial enterprise, coupled with Fnch knowledge of the arts and sciences, can command al here brought into conjunction, making a combination wch from the beginning is a guarantee of efficiency and scess. The factory in itself is a model of its kind, the wrk of a French architect thoroughly schooled in cinemateraphy; it is perfect in its adaptability for the production o the high-class work which this company stands for. The psonnel of this American branch is most notable; while i would be difficult and perhaps unwise to give priority to a country or person, it is enough to say that every deptment is headed by "a master in his line." Wherein the Fench excel there is a most capable Frenchman, and wherein t American may excel, there is to be found a native "as t the manner born," both noticeably working together in sendid harmony for their common good. Photographic a and chemical science are here found at their best. A detl description of either department would show each to t a school of its kind.

n the studio, artists of the first order are blending their ailities in preparing those scenes which shall amuse and eify thousands of people.

It is pleasing to record that the Eclair management apeciate the importance and responsibility of their art, and e determined to give the world only the best. This means at the educational picture is not going to be relegated to minor place, but that it is to have a leading position in lair productions.

If the common test of character, "From what sort of a me do you come?", is to be applied to the Eclair, it can rtainly respond with credit; recreant, indeed, will be any or picture coming from such a source. Perfection in the gher realm of cinematography is certain. The only possible akness is the usually uncertain human element which is be found everywhere. The well-balanced, capable, courtus, educated and cultured staff of the American Eclair ould be a guarantee of the strong, clean, moral and edutional quality of their picture productions.

UTHORITIES AND CRITICS NOW PRAISE THE PICTURES.

There appears in the "Munsey" Magazine for January a ngthy and well-illustrated article entitled "Education By oving Pictures," by Walter Prichard Eaton. The review an exceedingly interesting one, well written, candid and iversally helpful. Its measure of praise of the educational rpose and value of the moving picture is unstinted, dearing the conviction that "The time will come when every ementary school will be equipped with a film projector." peaking of former opposition to the picture, the writer says nstead of decrying this great natural interest, it is the part wisdom to utilize it." The most interesting account is iven as to the value of the film showing the dangers of e common house-fly; this film was fully reviewed on these ges at the time of its production. It is now interesting to ad that its production has been so beneficial. Mr. Eaton ys: "We fancy this film caused many garbage cans to e covered. It was rented by the state boards of health of ouisiana, Kansas and Florida, by the health boards of Chigo and Galveston, by the Oklahoma agricultural experiental station, the University of Wisconsin, and the Battle reek Sanatorium."

In further commendation of the educational pictures Mr. aton traverses the same lines as those which have govrned these pages for a long time. It is beginning to appear ow that the press is everywhere taking up the beneficial ide of the moving picture, after having been convinced (over eir own predictions to the contrary) that the moving picure is the greatest educational factor of the day. It will inerest the readers of this page to know that nothing appears in the excellent article in "Munsey's" but that which has already appeared here many times in one form or another.

The New York Journal, through its versatile editor, Mr. Arthur Brisbane, is now in the forefront of educational moving picture champions. But one year ago The Moving Picture World was compelled to expose the hypocrisy of the "Journal" in its constant attack on the pictures, while their own publication was far from clean. To-day that is all changed, and not only in the columns of the "Journal," but publicly, in person, Mr. Brisbane is praising the value of the picture and predicting its permanence and in turn rebuking critics.

The New York "Globe" is publishing a series of articles edited by Mr. Haskins upon "The Development of the Moving Picture." They contain a history of the origin and growth of the moving picture, both as a commercial enterprise and a source of educational and pleasure-giving value. These articles are evidently intended to further enlighten an intelligent public as to the practical value of cinematography, and are a welcome addition to the literary testimonies which are now so prolific.

Among the various authorities who have "changed front" in their attitude towards the picture must be named the "Brooklyn Recreation Committee" and the "Neighborhood Associations," which held a joint meeting recently at the Brooklyn Polytechnic. One of the principal speakers, who was also a member of the Mayor's committee, is reported as saying: "When the moving pictures were introduced, the better class of people generally would have nothing to do with them; now, however, the moving picture has become a national institution, which has its place in the natural scheme of things just as the trolley car and telephone have." After laying the blame for youthful depravity upon the dance halls, the speaker continued: "Do not make the common mistake of believing that these shows are patronized by the dullest people, for that is not true. The moving picture has become the greatest form of amusement for the masses. For that reason it is a good thing, enabling the working man to take his family to enjoy high class and expensive productions." Other speakers advocated the support of moving pictures now becoming so educational that a wise support of such is proving the better way to combat other social evils.

The New York "Times" reports as a "special" the teaching of morality in public schools by means of moving pictures taken from life, showing what is right and what is wrong. Under the superintendence of Milton Fairchild, the originator of this special plan, the Fitchburg, Mass., high school has been the first to introduce the series. The distinct object in view is to teach the rights and wrongs of questions which daily arise among school children, such as fights between boys, squabbles between girls, playing games fairly, etc.

The teacher gives the necessary explanatory details, and some special lectures have also been prepared by several professors of the State.

The foregoing evidences of support from just those people who ought to uphold the advance of educational cinematography, though tardy, is still timely; the conversion of the critic is, while commendable, yet not unexpected. Cinematography is winning its own way, fulfilling the desires and predictions of its friends and qualifying for any station in life.

THE MAN OF THE FUTURE.

Methuselah lived 969 years, yet it is computed that the man of to-day can accomplish more in one year than Methuselah could in his nine centuries. If this be true what are the possibilities of the man of the future? The early development of the child of the future must certainly have its effect on the man; earlier maturity in knowledge and the resultant powers along educational lines will certainly have its effects in no small or minor capacity.

There is nothing so effective in advancing civilization as culture; the cultivating of the higher faculties and qualities necessarily means the elevating of the human race, making the man of the future one of peculiarly special equipment equal to his advancing times.

It is computed that in America alone there are to-day a half million men with a fair knowledge of mechanics and engineering, and to none of whom this knowledge is absolutely necessary in his vocation, but is supplementary thereto, making each superior to many others as a result; it is needless to add that this knowledge comes through the possession of an automobile. Every automobilist is somewhat of an enginner and mechanic; his knowledge of gases and electricity is also increased and by means of travel he is both better informed and broader minded.

The motor boat and aeroplane also are increasing the powers of men everywhere, for this diffusion of knowledge is universal and not confined to a favored few. In like manner, the cinematograph has enlarged again the powers of every man, for even of those not necessarily interested in its use, many have an intelligent comprehension of its origin, nature, cause and purpose. The practical adaptability of the cinematograph to every industrial pursuit is making it more and more the friend and servant of man.

To those who have the advantage of visiting factories such as the Edison, Pathe, Eclair and similar firms, there comes the realization of a vast enterprise, new as the decade, yet weighted with the knowledge of centuries.

When it is remembered that of all those things which are absolutely necessary to-day none were in use a century ago, we can form some idea of the advantages coming to the man of the future who shall be designated a cinematographically taught man. The times in which a man lives, the school in which he was taught, are both important factors in his personal development, his character and his reputation. The child of the immediate next generation will begin where his father is to-day, using the cinematograph at five years old with greater purpose than is his father using it at fifty. Taking the moving pictures as his daily mentor at school, traversing all worlds of knowledge under its guidance and going forth into manhood with it still as his auxiliary in every way, the man of the future will be marvelously well equipped. To-day, with strange ease, we crowd a century in a decade; it is impossible to continue this ratio in the future, but it will not be long before that same century will be compressed within the possibilities of a year. It is a most extraordinary tribute to the capabilities of the human mind that nothing is beyond its grasp; great as is all progress, man is still greater. Wonderful as may be all development, man is its master, neither height, depth, length nor breadth are beyond him, and so long as nature continues to reveal her secret wonders man will still continue to use them all for his higher advance and his unending progress.

MOVING PICTURES AT LOCAL CLINIC.

Lackawanna County Medical Society Enjoys Privilege of Demonstration by Dr. Weisenburg at Scranton, Pa.

The successful adaptation of moving pictures in the field of medicine, for the study and diagnosis of diseases, proved a remarkable demonstration before the members of the Lackawanna County Medical Society, in the Young Men's Christian Association auditorium Tuesday, Jan. 2, as given by Dr. T. H. Weisenburg, of Philadelphia, clinical professor of neurology and neuro-pathology in the Medico-Chirurgical College of that city.

The county physicians and their guests were among the earliest of their profession to enjoy this extraordinary moving picture demonstration, as the idea is wholly new, Dr. Weisenburg being a pioneer in the successful development of this step towards more exact study and diagnosis of diseases. Only one other move along this line has been recorded in medicine, this being by a European clinician, but neither his thought nor his efforts approached anything like the work of the Philadelphia neurologist.

Some of the films shown were completed only a few months ago, so that the members of the County Medical Society feel favored in the distinction they enjoyed in what they heartily pronounced as a rare scientific treat.

The pictures, which are assured their successful development through the scientific interest and co-operation of S. Lubin, the Philadelphia moving picture producer, embrace the study largely of patients in the nervous wards of the Philadelphia General Hospital, or Blockley, as it is better known, an institution offering better advantages for the study of nervous diseases, it is believed, than any other hospital in the world. The camera was so employed that all of the characteristics of the diseased conditions shown were strikingly brought out, thus assuring the value of thei diagnostic study.

The varied gaits, movements and expressions were vividly reproduced, and there was an added advantage in the pictures, since the camera, which is quicker than the eye, recorded faithfully the finer movements which would escape unaided study, but which could be readily observed and studied when projected on the animated screen.

One picture was shown of a nervous condition never before recognized until it was diagnosed by Dr. Mills, professor of neurology at the University of Pennsylvania. It showed a man who was able to make all the movements of the muscles of his face on either side except that when he laughed, and then only one side of his face showed any movements. The case was diagnosed as a lesion of one of the important centers in the brain, and this diagnosis was confirmed following the death of the patient several months ago.

The views embraced all the important nervous diseases and they were explained in detail by Dr. Weisenburg Already they have proven their value in teaching students and last night they served the purpose for the interested physicians of an extended clinic, which under other circumstances might embrace a series of lectures without the illuminating value of the pictures reproduced on the canvas. The purpose of this study is to be extended to all the field of neurology, including the study of insanity. Some of the views shown last night have already been reproduced in a recent text book on medicine, and reproductions of the films have been sent to the libraries of leading cities in this country and Europe.

Dr. A. W. Smith, president of the County Medical Society, presented the lecturer, and he was greeted by one of the biggest representatives of the membership that has been present at a meeting in some time. While he was in the city Dr. Weisenburg held clinical conferences on several cases at the State and Scranton private hospitals.

SOME EDUCATIONAL SUBJECTS.

ZIONIST MOVEMENT PICTURED.

At the Park Theater in Brooklyn on Sunday morning next, the proprietor, Mr. L. Germain, is giving an exhibition of especial interest to the Hebrews of the locality and to the children of their Sabbath Schools. The nature of the entertainment will be in the interest of the Palestine Art Institute, "Bezalel." The films used on this occasion are private property, making the exhibition a unique one. They are the same films as those used on the occasion of the last Zionist Congress at Basle, showing the latest development of Jewish effort in the Holy Land. Biblical motion pictures will also be exhibited, the management of this most superior house desiring to make this event one of many of an especial character, each one educational in its own particular sphere.

"Widow Jenkins' Admirers"

A Western Farce Comedy by the Essanay Company Filled With Fun.

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

ESSANAY'S Western company has succeeded in compounding a sure cure for the blues, under the title of "Widow Jenkins' Admirers." This is a farce comedy, of full-reel length, without a tame moment during its mirthful run. Situation after situation appeals to one's sense of the humorous, compelling gusts of laughter and keen enjoyment. At any rate, that is the way it affected me during an advance presentation.

There is no pandering to the vulgar taste in this merry playlet, and there is no claim to greatness in its make-up. It is a laughmaker, pure and simple, as was intended, and one feels charged full with the ozone of good nature when the "widdy" turns the tables on Jed Simpson, the "smarty," in the closing scene.

A commendable feature of what there is in the story is the concealment of the climax until the last moment. The new turn in affairs comes so unexpectedly and so sharply, yet so humorously, that the picture dies while the spectator is in the throes of laughter.

I don't know the name of the lady who appears in the rôle of Widow Jenkins, but I should like to compliment her personally on the farcical flavor imparted to the character. That opening scene, when the "widdy" is seen accepting the condolences of a man friend on her bereavement, is simply irresistible. While simulating grief in woe-begone facial expressions, those eyes of hers are answering the flirting approaches of the friend, who appears willing to step into the deceased Jenkins' shoes.

The locale of the farce is laid in the West. Widow Jenkins runs the grocery store, post-office, etc., which have come to her on the death of her husband.

The local newspaper, referring to the will of the deceased Jenkins, has an item stating that all his property, including a 200-acre farm, has been left to his widow. The item closes with the sentence, "Here is a good chance for Snakesville's many bachelors."

We see a number of these bachelors reading the item, as they sit on a bench in front of Snakesville's leading hostelry. Each is anxious to find out whether his neighbor has read this particular news, and we see them disappear, one after the other, in the direction of the widow's store.

Jed Simpson, the Mutt of the aspiring bachelors, is first on the scene. The widow seems to have a tender spot in her bulky anatomy for him. As the others arrive, one at a time, under the pretext of buying molasses, flour and whatnot, we learn that Mrs. Jenkins is a diplomat. Simpson is used in the capacity of roustabout, and his temper is tried to the uttermost as he fills the various orders for the men who are trying to gain first place in the widow's affections. But he thinks of the widow's fortune and obeys her orders meekly.

When all the suitors depart with their purchases, Jed has a clear field, but he fears that his chances have been discounted by his rivals. As the mail comes in and Widow Jenkins goes into an inner room, which serves as post-office, he watches her sorting the letters, and discovers that she has little scruple about the sanctity of the mail, for she opens and reads several letters. She observes that she is being watched and pulls down the blind, with an angry jerk, in Jed's face.

A happy thought comes to Jed. Nettled at his abrupt dismissal, and knowing that the widow will read any mail that is addressed to him, he goes out and writes a letter to himself. This letter conveys the news that Jed's uncle in Tucson has died and left him $100,000. It is entrusted to an acquaintance, headed for Tucson, with the request that it be posted in that city.

In due time it reaches the Snakesville post-office, where it is opened and read with smiles by the widow. When Jed makes his next call and receives the letter, the widow puts him in the seventh heaven by her caresses and blandishments. But his joy is short-lived.

An attractive young lady, who turns out to be Jed's cousin, arrives in Snakesville the day after. She inquires for Jed and is directed to the Jenkins store. There she delivers a letter to him which he reads, and learns that his uncle in Tucson had really died and bequeathed him $100,000; but with the proviso that he must marry this cousin in order to inherit the amount. Jed puts the letter in his pocket and turns admiring eyes on his good-looking cousin. Without compunction he is about to lead her away, when Widow Jenkins seizes him in a mighty grip and swings him through the air, back to her side. Jed is her property and he knows that he must face the music. To complete his misery the pretty cousin, heiress to $100,000, is led away by a good-looking cowboy whom she had loved for some time without the knowledge of her dead uncle. This reel will be released on Tuesday, Jan. 23rd.

A De Luxe Presentation of Cinderella.

By James S. McQuade.

A VISIT to Minneapolis Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 3rd and 4th, gave me another opportunity to enjoy the de luxe picture presentations at the Lyric, under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel. The feature of the program was "Cinderella," Selig's three-reel subject, and I was curious to learn just how the Belasco of moving picture presentations would treat that charming silent drama. Not wishing to allow my enthusiasm to bubble over into exaggerated words of praise, I will simply state that "Cinderella" as presented at the Lyric held me in thrall every time I viewed it, and that means four times. Nor was I the only one so affected, for I was careful to observe how others in my vicinity were moved by the pictures. Every eye was riveted on the screen and the faces reflected joy and sympathy over the fortunes of the heroine, and bursts of suppressed laughter greeted the discomfiture of her enemies.

The Prince was watched almost as eagerly, and the little fairy godmother was a delight to the eyes of old and young. Many a happy dream has since been indulged in by the little boys and girls who clutched at mother's hand more tightly as the fairy carriage with its tiny horses, driver and pages, and the beautiful Cinderella, appeared on the canvas. As I looked on their glad faces that day, I felt happy that the world has grown brighter and fairer for child life, and that the moving picture has come into it to give it more happy and contented men and women.

The same high quality pictures were seen on the screen as on my first visit, and the same talented discernment was observable in the arrangement of the musical program and in the selection of vocal numbers. The presentation of "Cinderella" was still further enhanced by a lecture delivered by J. D. Callicott in a clear and simple way, the words timing well with the action of the pictures. At no time did Mr. Callicott obtrude his lecture on the audience; it was held strictly subservient to the pictures, and impressed everyone as a welcome and valuable aid.

Preceding "Cinderella" on the program were "Aboard a French Battleship" (Pathe) and "The Kromats" (Pathe), the latter showing a fine acrobatic act, each being accompanied by appropriate music. Between these reels the 'cello soloist, Bernard Siegert, played "Silver Threads Among the Gold," with "Annie Laurie" as an encore. Mr. Siegert's playing was a delightful musical treat and was deservedly applauded.

Immediately following "The Kromats," the lecturer introduced "Cinderella." Between the first and second reels Miss Agnes Lewis, contralto, sang "The Home Country," and between the second and third Miss Martha Butler, soprano, sang "Carita," a Spanish love song. Immediately after the third reel the Sextette, from Lucia, was sung by Dr. Ray Moorhouse, Thomas McCracken and Misses Butler and Lewis. A blue stage color spot was used with these numbers, except for the "Carita" song, which was sung with a bright stage and a white spot. These color effects were not only pretty, but they possessed an artistic value that appealed to one. Following the Sextette, "In the Clutches of a Vapor Bath" (Vitagraph) was run off.

The music used for "Cinderella" was as follows: "Hearts and Flowers," waltzes—"Sunbeams and Shadows" and "Ancient Court Whisperings," "Fairy Greeting," court music from Fisher's Incidental Music, andante movements from the same, Minuet from Paderewski. It would take too much space to describe the duration of the selections named during the presentation, but the skillful orchestra leader will be able to judge where to have each follow the other in the order given.

The instruments used during the presentation of "Cinderella" included a pipe organ, grand piano, and the string section of the orchestra only. All the string instruments were muted so as to permit the lecturer to be heard distinctly by the audience. The singers appeared in costumes similar to those worn in the court scene in "Cinderella."

On New Year's day the Lyric had a big crowd waiting outside for their turn to see "Cinderella." On Tuesday the mercury ran down below zero, and on Wednesday it was 15 degrees below. This kept many at home who, otherwise, would have attended.

Manager Rothapfel informed me that he never before had so many telephone calls about a picture as he had for "Cinderella." He was anxious to retain the film for Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday of New Year's week, but they were booked in St. Paul. He has arranged, however, to repeat "Cinderella" on the days mentioned, beginning Jan. 11.

Mr. Rothapfel billed "Cinderella" heavily and used all the aids furnished by the publicity department of the Selig Company. He advertised liberally in the daily newspapers and had a special electric sign in front featuring "Cinderella" and Mabel Taliaferro.

Admission prices were 10 cents for matinees and 10 and 20 cents for evening.

"Mignon."

Adapted from the Well-Known Opera By the Solax Company—Staged and Directed By Madame Alice Blaché.

CAST.

Mignon	Marion Swayne
Filina	Blanche Cornwall
Guglielnio	Darwin Karr
Laerte	Gladden James
Lothario	Edgar Lewis
Giarno	Lee Beggs
Federico	Billy Quirk

The story of "Mignon" is as fascinating as it is rhythmical. Mignon, the daughter of noble parents, is stolen, when a child, by a band of gypsies. Her mother dies from grief and her father, almost deprived of reason, gives up his ancestral home for the roaming life of a minstrel. He wanders from place to place in search of his child.

Mignon grows up without knowing her antecedents. She is ill-treated by the gypsies until her liberty is purchased by Guglielnio, a student finishing his education by traveling. She falls in love with her rescuer, but he is allured by the seductive charms of Filina, an actress.

Events come to a most thrilling climax at a castle where a grand fete takes place and where Filina is the lioness of the occasion. Guglielnio's attentions to her enrage the untutored mind of Mignon into a frenzy of jealousy. She is about to commit suicide when the soothing notes of a harp played by an unseen hand outside stops her. Lothario, her father, appears and she confides in the minstrel and implores his advice and protection. The half-crazed minstrel is carried away by the girl's story and sets fire to the castle.

This rash act is almost fraught with fatal consequences for Mignon. But it is the means of bringing father and daughter together and of opening the eyes of Guglielnio to the affection which Mignon had for him.

As produced by Madame Blaché the story gains charm. It is done in one reel and is finely presented by a capable cast. The costuming and settings are sumptuous and the acting is of a most intelligent order. Some of the scenes are most beautiful in conception and the photography is excellent.

We are advised that special music, adapted from the score of the opera, has been prepared for this picture and will be distributed by the exchanges.

KINEMACOLOR CHANGES MANAGEMENT.

Mr. Henry J. Brock, the well-known theatrical personality and partner of the Mark-Brock Enterprises, of Buffalo, N. Y., has succeeded to the active management of the Kinemacolor Company of America, replacing ex-President Ford, who has resigned and returned to the West to look after his banking interests. It can be stated also at this time that Mr. J. J. Murdock is no longer connected with the active management of the Kinemacolor Company, owing to the requirements of his various other interests. Mr. Sawyer, however, still remains with the company as active manager of the publicity and other departments.

With practical theatrical men at the head of affairs the Kinemacolor Company will begin an aggressive campaign and will be heard from in a decisive manner in the very near future. Plans are now being formulated for a regular service to theaters of the higher class throughout the country, and it is safe to say that Kinemacolor will be a by-word everywhere for the classiest there is in moving pictures.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S McQuade.

DR. E. B. McDOWELL, scientist and globe trotter, now on a tour of the world, writes an interesting letter to a Chicago friend, from Queenstown, New Zealand, bearing the date of Dec. 9, last. Dr. McDowell is an ardent supporter of moving pictures, and made it a point to master the operation of a camera some time before he set out on his present trip. He took with him a complete apparatus and supplies for taking negatives, and at the time of writing had shipped over 4,000 feet to Chicago.

After dwelling on the extreme difficulty encountered on the south island of New Zealand in taking negatives, owing to the infrequency of sunshine, he writes that he was about to cross the mountains to one of the famous West Coast sounds or fiords, where he expected to find something especially picturesque and striking. This trip meant a walk of 100 miles over the mountains and the carrying of apparatus, etc., on the backs of men, as neither horse, mule nor ass could be had.

Dr. McDowell frequently attended moving picture shows in New Zealand, in connection with which he writes as follows: "American films are in great favor; more than half, I believe, are of United States make.

"Vitagraph, Biograph, Edison and Lubin seem to lead, with a few Seligs, and the Independent make also is somewhat used. Selig's 'New Faith'—I think the name was—or the 'Sign of the Cross,' produced by the Los Angeles Company, set them crazy one night when I attended a show in Wellington.

"Pathe's assistant manager in Wellington told me that 'the American makers were producing some wonderful pictures of late, and especially Selig.' He also said that 'The Pony Express' was a sensation, and I have heard people in hotels talking about that film, so I hope to see it. I was working, the nights it was on in Wellington. Pathe's manager also spoke of Selig's animal pictures, stating that they had made a great hit.

"The American-made films are too thin for the amperage they use here, which, I am told, is from 60 to 80.

"I saw a show in Dunedin the other night, where the projected picture was not over 13 or 14 feet and, after the show was over, I asked the operator how much juice he was drawing. He told me he was using sixty amperes. The operators here don't seem to know anything about raising or lowering resistance to suit the picture, but use enough current to project the heaviest colored films, with the result that the film of average density looks glaring or chalky. I would advise, if it can be done, that American makers pick out the densest films for New Zealand.

"The motion picture theater has a higher standing in New Zealand than it has in the United States. I like their programs better, because nearly every program has one or two scenics and one industrial, and what I like, too, is that the people really admire these educational pictures and always applaud them, which is different from the practice in the United States. A good orchestra, of about ten pieces, is the rule in picture theaters here.

"The illustrated song, thank God! has not struck the country; or, if it has, it is dead and gone. The general admission is 25 cents, and 37 cents for a reserved seat. The theaters are pretentious and seat on an average 1,000 or 1,200 people."

After making the trip referred to at the beginning of this article, Dr. McDowell will go to Melbourne and take in Tasmania en route afterwards.

A Talk With Vitagraph's Representative.

C. L. Fuller, special traveling representative of the Vitagraph Company, passed through the city on Wednesday, January 10, on a trip to the Pacific Coast. On his way Mr. Fuller will stop over in all the principal cities on his route to ascertain trade conditions and to learn how the Vitagraph product takes with moving picture followers. He expects to be engaged for three or four months in the West. In returning he will stop over in the chief cities in the northern section, including Spokane, Butte, Fargo, Duluth, Minneapolis, St. Paul, etc.

Mr. Fuller informed me that he had just finished a six months' tour of the South, and that conditions there were very encouraging. The demand is for high quality films—first-class dramas, historical, comedy and scenics being i great favor. Military dramas are also in big demand. Vitagraph's "Vanity Fair" proved a wonderful success in th South, and subjects of a like nature are heartily welcomec

Moving picture theaters in the South offer exceptiona programs, and the smaller houses are being gradually re placed by pretentious structures. A majority of the pictur theaters in the South charge 10 cents admission, Mr. Fulle informed me.

Chicago Exhibitors' League.

The Chicago Moving Picture Exhibitors' League held th regular meeting last Monday, January 15, in their hall o Adams Street, and many matters of interest were brough up and considered. Preparations and plans were made t take care of the National Convention to be held in Chicagc August 12, next.

Full arrangements were made for a Dutch comers, to b held in the banquet hall of the Sherman House, Monda evening, February 5, at 11 o'clock. It is expected that a least 300 exhibitors will be present and also representative from the manufacturers, film exchanges and the press. Th occasion is looked forward to with unusual interest by al concerned.

The annual election of officers for the Chicago Leagu will take place next meeting, Monday, February 5, at o'clock P. M.

The following resolutions drafted and proposed by F. C Nielsen, of the Kimball Theater, and Julius A. Alcock, o the Edna Theater, this city, were adopted unanimously b the league, after due consideration:

Whereas, unusual suffering prevails among the destitute people of Chicag at the present time; a condition aggravated by the continued severity of tl weather, wherein the poor have neither sufficient fuel nor shelter to keep the warm, nor sufficient food to sustain life, and

Whereas, it is the duty of every person blessed with a fair share of tl world's goods to heed the cry of the less fortunate ones, and

Whereas, the giver shall find joy in giving, and his name shall be record in the Book of Life. And whereas they who relieve the bodily sufferings the poor shall be pleasing in the sight of God, and will be laying up f themselves imperishable treasures, be it therefere

Resolved that all moving picture theaters of Chicago represented by tl Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America take pleasure in setting asi Tuesday, Jan. 23rd, as a day to be given over to charity; the total receip of all performances on that date to be devoted to the relief of the poor the city. Be it further

Resolved that the entire amount be turned over to the Mayor of Chicag for distribution among the city's poor, in manner and form as his judgme may direct. Be it further

Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each of tl Chicago daily papers and that the press as a whole be asked to co-opera with us.

A New Independent Exchange.

The Majestic Film Service Company, an Independent concern, was recently organized in this city with officers a follows: C. J. Hite, president; R. C. Seery, manager; T. A Hewitt, secretary and treasurer.

This firm bought out the old Globe Exchange in th Northwestern building, on Fifth Avenue and Lake Stree The new firm will make headquarters on the first floor c the Northwestern building and has arranged for commodiou floor space. The firm will buy the complete output of th Sales Company. Fourteen reels are now being purchase weekly.

The president, Mr. Hite, will be remembered as bein long and favorably connected with the H. & H. Film Exchange in the Monadnock block. Manager R. C. Seer managed the Calumet, a Licensed exchange, at one time, an for some time past has been manager of the Standard, a Independent concern, with Joe Hopp as president. M Hewitt is known in financial circles here as an able man c good means.

Moving Picture Theaters in Grand Rapids.

I am indebted to K. W. Linn, special representative c Pathe Freres, for an interesting letter from Grand Rapid giving conditions of the picture business in that city.

Mr. Linn writes me that he discovered the first movin picture house in America running only one reel. The hous is to be found in Grand Rapids, and is known as the Monro Vaudette, at 65 Monroe Street. The manager is Mr. Williams. The house seats 143 people. The program consist of one reel and one song, the film being carefully selecte and rented from the General Film Company's branch a Detroit. The projection is excellent, and the house is cosil decorated. Merchants and business people frequent th house in the day time as they have just about time to se one reel of film, and at night the best people of the tow fill the cozy little house. The owners of the Monroe Vaudett are Gillighan and Smith. Other houses owned by the are the Idle Hour, seating 200 people; the Original, seatin 250, and the Idea, seating 240. These are all straight moving picture houses, running two Licensed films, furnishe by the General Film Company's branch at Detroit. Admi able projection and exemplary management prevail in all c them. Business was very satisfactory during Mr. Linn's sta

The Orpheum, a large house seating 1,200 people, and a o owned by Gilligham and Smith, uses two reels of film a l seven acts of vaudeville. The latter is booked by the Vestern Vaudeville Managers' Association. Pathe's Veekly opens the performance and is looked upon as a v uable asset by those in the box office. The prices are 1 20 and 25 cents.

Clever Advertising of "Cinderella" by Saxe Enterprises.

Frank Cook, publicity man and booking manager for the Sxe enterprises, was in the city recently, and drew my attition to the thorough manner in which "Cinderella" had ben given publicity, prior to its presentation at the Alhamta, the largest moving picture theater in the United States —seating 2,600 people. In addition to extensive newspaper avertising, all advantage was taken of the fine lithograph psters provided by the Selig Polyscope Company. The 8heet, two styles of 3-sheets, and the de luxe 1-sheet were a used.

In order to draw special attention to the importance of te presentation, a special circular letter, accompanied by te Selig folders, was sent out to the superintendents, prinpals and teachers of all the public and high schools in Ilwaukee. The letter read as follows:

"We take this means of calling your attention to the sperb production of "Cinderella" to be shown at the Almbra on Wednesday and Thursday, January 10th and th. Carefully read the enclosed folder which will give u some idea of the magnitude of this photoplay. It is i three reels, or over three thousand feet of film.

"Pictures of this sort, presented in a theater like the Almbra, are worthy your consideration and well worth entioning to your pupils. Mabel Taliaferro, the star of is production, was formerly the star of 'Polly of the Cirs,' which played in the Alhambra at $1.50 a seat. You ill now have the opportunity to see her at Alhambra ices.

"We wish to thank you for any attention shown and hope be honored with your presence."

An announcement was made by the principal or teacher at ch school, before dismissal.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Frank Kerr, city license inspector for Winnipeg, Man., as in the city from January 9-11. He returned home on the tter date. Mr. Kerr paid close attention to the conditions the picture business in Chicago, and familiarized himself ith the manner of censoring films, as practiced by the Chigo Censor Board. Mr. Kerr visited the Selig plant and xpressed himself as being astonished at its magnitude.

Last Sunday, January 14, I chanced to pass the Alcazar heater, on Madison Street, and my attention was attracted y the poster gotten out for Edison's fine picture, "Lead Kindly Light." I could scarcely believe my eyes when I ound that the singers in the church or meeting were holdng open hymn books in their hands and strange to say, he pages presented nothing but a blank—not even the ightest attempt to imitate a bar or a note of music. Such osers as these are a scandal to the trade.

This song is being introduced to Crystal patrons by Sam Beverly, the entire audience joining in the chorus.

MISS MAY BUCKLEY.

Probably the most important leading lady of the Lubin Film Company's five stock companies is Miss May Buckley, who has been featured and almost starred by many of the largest producers of the country. David Belasco may claim the credit of discovering this then talented child when she was playing in a Chinese play in San Francisco. The play was called "The First Born" and Belasco sent it to London with May Buckley in the role of Lucy Tsing. There she attracted the attention of Charles Frohman, George Edwards and other London managers, and was engaged by Mr. Frohman to play in the John Drew Company, presenting "A Marriage of Convenience." George Edwards then secured her for "San Toy," which delighted London for over a year.

Charles Frohman then brought her back to New York to play in "Hearts are Trumps," in which she held her own with one of the most notable companies ever organized, the cast including Amelia Bingham, E. M. Holland, Edwin Arden, Cecil de Mille and Josie Basby. Again she divided honors with James O'Neill in the Liebler & Company's beautiful production of "The Manx Man." In other Liebler productions she was equally successful and in turn became a prominent member of Henry W. Savage's players. One of Miss Buckley's greatest hits was the role of Michael, in the "Shepherd King." Of this performance David Belasco wrote, "I am very proud of the little girl I brought from San Francisco; as Michael you seemed to me as if you had stepped out of the Bible." Miss Buckley is very emotional and intense and the Lubin films will be much enhanced by her acting.

INDIANAPOLIS OPERATORS' ORGANIZATION PROSPEROUS.

Elmer H. Brient, secretary of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local 194, of Indianapolis, Ind., writes to The Moving Picture World recalling the fact that it is one year since the Indianapolis operators formed their organization and states that they have had a very prosperous year; also, that they are looking forward for far more prosperous times in 1912. Concluding, he writes: "There is one thing we are proud of and that is that there seems to be nothing but harmony existing between the managers of Indianapolis and our Local, and it is our sole aim to keep it so."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

JOSEPH T. STEED, of the Belle Theater, Ensley, Ala., writes in a recent letter: "We have had a great many letters of inquiry about my Colleen Bawn program and child coupon. We answered all who sent stamps. Anyone else who desires to know about these features should enclose return postage."

Most persons do not stop to think that while their inquiry requires only the courtesy of a two cent stamp, the expense in the aggregate mounts into the dollars. Even where the stamp is sent, the inquirer remains the debtor of the manager queried, since the stamp does not pay for the labor of writing a letter and enclosing the printed matter. The very least that can be done is to keep the correspondent whole in the matter of postage. It would be better still to enclose a large envelope self addressed and double stamped. It is just thoughtlessness, but don't be thoughtless when you are asking a favor. Be appreciative.

Mr. Steed is the man who makes his advertising for a special release pay for the extra charge and an additional profit before the subject comes into the house. That he is not a man of one idea is shown by some recent performances.

Pictures in a Church.

Christmas eve, Mr. Steed ran the Urban-Eclipse, The Little Match Girl, in the First Methodist Church at the Sunday School entertainment and he advances the claim that this is the first time that a motion picture has been shown in a church on a Sunday in the South. The value of such an endorsement in a small town can only be appreciated by those familiar with the conditions in the Southern States where the best people regard innovations with distrust. The subject is a secular, not a sacred topic, but has a special reference to Christmas that makes it particularly available.

Better still is a sort of donation party explained by the advertisement reproduced here. Mr. Steed writes that every minister gave his endorsement, some of them from the pulpit, and that everyone came to help the work along.

This is good only for a small town, but in a town where it will make town talk it is splendid work, since it identifies the manager as one of the leaders and gives the house a standing that no amount of general advertising can bring. The idea is also applicable to Decoration Day, Easter or Thanksgiving and can be twisted to meet emergent conditions.

This is the advertisement:

Mgr. Joe Steed

Makes a special announcement that no pictures will be shown at the Belle Theater that have not passed the National Board of Censorship.

Mothers like their children to see the pictures at the Belle Theater, because they are so clean and quaint, so picturesque and homelike and yet all of them up-to-date. All of our pictures are very, very real and very, very true to life. Pictures parents can take their children to see, pictures the children can take their parents to see and pictures that your friends and neighbors can come to see.

Joe Steed, the pioneer picture man of Ensley, has selected pictures so long for the people of Ensley he knows just what will please the little ones and big ones and he always gives the little ones his special attention on children's day.

Tuesday we're going to give a special day for the poor children of Ensley, Pratt City and Wylam.

Any Child that wants to make some poor little heart happy is requested to bring an apple, orange or candy, potatoes or a doll or just anything you want to bring. We are going to place them in a box at the Theater. We are going to give them to the ladies of the Home Mission Society and they are going to give them to Santa Claus and Santa Claus will give them to the poor children.

Specials For Monday—"Making a Man" and "Suffer Little Children."

This coupon and one apple, orange, candy or anything you want to give the poor children will admit one lady to the Belle Theater Tuesday, Dec. 19th.

This coupon and one apple, orange, candy or anything you wish to give to the poor children will admit one child to the Belle Theater Tuesday, Dec. 19, 1911.

From the Royal.

A copy of Royal Reports, the house booklet of the Royal Theater, Marion, Ind., asked for last week, has come to hand. It is a weekly with sixteen inside pages, 6 x 9 inches, with a cover in green and black. Although but seven numbers have been issued, there is plenty of outside advertising and some good reading matter relating to the Independent manufacturers. It leads off with a story of one of the films, running 1,000 to 1,200 words, gives the synopses of the leading releases programmed for the week and plenty of gossipy items.

On January first there was inaugurated a prize contest with prizes of $10, $5, $3 and $2 for the best short story written from one of the subjects shown in the theater, the contestant being permitted to make his own choice. The prize winning stories are to be published in Reports and possibly in the local papers.

This will rouse interest in the films and make for business, but we would suggest that in future contests the scripts be identified by some other means than numbers. The plan usually followed is to mark the script with so name or quotation and write the same on a sealed envelope containing name and address of the contestant.

Another Contest.

The People's Amusement Co., of Portland, Oregon, is making a feat of a weekly contest along the same lines, the details of which may gathered from this quotation from the program:

FOR YOUNG AUTHORS

Prizes Offered Weekly for Bright Essays on Films.

The People's Amusement Company desire to inspire boys and girls toward efficiency in Composition. To that end the management invites all ambitious youths of either sex to contribute short compositions based on pictures which are exhibited in our various theaters.

Competitors may choose whatever picture they desire and write thereon neatly on one side of the paper, a short story not to exceed 300 words, and mail or bring their MSS to the People's Theater, addressed to the Prize Essay Department of the Company.

Every week, one boy or girl will succeed and the prize will consist of an Invitation Box Party to the Saturday matinee following, and the successful boy or girl will have the privilege of inviting free, twenty of his or her friends as his or her guests and the whole prize essay party will be allowed to occupy the best box seats in the People's Theater.

The only condition being that competitors must affirm that they are pupils of the schools and that they have received no aid from their elders in preparing their compositions.

There are six local houses under Melvin G. Winstock's management the single contest covers all the theaters. It should yield a large ret in advertising. The company maintains a mailing list that not only he business but which is a good talking point for the advertising solicitor.

A Royal Argument.

Getting back to the Royal advertising, this quotation is taken from a page advertisement:

A Little Talk About the Royal.

"What's the reason everyone likes the shows at THE ROYAL so well, that they will stand in a crowd to see the pictures, when they might go some place else, and get a seat?"

This is the question that has been asked us over and over again. We sometimes look at the immense crowds ourselves and ask the same question, but when we come to think of it the answer is easy, BECAUSE,

We get the best pictures to be obtained, IRRESPECTIVE OF COST. We try to get EYERY DAY a program of pictures that will please everyone.

And then, "correct effects are never accidental." So its no accident that makes our pictures so clear, its simply that we employ the best operator to be obtained, and have a curtain made by ourselves, which we think shows just as fine a picture as a $400 mirror screen.

Then, again, we have another "charm." We have some of the best pianists in the city who know how to play the pictures.

Another thing: We try to keep your interest in our pictures up to the "boiling point," by the "Royal Reports," by our weekly program advertising and by not being a bit backward about letting you know "who's who, and what's what" in the picture business.

This may sound to you like an essay on the supremacy of the Royal to all other theaters on earth, but it isn't that really. We talk a whole lot, but we try always to back our talk up with actual deeds. We have simply set a splendid standard and have MAINTAINED it.

So this is the "excuse" for our patrons liking our show, and it isn't such a "worse" excuse, IS IT?

There is little brag here, just a quiet, convincing talk that may others to plan their announcement. The house is run by Miss Dolly Sp who is not only sole owner, but house and advertising manager, edit of Reports and trap drummer, according to the program announcem The little publication, Ruffles, is used as an illustrated supplement to Reports, permitting slower press work on a small form of cuts, which the cost while ensuring better work.

One good feature of the program is a list of coming features classi by makers.

Cheap But Good.

Ezra Rhodes, manager of the Surprise Theater, South Bend, Ind., se in a couple of sixteen page booklets which are used each week, ten th sand of each issue being distributed.

No outside advertising is carried and no effort is made to put on st but there is something about the simply printed sheet that impresses with the idea that the house must be well managed because the bookle so business like. Many more pretentious booklets are spoiled because t are so wretchedly displayed. Here the style is uniform, ten point da eight point capitals to head each story with the name of the maker and classification and the title is set in heavy type in the first line of the st

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30th.

Thanhouser Drama.

Brother Bob's Baby.—A bachelor, with plenty o money and not a care in the world, suddenly finds himself in- (etc.)

The descriptions furnished by the manufacturers is used and to avoid an awkward turn a few lines of advertising are used to fill out a page where necessary. One of the issues carried a back page announcement, quoted here, which indicates the method of distribution, showing that carefulness in management extends even to the little details.

> We commenced this thinking that by giving you the outline of the story you would understand the picture better, also, to enable you to pick out the pictures you would like most to see. We know that our efforts are appreciated by a great many, others may not care for the stories, and still others may not understand that the book is for a whole week but take it the same as the ordinary Theater program—for the day only—so destroy it, rather than to keep it for future reference, which was our idea.
> In the future we will discontinue handing them out at the door, but will keep them in box office on call, also other convenient places in the Theater, and ask you to be sure and get one, taking it home and as many extra copies as you can use. We appreciate your handing them to your friends and neighbors, and on request and address shall be pleased to send you one by mail every week.

Be Careful.

Most photoplay patrons do not know much about printing and they may not realize that the conventions are violated, but they are unconsciously impressed by the appearance of a publication and it lies with the management whether this impression be favorable or the reverse. A sheet that shows a different style of make-up for every page, that heads one story in eighteen point and leaves another as important without any head at all does not look "right" even to the inexpert and somehow suggests that this shiftlesness extends to other branches of management.

If you get out a booklet, a very little effort will enable you to get it out right. After you've laid your plans with the boss, have a talk with the foreman. Tell him what you want and get him to show you how closely he can come to your ideas. Decide upon the style of type for the heads, the style in which the heads are to be set, the manner of make-up and how to lay the cuts. Select the style that pleases you most and then adhere to that style. Every publication of any consequence has a "style sheet" that takes into account the peculiarities of make-up, and no program is too small not to require a definite plan of make-up. Select what you want, let the printer keep the proofs and then insist that each issue follow these lines exactly. It's one of the little things that makes big business.

At Last!

At last the Tenth Street Theater, Kansas City, has branched out and is using other matter than synopses in its program. It has started the serial publication of some articles by Frederick J. Haskin, who tells less about motion pictures in a given space than any writer who has yet touched upon pictures. It is not an auspicious start, but it's at least a start and we hope to see greater space devoted to general matter that will build up interest in the pictures in general and not merely in some specific release.

We're afraid that the Tenth Street editor does not read this paper as closely as he should else he would not have used John R. Cumpson for a frontispiece six weeks after the departure of that plump comedian from the Edison Company.

The Tenth Street now shows three new reels a day and has rearranged the program to get all the stories in. They do most things so well that we would like to see them grow more ambitious.

More from Mr. Chaney.

Mr. N. E. Chaney, of the Orpheum Theater, Hillsboro, Ohio, who has contributed many valuable suggestions, sends in a program to show that he has adopted with profit the suggestion that the coarse screen half tone will work best.

He has revived a last season's hit in the form of a Ladies' Night on Wednesdays when the musical program is amplified and extra features are introduced. The program reads:

> Tickets now on sale for Ladies' Night at the box office. First show at 7 P. M. Second at 8:30. One full and complete show before the curtain at the Opera House.

In a small town this matter of getting the crowd on nights when there is a combination at the theater is an important one and Mr. Chaney seems to have met the condition as well as it can be done.

Another feature is the announcement that fifteen programs of as many different dates will entitle any woman to five matinee tickets and four general admissions are given to each of the first five to bring to the theater a full list of words mis-spelled in the current program.

Keeping in Touch.

Just to keep in touch with his patrons Mr. Chaney makes occasional distribution of a card similar to the form reproduced here. It is useful in keeping the manager in touch with his patrons and emphasizes the idea that he is trying to please his supporters instead of himself. The card can be used with profit almost anywhere. The form reads:

> To Our Patrons:—
> We feel that you are interested in our picture theater to the extent that you will at least tell us what your wishes are. We wish to cater to your wants but we must first know what they are, consequently we would kindly ask you to fill out the answers to the questions below and sign your name and drop this card in the box in the lobby during the coming week. Your requests shall be kept confidential, and complied with as near as possible. We thank you in advance for this favor.

Mostly Reading.

The last issue of the Saxe Brothers Milwaukee Amusement Slide to come to hand differs from most theatrical booklets in that it shows a marked tendency to get away from the large display programs and give more real reading matter. Each house has from two to three inches of single column advertising and some reading notices, but the rest of the space is given over to general theatrical and picture gossip. Many managements will regard this as a mistake, but the space given to pure reading gives greater value to the smaller amount of advertising carried, the result is better than a collection of display type that is listlessly read. These four young men believe in doing things well and their success has been earned through hard and intelligent work. Hard work alone will not count. Effort must be intelligently directed.

Keeping It Going.

Just to prove that they can keep up the pace they set themselves in early issues, the Columbia Amusement Company, of Santa Rosa, Calif., sends in some recent issues, including a Christmas program in two colors and black. The first inside page is held to snappy paragraphs about the pictures and the houses and this page is really more valuable advertising than the two pages given over to the Columbia and the Theaterette bills. They do not clip, but centre their efforts in matters relating to the local interests such as the Selig pictures of the Rose Carnival, the Burbank pictures, etc., and even the paragraphs about more general releases are given a local twist where possible. It it almost as good as a personal chat and it holds the patron to the pictures.

A Catchy Reader.

Catchy advertising for a recent Eclair is sent in by the Pastime Theater, Walla Walla, Wash. It is a reading notice on the city page (which carries at least one reader in every column) and runs:

> The Time—2 till 10 P. M.
> The Place—Pastime Theater.
> The Girl—"Miss Masquerader."

It is a clever adaptation of a current phrase and holds interest better than would a brief announcement, though full face type lines are used as well.

Do You Get It All?

Did you ever ask yourself if you're getting all out of your house that you can?

Did you ever stop and size up the situation?

What if it does pay you a fair return upon your investment. Can't you make it yield a larger percentage?

There are hundreds of managers through the country who are growing garden truck over gold mines. There's money in garden truck if the market is handy, but why not dig for the gold?

Don't be content to get along with a small profit and an easy life. Hustle a little and develop your property. Perhaps you are all alone in your town, or it may be that you and your competitor are both contented to take things easy and share the business. Perhaps you're a little fellow overshadowed by a larger enterprise. It doesn't matter which.

If you have no competition, begin your campaign now against the time when you've got to fight. Get so firmly entrenched that when the live wire comes along to give you a fight he'll decide that he won't stand a very good chance and he'll go somewhere else in his search for an exhibitor whose alarm clock is not wound up.

If you're the under dog in a competition fight, don't lay on your back and yelp. That doesn't do any good. Fight back and try to get up again. If the other fellow spends ten dollars where you cannot spend one, perhaps you can spend half a dollar and make it a dollar next time out of the profits of the first investment. Keep hustling. Hustling is merely advertising, but advertising is not merely taking space in the local paper or buying a few posters. You advertise your house through your programs, your projection, your house management, your employees, your music, your lobby, your attitude toward your patrons. There are times when a twenty-cent broom is a better advertising factor than a dollar's worth of space in the daily paper and a can of paint a better drawing card than two dollars worth of stock paper.

The small exhibitor is being crowded out in some sections by the large concerns. By hustling you can make yourself big.

Do it now and get it all.

OIL BATH AUTOMATIC FEED ATTACHMENT

The Lavezzi machine works will install an oil feed arrangement in all machines which are not equipped with the regular oil bath, as all up-to-date machines are. This attachment will do more with one drop of oil than any other oil bath devised, as it carries the oil direct to the cam pin, and thence to the star slot, where it spreads it in fractions of a drop on the cam. This attachment is entirely out of the way, so as not to hinder the operator when removing the star, arbor, etc. Mr. Lavezzi claims that this attachment should be installed on all makes of machines to insure even and accurate lubrication.

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Be Concise.

LITERALLY hundreds of scripts are thrown out of the studios each year just because the author clouds his idea with a mass of unessential detail in the planning of his scenes.

It is one of the greatest faults of the beginner's script that the story is apt to start several scenes too soon and perhaps end two or three scenes too late, while in between there are a lot of useless scenes written in simply because the author lacks the faculty of concentration.

If you've a story with only ten or twelve scenes, do not pad out to twenty because you've been told that a full reel should run about twenty scenes. Let it go as a half reel. You won't get as much money for it, but you will better your chance of making a sale by a thousand per cent.

Some writers even invent extra incidents to pad out the script and utterly spoil the story.

After you have made the first rough draft of the script, go over it very carefully and make certain that the story really starts in the first scene. You're apt to find that you could start just as well with scene two or three, or perhaps even scene six or seven, and still have every factor of the real story. If your story tells of the rivalry between Bill and Jim for the hand of Lizzie, don't first show Jim in his room getting ready to pay a call, Bill in his room getting into his glad rags, an encounter between the two on Lizzie's front steps and then the call. There may be a lot of good comedy business in those first three scenes, but that's no excuse. The business does not directly relate to the story and it's your concern to tell the story simply and directly. Start with the scene in the parlor where Bill and Jim come in, then hurry right on to the finish and then stop so quickly it almost takes your breath away.

Of course comedy business is what is wanted and comedy business is going to help you sell your script, but it's the comedy business that happens while the story is being told that the director wants, not comedy business that happens before the story or that which comes after.

Your story has to do with how Bill or Jim wins Lizzie, or how some other fellow comes along and cuts them both out. Begin with the scene that starts the story and get the audience interested immediately.

Then after you get started hustle along to the finish. Do not interrupt the narrative action to show how Bill steps on a banana peel and takes a tumble, or how Jim gets thrown off a street car because he has no nickel. If he spends his last five cent piece for soda for Lizzie and he and she are both put off the car because neither has money, then the matter becomes narrative action since it advances the story to the point where Bill comes along in an auto and saves Lizzie from having to walk home, while Jim is left to take pedestrian exercise; but, unless the action is necessary to the telling of the story, it does not belong. If you're writing the sort of comedy where you have to go outside of the story for the comedy action, you're not writing the story that is going to sell, and stuff that is put in "to make it funnier" should be regarded as a danger signal. Make your narrative scenes so crisply funny that you'll not need to write in a few extraneous scenes of really funny action. Get the laughs while the story is being told instead of between paragraphs.

It is even more important in a serious story to move the plot smoothly to a close with as little outside matter as possible. Sometimes this can be accomplished by the cutting out of certain scenes, but it is more likely that you will need to study how to combine two scenes into one.

It may seem impossible, at first, but as the effort is made each succeeding script yields more readily to treatment. Don't make each separate happening into a scene when a stronger scene might be evolved through a combination of two incidents.

Suppose that in one scene you have a woman receive a threatening letter. She exhibits lively concern and exits to the library to show it to her father. Perhaps, as you've written it, there is a scene in the hall as she hesitates before the library door and then her entrance into the library and the display of the letter. If you have the father on the scene the woman can get the letter, hesitate for a moment, then turn to her father and show him the note. You can preserve the element of suspense as to whether she will show the letter or not, and the moment will be the more dramatic because of the presence of the man in the room. You may not think of her appeal to her father when she receives the letter, but if he is on the scene the thought at once suggests itself that she should show the letter to him and you are all eagerness until she does. You've not only eliminated two unnecessary scenes, but you've established the dramatic suggestion from twenty to fifty feet earlier.

Take this hint and apply it to your own script. You'll be astonished at the improvement in the story, if you've a story to start with.

Holding on to Scripts.

We are afraid that we are going to disappoint a correspondent who writes from Chicago to this effect:

> It is with a great deal of interest that I read The Scenario Writer, and in view of your having treated criticisms and complaints so judiciously in behalf of the scenario writers, I would like to register my "kick" with you also, to see what, in your large experience, you would consider a square deal, especially in the case I cite herewith.
>
> On October 6, last, I forwarded to the American a manuscript and, despite several inquiries, no information as to the decision on this manuscript was given. In this morning's mail (January 9) the manuscript is returned, not a word of comment being made.
> Inasmuch as this manuscript was in this company's hands for over three months, and then the same is returned without comment, is there not some way in which the position of the scenario writers could be impressed upon the mind of this editor?

We have no personal acquaintance with the American's editor—we don't even know who he is, but we think that when a script has been retained more than four weeks, a brief word of apology should have been sent, but on the other hand the correspondent does not advise as to the tone of those "several inquiries" he made nor state whether he gave full details as to title, etc., nor does he mention a stamped return envelope.

Without having personal information it looks as though the script was being advanced close to acceptance and had its chances hurt by the tone of the inquiries as to its fate.

There used to be a woman down in Tennessee who started after her script just seven days after it was mailed, with the result that the editors came to know her and the script always got back to her about the sixth day if she did not send it too far from home.

It seems tough to have a script tied up for a quarter of a year and then have it fired back, but it's the way studio conditions compel some scenario editors to work, and, since this is their practise, the writer who wishes to sell to that studio must conform to the rule. He has the alternative of not sending in the story or holding it last on the list, when its retention does not matter.

It's not fair to the writer and it is a practise that will prove hurtful to the studio in the long run, since it will keep the scripts of the experienced writers away. But the buyer establishes his rules and the would-be seller must conform to the same. It's irritating to the beginner, but twenty years' experience proves editors to be pretty much alike in the matter of deliberation, and it is not always the editor's own fault, as our editorial experience has taught us.

We fail to see that the correspondent has any definite kick save as to the wordless rejection.

And for his benefit and for the information of others, we suggest this form letter of inquiry:

> Editor of Scenarios,
> Blank Film Company:
> Dear sir—On November 9, 1911, the writer sent your company the scenario of a photoplay entitled "And a little child shall lead them." If this has not reached you, he will be glad to supply a new copy. If it is in your hands he will appreciate your advice as to when he may expect a decision. A stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed for reply.
>
> Very truly,

Subsequent letters will suggest themselves.

The Detective Story.

The Detective story, which promised to become popular, has not kept its promise. Some few good productions were made, but the necessity for a crime as a prelude to the story was apt to make trouble with the censor board and this seems to have discouraged the producing staffs.

The crude recital of a crime is not necessary to the story if the detective work is skillfully planned and, with this made the feature, it is entirely possible to have the crime happen before the opening of the story. Make the plot hinge on the cleverness with which the detective unravels the tangled threads, keep the suspense well sustained and keep the spectators fully informed as to the progress of the chase. The detective of deductions, such as the Sherlock Holmes stories, will not suit; for the involved mental processes will require too many leaders, and the detective of fact is too commonplace a person. The inspirational genius; the man who finds a suspender button and locates the trousers it came from by some brilliant move, is a good type, if the inspiration is not made too absurd, but the progress of the search must be clearly indicated and the "getaways" of the criminals cannot be too clearly shown. It is tricky stuff to write, but if well done it goes well with all classes. Even if you do not turn out a product that will sell, you'll find it excellent practise, and practise eventually leads to improvement if not perfection.

Just Because.

Just because you see now and then a story that violates all of the rules you've been taught, don't get the idea that there is a new dispensation. The probabilities are that some director has been breaking rules for some reason best known to himself and the director can break rules where the outsider cannot.

In one studio where the editor had explicit instructions not to take any stories of crimes, one of the directors kept on with a series of pictures of near-lynchings. Because he made them they had to be pushed through, and he made them on the near side of the Censorship standard, but meantime the authors who had received their stories back, with word that no stories of crimes were acceptable to the studios, wasted valuable two cent stamps asking the editor why he did not practise what he preached.

It's the same way with a lot of other stuff. A weak story may be passed through the cutting room (sometimes called the cannery), because the director made it, when that same director would shriek in agony if he was asked to buy the same sort of story, and when the limp or the lurid gets on the screen the outside authors get the idea that it represents the company's needs and flood the studio with precisely the sort of scripts the editor doesn't want.

Before you make up your mind that the editor is not giving you a square deal, weigh in the director and make proper allowances. The director is usually a bigger man than the boss and he does pretty much as he pleases on the proposition that he cannot do good work unless he can do as he wants. Play safe and ignore the eccentricities of the director. Don't do it just because you've seen it done.

Seasons in Scenarios.

Get ready for the summer season in scenarios. Along about April the Editors will begin to look for the summer story. All winter they have been sending back the "outside stuff," training the regulars to write for interior production, and now that they have been trained, the demand changes and the outsider who keeps on writing outside stuff all winter because he knows no better, gets the inside track for a while.

It is one of the odd things about production in the present development that if a company winters in the South, it makes only southern stuff. Arthur D. Hotaling is taking his Lubin comedians south to finish off some exterior pictures, but most of the directors make only southern or southwestern stuff.

The author who does not appreciate this fact keeps on sending out the usual run of story all winter, arguing that since the companies are below the frost belt it does not matter, but it is important to cater to the demand for interior stuff for studio production from September until about March and write exterior stuff the remaining six months.

Most of the southern companies now have their own scenario writer, since they work some distance from the home studio, and these writers prefer to wait until they get on the ground to fit their stories to the environment, so that the outside author has little or no chance with the field companies unless he stands well in with the studios and knows exactly what is wanted. The safest procedure is to shelve the inside stuff about six weeks before spring and put the summer stories in camphor just before the winds grow chill. It's tough to write summer stories with the steam heat on a strike, but soon it will be the best selling stuff, so commence to do it now and build up your string.

The Helping Hand.

This from a recent letter:

"If those at the top could only realize how much a word of counsel means to the beginner! I have no friends nor acquaintances in the field of story writing, and the only help I ever get comes through some patient editor, who scribbles a word on the rejection slip. As a rule, though, it's just the slip, without any word. One nice editor told me how to alter and improve one story. I guess I'll remember him a long time. Another told me frankly that she didn't like my heroine, and told me just why. This also helped me. I must add that your articles are a great source of needful information. To me, at least, they are worth a great deal more than the subscription price of THE WORLD."

It is to be hoped that all editors will come in time to realize the helpfulness of the word or two scribbled on the rejection slip. It takes the sting from the return and offers some definite reason instead of the vague phrasing of the slip that leaves the novice guessing as to just what hit the story. It means a lot of extra work to a man who is apt to already have more than he can handle, but men like Archer McMackin, of the Essanay Company, and Giles R. Warren, lately of Lubin's, find that it pays them to take this extra trouble. It means extra work, but it also means a great return in the building up of a list of expert writers, most of whom will remain loyal to the company.

Not all writers will repay the editor with better work, nor are all writers worth the trouble, but the editor who really wants to make good will find this one of the greatest helps, and to these editors the paragraph above is respectfully referred.

A Little Brag.

S. Walter Bunting, who was one of the earliest scenario writers in the field, writes in a recent letter:

"I am using an extra sheet showing my scalps to date. After my productions numbered more than sixteen I decided to stick to that number and now drop them off in the order of age or quality, though you will note that I still cling to 'The District Attorney' of two years ago."

Sixteen would be a rather high number for most scenario writers, but the idea is to be commended. If you've done good work, brag about it a little. There is no one in the Eclair studio to know that you are the author of that particularly good Lubin, so tell them yourself and show that you have made good with others and can presumably make good again. Even after the studio has come to regard you as a regular, you may help your chances by showing that you're selling to other companies. Excessive modesty is not a good business asset and to brag about good work is not egotism; it's merely salesmanship. Don't live forever on the strength of one good production. Hold over the big things, but keep the rest up to date. Until the author's name is used on all film releases, it's your only way of making yourself known.

The Lubin Editor.

Giles R. Warren, for the past year editor for the Lubin Company, has resigned his position and for the present many authors will miss the helpful suggestions he was wont to make when returning scripts. Mr. Warren has not been in good health for some time and the strain of keeping three or four directors supplied with scripts has told on him. He expects to resume editorial work with another company in two or three months and tendered his resignation to the Lubin Company that he might have a couple of months of absolute rest before engaging in his new duties, which will bring him into better physical trim. Both with the Imp and Lubin Companies Mr. Warren has made hundreds of friends through his courtesy and consideration and his return to active work will be welcomed by the regulars. Meantime he will enjoy a well-earned rest apart from the turmoil of the studio.

For the present Mrs. Lillian M. Rubenstein, formerly his assistant, is signing as Editor for the Lubin Company, but it is probable that a new editor will presently be appointed.

Get There First.

The following letter calls for no comment:

Joplin, Mo., Jan. 8th, 1912.

Mr. Epes Winthrop Sargent, Sir:—In reading THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD under the date of December 16th, I find an instance where William H. Kitchell had written and submitted a scenario to the Edison Company and only two hours after the postman brought him a copy of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD containing a story almost identical with the one he then had in the mails.

The habit of certain writers accusing the production company of stealing their stories is, in the opinion of any fair minded person an injustice. It is true that there is some dishonesty in almost every line of work, yet the scenario writer, if he expects to make a success, must not start out with the intention of making war on all the production companies if their work is not accepted at first intent.

A few days ago I finished a scenario which I had been laboring on for nearly a week. It was an entirely original theme with me, and I would have almost wagered my life that there was nothing on the market anything like it either in theme or construction.

Night before last I went to a local play-house and to my bitter disappointment saw upon the screen a story identical to the one which I had taken so much pride in writing. To say that I was disappointed is putting it in very mild form. I felt like cussing; yet what could I do? Nothing. The other writer had "beat me to it." He had thought of the same theme before I had and he had a perfect right to. As in the case of Mr. Kitchell if my scenario had been submitted to a company and had been produced there would have probably been trouble, but it had not; and this proves beyond a doubt that we are always too ready to cry thief. Give every company the benefit of the doubt, anyway, until you are sure that they have appropriated your ideas, then cut that company off your list.

I am writing this in the hopes that it will be published, for the claim of some writers that the most of the companies will steal your ideas if they get a chance is a growing evil, and is a stumbling block in the way of the scenario writer. Put up something that is good and original, get there with it first and your chances are two to one that you will win.

Very truly yours,
VERNE VICTOR BARNES.

Inquiries.

MISS A. B. and CARL.—You do not state whose pictures you want and in default of more definite inquiry we can only say that some companies do and some do not sell photographs of their players. The Vitagraph and Kalem Companies make a feature of this, the Vitagraph having three different styles. The Imp Company has just announced a set of photographs at a very reasonable price. We understand that the Lubin and Essanay companies are arranging for the sale of photographs of their players, and we think you can get the photographs of the Edison players by addressing the business offices in Orange. Prices range from five to forty cents, according to style, size and finish, and the best way would be to address those companies whose players you favor and ask information, enclosing a stamped envelope for a reply. Carl should explain that he is a manager.

E. J. N.—This matter was treated in some detail in last week's scenario page. In the case of the particular studio your letter seems to indicate, we would advise you that the editor has been ill and away from the studio for a time, while changes in the companies have helped to delay decision on stories. At the same time we do not regard three weeks as a long wait, even under normal conditions, and do not advise querying a script within six weeks after it has been received. You doubtless have a receipt for the script, and this should indicate that it is safe.

E. R. C.—The Kalem Company states that Miss Marin Sais played Bess in "The Revenue and the Girl."

G. T. E.—There were two Davids in the Thanhouser "David Copperfield." The David in the first reel, "The Early Life of David Copperfield," was Miss Flora Foster. Ed. Genung was the adult David. Miss Anna Seer was David's mother.

GRACE.—The reason some manufacturers specify that they are to have the story rights to the scripts they purchase is that many scripts are now done into fiction form in the Motion Picture Story Magazine and other publications following that lead. They offer you a stated sum for the fiction and film rights. It's a plain business transaction. If you think the manufacturers "have a nerve," you write something you can sell to the Green Book and see what you get on that check. They reserve the right to dramatize it, novelize it, make it into a poem or set it to music if they want to.

W. L. P.—The cast of the Vitagraph's "Vanity Fair" it too long to be reprinted here. The manager of any theater using licensed pictures will let you copy it from the Vitagraph Bulletin if you are interested. The cast of "Colleen Bawn" has been published.

MISS A. V. D.—The best way to reach Miss Gauntier is to enclose the envelope stamped with a five-cent stamp and left blank for the address in a second envelope, addressed to the Kalem Company, with a request to forward.

G. F. I.—Marshall P. Wilder has never played with the Lubin Company. Probably you saw the remade "A Hot Time at Atlantic City." In one of the board-walk scenes he rode into the picture on a tricycle, not as a member of the company, but just to get a little advertising. His official connection is with the Vitagraph.

J. P. G.—At this writing the last Selig release listing Miss Winnifred Greenwood is "The Prosecuting Attorney," dated January 11th. She was also in Cinderella, playing Cinderella's mother.

L. I. R.—The way to get a job with a picture company is to prove experience and the way to get experience is to get a job with a picture company, but we don't know whether the hen or the egg came first.

ANXIOUS.—You've been up against a chap almost as good as the Annanias who killed a whole section of the Biograph Company the other day, just to have something to talk about. We know of no motion picture actress killed by a fall from a flying machine, and we think we would know had such a thing happened. Be reassured as to your favorite.

C. M. W.—The specialty you mention has been offered to many of the companies and has been done twice. We do not think you stand much chance of getting a trial.

JIM.—A "light studio" and a "dark studio" are commonly accepted as meaning the same thing, a studio in which the illumination is obtained through some form of electric arc or vapor lamps. What you evidently take to be a "light" studio is referred to as a "daylight" or "skylight" studio. In a daylight studio electricity may be employed at times to gain certain light effects or augment the feeble illumination of a cloudy day.

T. G. Y.—"This paper" will not do to write scenarios on, even though you may save postage. It is intended for use where many carbon copies are to be made at one typewriting, and is not intended for general use. Get a good bond or linen paper and leave the "onion skin" alone.

E. W. A.—There are three methods of obtaining the effect you describe, but we do not explain trick effects because it spoils the pleasure of others who are less interested than you in discovering what sort of sawdust your doll is stuffed with.

C. L. J—Gladys Hulette was the lame boy in Edison's "Pull for the Shore, Sailor." She is by no means a newcomer in the Edison studio. She was a player there before she was engaged for the original cast of "The Blue Bird," at the New Theater.

MARY S—Romaine Fielding and Jack Standing were the leads in "Love's Victory," but it was Mr. Standing who had the lead in "Romance of the 60's," so it would seem that he is the Lubin player indicated. He has not appeared in recent Lubins because he is no longer with the company. Look later for "A Timely Lesson."

ADMIRER.—Address the player, in care of his company, and the letter will be forwarded.

RECENT SUBSCRIBER.—Your question is taken up in the scenario page.

H. J. S.—You seem to be getting the Misses Reva and Winnifred Greenwood confounded. The latter is the Selig player and the former has figured in Kalem and Edison films.

C. F. M.—We appreciate your alleged poetry, but poetry and daffydills are rigidly barred from these columns.

T. T. O.—Miss Turner was not in a railroad wreck on her way to California. She recently appeared in one of the San Francisco films and her appearance was duly reported in this paper.

PUZZLED.—Writing a scenario in action means telling the story by means of what the players do rather than by telling what they say. You cannot photograph speech, and you can photograph action, and by telling the action you can tell the story more simply than in words. If you cannot get the bang of the idea, go to some picture show and try to write the action of some film you see You'll find, if you get it all down, that you have no conversation, but that the actions you saw tell the story in conjunction with the leaders. Now if you apply the same idea to your own plot instead of something you've seen on the screen, you'll find that you've done the same thing. Don't describe every little bit of action, but only the action that helps tell the story.

New York Exhibitors' Grand Reception

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York are going to make their bow to society. They are going to make their combined social debut at a grand entertainment and ball, which is to be given Monday evening, January 29, at Palm Garden, 58th Street and Lexington Avenue, New York City, at 8 P. M. During the past few months this organization has taken on added strength by reason of the large number of exhibitors who have enrolled themselves as members, so that by this time the New York Exhibitors' Association is a big strong healthy organization and it is their desire to celebrate their success by entertaining themselves and their friends, and the trade in general, at a splendid function which, no doubt, will tax the capacity of the Palm Garden.

The New York Exhibitors have a twofold object in giving this function. One reason is the desire for sociability among themselves, and the other reason is that they may demonstrate not only to the trade, but to all who may be present that they stand for the betterment of motion pictures in general. They desire to be correctly understood as to their moral and business integrity, which has been unjustly assailed, principally from the outside.

Much praise is due to Dr. Oscar J. Lamberger, chairman of the entertainment committee, for the excellence of the preparations, which are at this writing practically complete. Financially the affair is already a success, as exhibitors have disposed of great numbers of tickets and the trade has been surprisingly liberal in patronizing the expensive souvenir program which will be given out. Preceding the dancing there will be a high class vaudeville entertainment, which is in no way to be construed with ordinary picture-house vaudeville, and will be intended as a repudiation of such. "Big time" entertainers of the more refined class have been engaged. Between the acts and during the dancing there will be a continuous exhibition of pre-release moving pictures. The music for the occasion will be furnished by Fred Hyland's band of fourteen pieces.

It is the intention of exhibitors at this time to demonstrate their general fitness and to go on record as being in favor of all that makes for the welfare and uplift of the moving picture. To this end there have been invited prominent members of civic societies and well-known public officials representing such departments as Health, Fire, Police and Building. A number of well known photoplay stars have given their consent not only to attend, but to appear during the olio in specialties. Among those who have signified their willingness are Maurice Costello, of the Vitagraph Company; Ulis Davis and Mr. Kenyon, of the Champion Film Company; The Thanhouser Kid; Mr. King Baggott, of the Imp Film Company, and Miss Cognt, recent juvenile star of the "Blue Bird" at the New Theater.

In moving picture circles there is no doubt that the New York Exhibitors' reception will be the event of the year. All of the Eastern film manufacturers have already secured boxes and will be present in person, and many notable men in the trade, representing both the Licensed and Independent interests, will mingle that evening for the first time in several years. The reception will probably eclipse anything for size and general eclat for many days to come. It is going to be a great, big successful affair and any motion picture man who misses it will have reason to regret it. All exhibitors in Greater New York and those on the Jersey side of the Hudson, are cordially invited to attend as well as any one in the trade from other cities. Requests for tickets should be addressed to Dr. Oscar J. Lamberger, care The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, No. 12 East 15th Street, New York City. Tickets admitting lady and gentleman $1.00, including wardrobe privilege.

EVELYN FRANCIS.

The Champion Film Company announces the engagement of Miss Evelyn Francis as a member of its stock company of picture players. As will be observed by the accompanying engraving Miss Francis may justly lay claim to much personal charm. She is described as a particularly vivacious beauty of but nineteen years and especially suited to ingenue rôles. She has had considerable theatrical experience, having played in stock and musical comedy companies. The Champion Company seems to be particularly elated upon securing her services and promise some excellent pictures on the strength of her ability.

FEATURE FILM EXCHANGE FOR BOSTON.

F. F. Byron and C. W. Spanuth have formed a co-partnership under the name of the Feature Film Exchange, with offices at 795 Washington Street, Boston, Mass. The offices have been neatly equipped and a reception room, with all trade papers on file, has been fitted up for the accommodation of visiting picture men.

Mr. Byron is a Boston man and Mr. Spanuth hails from New York, and is a brother of H. A. Spanuth, of the Sales Company.

GENERAL FILM PUBLICITY & SALES COMPANY.

H. A. Spanuth and Louis H. Cohn are president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of a new concern styled the General Film Publicity & Sales Company. It is explained by the organizers of this concern that it will manufacture educational, scientific and industrial pictures for the trade. The offices of the company are located at 145 West 45th Street, New York City.

Amusement Reform In Reading Pa.

Secretary Fry, of the "Committee of Seven," Explains the Movement Started in That City.

By H. P. Fry, Secretary.

ABOUT two months ago, the Evening Telegram, of Reading, of which Herbert R. Green is one of the owners, caused an investigation to be made into the amusement conditions of the city. Neither the Telegram nor Mr. Green are particularly prudish in their views of the stage and its allied forms of amusement, but it had become generally said around the town that the burlesque houses were "putting over" some pretty raw things, and the moving picture theaters were showing pictures which dealt with all sorts of crimes. The writer was detailed to make an investigation of the picture shows and worked for some time visiting the houses, looking over the films exhibited, reading copies of The Moving Picture World and endeavoring to get an idea of the business. The results of the investigation were astonishing, even to one who had been about the country a good bit. In every theater visited there was some picture which was objectionable. Not a large proportion, but enough to spoil the good effect of the whole. Specifically these pictures had to deal with all kinds of crime, such as murder, robbery, suicide, assaults on women, sensational elopements, vulgarity, revenge, hatred, drunkenness, hold-ups, and the Lord knows what not. If any crimes in the penal code from arson to whatever commences with Z were left out, the industrious scenario writer must have overlooked his hand.

Criticism in a vague sort of way is worse than no criticism at all. It is very easy to condemn things, to make sweeping assertions, and attempt to damn a whole trade, but in discussing this question I propose to take hold of concrete facts. In writing of a film I shall name the film. The trade knows who makes it and it will save time for me to look up the maker.

I shall criticise first a film, out of proportion, in total bad taste, and unfit for observation. It was entitled "The Easterner's Peril," and showed a man from the East who visited a Westerner and unconsciously intruded on the love affair of a Western "bad man." After a lot of coarse melodrama the Easterner is waylaid, dragged from his horse, pulled along the ground to a bed of quicksand, and then left to die, being finally rescued from his peril by his lady friend. The picture is disgusting, brutal and depicts a scene which under no circumstances could happen in the West.

Another sickening picture was entitled "Over the Cliff," showing a scene of gypsy revenge, where the wife or woman of a gypsy kills her man and his paramour by overturning a wagon, so that it rolled over a cliff. "The Desert Claim" opened in a tough barroom, was a drama of robbery, attempted murder and greed and unfit to show. A drama which showed a story of two men and a woman who were in a lighthouse, was disgusting. The name was "Shut Out from the World," or some such name. A star story, which to my mind was a "school for crime," was entitled "A Woman Scorned," and showed all the details of burglarizing a house, assaulting a woman, blackjacking a man, binding and gagging him, and trying to rob. There were more of these pictures, but the above are good examples. They were exhibited around December 1, or the latter part of November of last year. I take these pictures as a text, because I do not care, as I said, for criticism unless it is specific.

It developed that the greater portion of the spectators who saw these pictures, was young children. Little boys sat in rapt attention while the villain "jimmied" his way into the window and cut the telephone wires. Now, the picture business is made the scapegoat for a lot of things and many people unjustly charge that it is responsible for crime, but even the most conservative ought to admit that it does a child no good to see pictures of murder and robbery and rapine.

As a result of the expose of the conditions by the Telegram, a committee of seven leading citizens, headed by Charles E. Leippe, leading banker and manufacturer, was formed to look into matters, and co-operate with Hon. Ira W. Stratton, the Mayor, who was deeply interested in the subject, and who had been making investigations of his own before the Telegram began to print its stories. Taking hold of the situation, Mayor Stratton, assisted by the Committee of Seven, has shut out of Reading all vicious pictures. The Mayor has a police investigation made daily, and all shows are checked up. He intends to revoke the license of any play which is contrary to good morals. This means plays which make crimes their motive.

From the Reading action, there has resulted a general policy on the part of the Committee of Seven, which it intends to spread to other cities in Pennsylvania and elsewhere. That policy is to reach the manufacturer by awakening the public to a realization of the great possibilities of moving pictures and demanding that they be kept clean. It is believed that if every town in Pennsylvania demands that "crime" pictures be cut out, and this demand is backed by a refusal to patronize the show, the exhibitor will tell his exchange, the exchange will put it up to the manufacturer, and the latter will see that it pays to put out film which is clean and free from blood and thunder scenes. There is nothing prudish in this. It is simply an awakening on the part of leading people to the immense amount of good that pictures can do, and the infinite amount of pleasure to be derived from seeing a healthy film.

My idea of the proper way to accomplish reforms in this line is that a committee should exist in each city, to help the proper authorities. This committee should attack objectionable pictures by name, and be specific. It should denounce the man who shows the film and call by name the concern which makes it. It should do all in its power to keep the better element of the community away from the show. This will result in the better class of showmen cleaning house. When this is done I am then in favor of turning around and, as a reward of merit, advertising the respectable exhibitor's place, and telling the public that his place bears the stamp of the committee's approval.

In Reading, when we first hit the shows, we struck all in a bunch. The men who are trying to run a clean show at first suffered, but in the long run I think that the good show people will prosper.

This movement will be placed before each community in the State. Moving pictures must be kept free from objectionable features. The people who make them are sacrificing art to quantity. As long as the requisite number of reels is turned out a week, the manufacturer hasn't seemed to care much what he was turning out. In future he will have to improve his product.

The business has no end of possibilities. I have investigated it from every angle, and looked into all the various phases of it. In a short time the motion picture will be a feature in every well equipped schoolhouse. It will be part of the equipment of the church, the lecture platform, the literary society, the industrial bureau, and it is quite likely that some day men will sell goods, using the picture to illustrate the manufacture. I expect to be interested in the educational side of the work. I have nothing but the kindliest feeling for the people who make the pictures and for those who exhibit them. I insist, however, that the business should be free from dirt. I make my criticisms from what I see, not from hearsay or prejudice. Hence, I hope that they will carry some weight.

The Committee of Seven would be pleased to hear from any of the manufacturers who may have suggestions. Communications addressed to me as Secretary, Room 400, Berks County Trust Company, Reading, Pa., will be given attention.

LUBIN PLAYERS EN TOUR.

The Lubin Manufacturing Company have just sent two large organizations South and Southwest to make films in the true atmosphere. One company is under the management of Mr. Arthur D. Hotaling; the personnel of the troupe number 30 people, the principals of which are: Mae Hotely, Jerold Hevener, Peggy Glynn, Betty Camerson, George Reehm, Robert Burns, Spottiswoode Aitken and Walter Stull. This organization carries a Pullman standard sleeping coach and a day coach; also a 70-foot baggage car containing a big outfit of scenery and the probable necessary props and furniture. The first stop will be made at Jacksonville and the itinerary to follow being Datona, Miami, St. Augustine, Knights Key and thence to Cuba, returning by way of New Orleans and up the Mississippi River. Mr. Hotaling has been one of the important producers of the Lubin Manufacturing Company for 15 years, but is still called the "Boy Director." His special work is comedy and many of the best photo-farces stand to his credit.

The second company is under management of Mr. Wilbert Melville, who also carries 30 others. The principals being Burton King, Webster Cullison, W. J. Wells, Romanie Fielding, Harry Berger, Charles Lugert, Edna Payne, Virginia Bennett and Adele Lane. The traveling equipment will be the same as Mr. Hotaling's troupe and the itinerary will include all the important cities, reservations and garrisons of picturesque Arizona. Both companies expect to be gone for six months.

Bson-101 Feature Pictures.

Big Two-Reel Subjects of Surpassing Quality and Interest Soon to be Released at Regular Prices.

THE history—the true history—of early life in the Wildest West is being written on the film. The famous Bison 101 Ranch aggregation is now at work on a stupendous series of films that will be a revelation to the outside world of the actual life and experiences of the early settlers in the Far West, the Indian tribes, the gold prospectors, the cattle herdsmen, etc. We have been surfeited ad infinitum ad nauseam by the Diamond Dick novel kind of Western film. [And, by the way, the Bison trademark of old proclaimed the source of too many of these travesties on Western life and human intelligence, many of which were so ridiculous that exhibitors in Western states dared not show them.] We have had plenty even of the Fenimore Cooper style of Western drama, based on fact, no doubt, but lurid, highly colored and imaginative to a degree. It marks a distinct step in advance when a manufacturer sees his mistakes and now sets forth to present to the public the great West as it really was and is.

Exhibitors still tell us that the Western picture is still considered a drawing card, although so many have been bitter disappointments, scarcely appealing to the low-brow and certainly not to the small boy, who is very quick to note the blunders and incongruities. The Bison 101 Ranch troupe is not to be compared with the old Bison company, whose films were chiefly notable for their bad points, as naively stated by Mr. Bauman himself. The old Bison company was disbanded; the old Bison factory was sold; the old Bison (N. Y. M. P. Co.) offices have been vacated—in fact, there is nothing left of the old New York Motion Picture Company except the name and the Bison films that will continue to do duty on the screen for a few more weeks to come. As we have before stated in these pages, President Bauman has not only caught up in the race for supremacy and quality but he has set the pace. The new laboratory and offices in a modern fireproof building is a sign of renewed strength. The new Bison 101 stock company, with the famous 101 Ranch as the base of their operations, is the trump card in a game which is no longer a game of chance. Judging from the pictures that we have already seen, Bison 101 will mark a distinct epoch in the advancement of the motion picture.

(Scene from "War on the Plains" (Bison's 101 Ranch).

"Spare no expense to get the proper settings and material. Spare no time nor trouble to get the correct details" is the instructions to the director of the new Bison 101 company. Historical accuracy, correct costuming, perfect photography, should combine to make Bison 101 pictures moving picture classics. For example, in "Custer's Last Fight," which is now being done, there will appear grizzled veterans who actually participated in that famous incident of Western history.

The first Bison 101 release of February 23 is entitled "War on the Plains." We will not give the story here, as it will be printed in its proper time and place. But it is a thrilling drama, portrayed amid natural surroundings by a capable company, and the photographic clearness is remarkable. Some of the scenes are sublime in their grandeur; others are impressive in the number of people employed; others are startling in realism and prolific in incident. While there is plenty of action, the dramatic element has been well sustained. Bravery and cowardice are sharply contrasted. Love and jealousy play a part, but the impression that it all leaves is that here we have looked upon a presentation of Western life that is real and that is true to the life, and that we would like to see it again and again so as to absorb more of the details. "War on the Plains" is A Feature Film.

Hitherto the exchanges and the exhibitors have complained that extraordinary subjects have been issued as special releases or sold under state rights at greatly advanced prices. Basing our opinion on the two films that we have seen and from what we know are being prepared, every Bison 101 will be a feature film, but they will all be sold to the exchanges at the regular price. It may be that the demand for them will become so great that the exchanges will be compelled to ask higher rentals, but the exhibitor will eventually be the gainer, as Bison 101 day will be his day for big gate receipts.

It should also be mentioned that Bison 101 pictures will all be two-reel subjects. One double reel each week on Fridays. Eminent moving picture authorities have long pointed out that the two and three reel subject was the logical development of the business if it was to advance. As we sat before "War on the Plains" certain other great films were called to mind. It might be said to compare with Ambrosio's "Golden Wedding," a magnificent film which is yet fresh in the memory. In some respects it resembles another famous picture of recent release, "The Battle," which only fell short of being a masterpiece from the fact that many of the finest scenes were ruthlessly curtailed and details omitted to conform to the 1000-feet limit.

Scene from "War on the Plains" (Bison's 101 Ranch).

So, in inaugurating a regular two-reel release, the New York Motion Picture Company has shown both wisdom and foresight and, while it may upset the preconceived notions of the exchange man and for a time disarrange his established routine, we venture to say that they will all welcome and encourage the Bison 101 departure by their unanimous support. They have complained, some of them bitterly, of the inroads that the state right pictures and specials have made upon their business, and it seems to us that in this new series of films they will have a good weapon to defend themselves.

NEW REPUBLIC PLAYER.

Charles De Forrest, formerly leading comedian of the Rex Company, has now joined the forces of the Republic Film Company at Saranac Lake.

PICTURE PLAYER MARRIED.

Leo Charles Berger and Miss Margaret Marie Grace McMahon were married at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Jacksonville, Fla., on Saturday, Jan. 20th. Mr. Berger is a member of the Kalem players now in Jacksonville. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Mary M. McMahon, of Jacksonville.

President Hutchinson, of the American Film Mfg. Company, left Chicago last week to visit the Western studios of the company at La Mesa, Cal. Mr. Hutchinson is a California enthusiast, and seldom enjoys excursions out of town so much as those to the Western studios. His family accompanied him.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

LIGHTED AUDITORIUMS.—For some time past there has been a very lively and determined agitation for lighted theaters. Rather, however, it might better be said: LIGHTED MOTION PICTURE THEATERS, since no mention is made by the agitators of the regular theaters, although their auditoriums are very nearly, if not quite as dark as is the motion picture house—often even darker. But it is not to discuss the inconsistencies found in all such agitation that I have taken up this subject.

That considerable light is desirable in a theater auditorium, or other place where large numbers of people assemble, no sane man would deny. There is and can be no argument on that point. But when we come to discuss the amount of light necessary or desirable, that is quite another matter and, within limits, a proper subject for argument. There are those who, usually in pursuance of some selfish end, have set about creating the idea that the theater should be as light as an ordinary room. Some have advocated light sufficient to read ordinary newspaper print in any part of a theater auditorium. Still others have advocated the passage of laws compelling theater managers (motion picture, of course) to leave every light in the auditorium burning during the entire time an audience is in the house.

Luckily no one takes the latter brand of cheerful idiot seriously. It is to be doubted if he takes himself as anything other than more or less of a rather bad joke. However, this particular brand of genius is not a practical man but purely a crank reformer. Mind you, there is a genuine reformer and a "crank" reformer. The first named is a useful, earnest citizen, usually possessing a pretty fair fund of common sense. The latter is merely a nuisance, when he is nothing worse.

But to return to our subject. There is no good reason for any large amount of light in the auditorium, and there are very excellent reasons for keeping the illumination down to the lowest point consistent with safety, comfort and morals. In the first place, current costs money, and it takes current to light an auditorium. Every light shut off is just that much saved in cash. Excessive light injures the projection; that we all know.

How much light, then, is desirable? Easily answered, according to the ideas of the writer: Just sufficient to enable one, after being seated long enough to become accustomed to the semi-gloom, to see clearly objects in one's immediate vicinity and to dimly discern objects all over the house. It is not necessary to be able to read a newspaper. One doesn't go to a theater to read papers while the show is on. If one can see all over the room, even dimly, one can certainly see everything in one's immediate vicinity. This being the case, everything necessary to safety and the conservation of morals is accomplished. More light would be purely a waste of money, an injury to the projection, and less pleasing to the audience than would the semi-light.

Even supposing projection would not be injured it would be utterly needless and very expensive to have the house fully lighted. Too much light detracts from the interest of the show, be it moving picture or a regular performance. The eye is unconsciously attracted by other things than those on the screen or stage. Besides these considerations, there is a restfulness and a quieting effect in surroundings but dimly lighted.

The agitation for light in picture theaters was brought about by the fact that many of the storeroom houses are long and narrow. Unthinking managers, not considering the effect as a whole, turned out all auditorium lights. The result was that the rear end of the long hall was in practically total darkness. The front of the house was lighted well enough for all practical purposes, except when a very dark film was being projected, by reason of light reflected from the screen.

In this connection it might be said, by way of remark, that mirror and polished metal reflecting screens have a much greater effect in lighting the auditorium by reflected rays than do the plaster, cloth or other non-reflecting curtains.

The state of affairs set forth naturally called forth criticism. Had managers promptly recognized the justice of the protest and made immediate arrangements to light the rear portion of their halls, all would have been well. The matter would doubtless have been dropped. They did not do so, however, and this gave the extremest reformer his opportunity. Here was a fault. It was one which none could reasonably deny. Mr. Extremist and his wife, Mrs. Extremist, were in their glory. They lit on the matter with both feet. They proceeded to dance a hornpipe. Reasonableness plays no part in the programme of the extremist. Let he, or she of the crank persuasion, find a fault, and not only must it be removed, but also must the spot where it lay be scrubbed with carbolic acid, or else be dug up and also removed. Theaters were too dark (Motion picture theaters, of course), ergo, they must be made light—no common light, mind you, but real light. Metaphorically speaking their roofs must be removed and the glorious light of Old Sol admitted—performances on cloudy days not allowed; night shows prohibited.

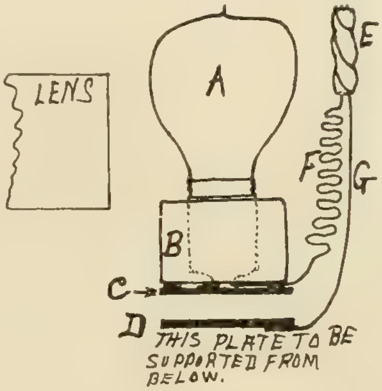
All this talk about daylight in a theater, light sufficient to read a paper in comfort, etc., is pure bladerdash. It is neither desirable or good.

Sufficient light to enable one to see what transpires in one's immediate vicinity, and to see dimly all over the house, is amply sufficient. It is all, or more, than obtains in the regular theaters while the show is on and it is enough.

CARBON TROUBLE.—Wilmington, N. C., writes: "During the past year we have been using ⅝ cored carbons of a well-known make. Recently we ran short and ordered 3,000 more of the same kind. This new lot is not giving satisfaction. We use 50 amperes at the arc. About 10 or 15 minutes after installing new carbons the carbon clamp-screw becomes red hot, and where it makes contact with the carbon a hole forms. This causes the carbon to become loose, of course. Without stopping, I open the lamp-house door and tighten up the screw. But when the times comes to put in new carbons, it is frequently found that the screw, having been red hot, cannot be turned either way. I have this trouble with both the top and bottom thumb screws. I am mailing you one top and one bottom carbon and one top and one bottom clamp screw. Do you think this trouble is caused by the carbons being too soft? Connections are all tight. Am using Compensarc and Edison latest style lamp."

I am inclined to think that, for some reason or other, your carbons are not making good contact with the carbon arm. The screws are badly burned and show evidence of having been very hot indeed. Clean out the inside of your carbon arms thoroughly. Send 75 cents to the Nicholas Power Co., 117 Nassau Street, New York City, for a can of graphite. Take out the clamp screws every day, put a drop of oil on them, wipe the surplus oil off, dip the screws in the graphite and replace them in the lamp. It is, of course, possible the trouble is helped along by that lot of carbons having poor binder. I would suggest that if cleaning the carbon arms thoroughly does not stop the trouble, you send one of the carbons to the importer, explaining the matter fully, and asking him to test the carbons. I am pretty sure, however, that cleaning the carbon arms will solve the difficulty.

THREADING IN FRAME.—Georgetown, Texas, writes: "I note in the October 28th issue someone inquires about threading and starting in frame. Your answer directs him to look back through the Department. The man I work for takes the WORLD, but has not one so far back as that. Of course, one could look through the lens, but I thought you had a quicker way, and you know that minutes count with an audience waiting while reels are changed. I have not been operating for about four years, and find I am somewhat rusty, owing to the wonderful change in machines and the business in general—it is almost like starting all over again. I take great interest in the Department. It is a good work and a great aid to all operators. I am working for a wide awake manager, and you know what that means—good projection and light, and short intervals between reels. Everything around the show is run on a businesslike up-to-date plan."

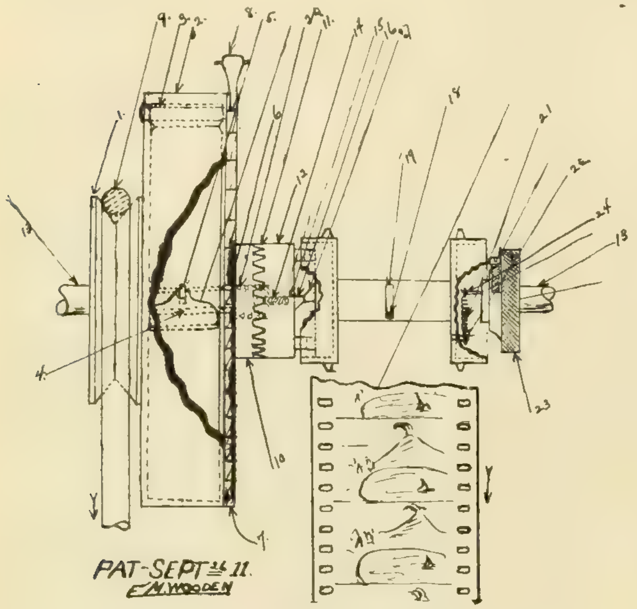


There are several schemes for threading the film. The one referred to, however, is shown in the accompanying cut, which is largely self explanatory.

The lamp is arranged with a hinge, to tip over out of the way. In threading it is tipped back into place by means of a foot treadle, lighting automatically. Thus one is enabled to see just how the film is, in relation to the aperture. A four c. p. lamp is plenty large enough. Yes, there have been big changes in projection machinery and methods during the past four years, and to one who has been out of the game for that length of time, it would indeed be almost like starting over again.

TENSION DEVICE.—New York City submits the following: "I have noticed that in your answers and in advice given you have laid stress on the importance of a perfect and entirely automatic tension equalizer to control the amount of tension on the takeup, or machine rewind. I also note that you have expressed a desire to see or hear of such a device. I herewith respectfully submit for your inspection and criticism a sketch of one which I believe will fill the bill perfectly. I have tried it out and find it adjusts the tension perfectly and automatically, without any attention whatever. It allows only enough tension on film feed to lower reel to wind smooth and solid, whether the lower reel is full or nearly empty. Tension on the film is always the same. As the drawing is somewhat crude, owing to my not being blessed with a good knowledge of drawing, I will explain how the device works. I have somewhat enlarged things in the sketch in order to show the idea more plainly.

"Unlike other rewinders, which depend on the takeup shaft spring and belt-slip to relieve the strain on the film, mine is done automatically. To begin: present machine takeups have the belt pulley on lower sprocket shaft fastened rigidly to shaft. Mine is loose, and here is the difference: Pulley 1 is fastened to cap 2, which covers and is attached to outside end of clock-spring at 3. The pulley and cap, 1 and 2, are loose on the shaft, as I said. The inside end of the clock-spring is attached to bushing 4 by pin 5. Bushing 4 is, in turn, fastened to cover 7 at 6. Cover 7 is cover of cap 2 and is loose, so far as cap 2 is concerned—that is, it revolves independently of cap 2. You will therefore see that, one end of the spring being attached to cap 2 and the other to bushing 4, bushing 4 being attached to cover 7, when cover 7 is revolved, cap 2 remaining stationery, the spring is wound up . The spring is held from unwinding by the fact that on the edge of cover 7 and cap 2 are ratchet teeth. In these teeth rest pawl 8, which is fastened to the machine head. It follows that as the clock-spring is wound up and cannot turn back, it must push ahead. We therefore have power to push belt 9, which in turn revolves the lower reel. But, you say, what winds the spring? You will observe that cap 7, on which bushing 4 is fastened, is also made fast to the thick washer 10, which has clutch teeth 11 engaging with similar teeth in movable washer 12.



"When this washer is moved it goes right or left, sliding on shaft 13, being held to shaft by key 14, which slides in key-way 15. The side movement of washer 12 is ⅛ inch, sufficient to lock or unlock clutch-teeth 11. Thus you see that when washer 12 is at its extreme left it revolves washer 10, which revolves, in turn, cap 7 and bushing 4, winding up the spring 3. Now to go back to washer 12. When it is at its extreme right, teeth 11 are unlocked and the spring is not winding, but is wound up, so lower reel is turned, or pushed—not pulled—only as fast as the film is fed to it. On bushing 12 you will see beveled cam 16, which rests on beveled cam 17. You see when the lower sprocket (which is loose on shaft 13, and can turn ¼ of a revolution, this movement being governed by pin 18 in slot 19) is pulled down this ¼ revolution by reason of too much tension on the lower reel, cam 17, which is attached to the sprocket, allows cam 16 to slide to the right, pressure to accomplish the sliding movement being supplied by coil spring 20. This movement unlocks clutch-teeth 11. Thus you see what locks and unlocks the spring. When the film unlocks the spring by pulling the sprocket around the ¼ turn, it stays in this position until the spring becomes so weak that the sprocket is re-set, which again starts the spring rewinding. resetting of the sprocket is accomplished by spring 21, one end of which is attached to sprocket at 22. The other end is attached to thumbscrew at pin 24. This thumbscrew may be turned so as to vary the tension on sprocket at will, being held to shaft by setscrew 25."

I would not like to pass upon, or even comment on this device without first seeing it in actual operation. The "clock-spring" spoken of would, I presume, have to be much heavier than the usual clock-spring. If the device really will supply absolutely uniform tension throughout the entire reel, and it has no seriously objectionable features, then it certainly is of large value. I should imagine, however, it would be pretty costly to manufacture, therefore correspondingly difficult to interest manufacturers in until such time as there is an increase in the selling prices of projection machines. Certainly I would welcome an automatic tension regulator, since necessary excess of tension in the beginning of the reel, to secure enough to revolve it when full, is doing vast damage to films. I shall be very glad to look at a working model of this device.

FROM LEADVILLE.—Mr. A. B. Cundy, Leadville, Col., writes: "Have noticed that the motor-generator discussion has been going merrily on. Have read, with much benefit, words of wisdom written by the many operators and others taking part. Have been patiently waiting for some one to correct me as to my explanation of the whys and wherefores of the no-resistance proposition, as applied to the shunt-wound generator, October 21 issue. However, with the exception of one letter, the writers of which were kind enough to endorse my theory, I have seen nothing bearing directly on the shunt-wound machine. If I am to take it that my statements are conceded to be correct, then I consider the 'case' of the shunt-wound generator to be proven, and that it is not only possible, but also practical to operate a projection arc from a shunt-wound generator without other resistance than that peculiar to the arc itself.

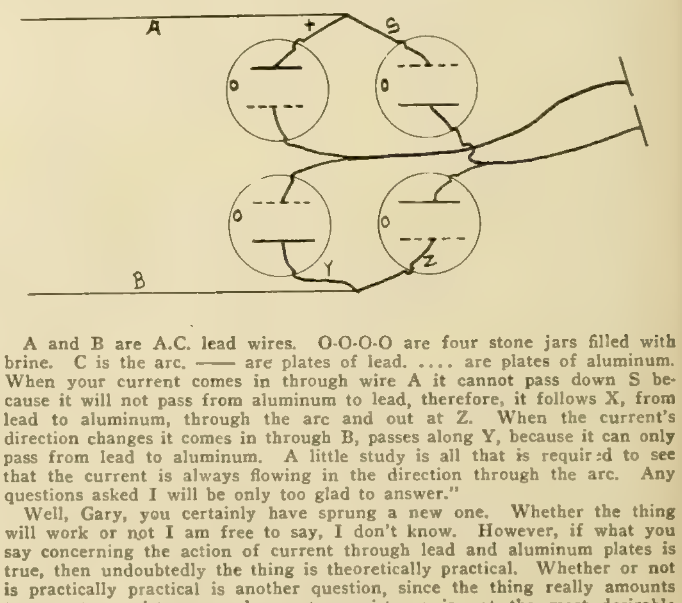
"I have noticed that many correspondents have endeavored to explain my no-resistance results by a long, and in most cases correct, dissertation on the compound-wound machine. This, so far as the original argument goes, leaves us precisely where we started. I want once more to describe my outfit, asking those interested to read it with care. If any one can shed more light on the subject than have I, let him come forward. I will confess that, while I believe my explanation to be correct, I am satisfied there are those who could make the matter much more clear.

"I have a shunt-wound generator, with field rheostat. Am connected direct from generator brushes to projection lamp and have absolutely no other resistance of any sort or kind in the entire D. C. circuit. Generator is operated by a single-phase, 60 cycle, 110 volt A. C. motor, directly connected; that is to say, its armature and the generator armature are on the same shaft, though there is absolutely no electrical connection between motor and generator. Please bear in mind the fact that the generator is shunt-wound."

I think Friend Cundy must have overlooked a letter from Mr. Hallberg, page 721, December 2 issue. Mr. Hallberg holds the operation of a projection arc direct connected to a shunt-wound dynamo to be impractical, using field resistance to govern current flow. The general concensus of opinion, so far as I recall the letters now, without actually looking them all up, is that while it is possible to operate an arc from a shunt-wound generator without resistance, using field coils to regulate, it is not practical from the operator's point of view. Perhaps, however, "not practical" isn't the right term to employ. I might better say the shunt-wound machine is undesirable, from the operator's point of view. I have learned considerable myself in this argument. The more I come to understand the whole thing, the more firmly am I convinced that the shunt-wound machine, while it can be made to do the work all right, is not the best dynamo for the purpose. It appeals to me as plain common sense that the "constant current" type of generator would be the thing for that kind of work. While you, Friend Cundy, may be able to get good results from such a generator under those conditions, I am very, very much inclined to doubt the ability of the average operator to duplicate your performance. In last week's department you will see that a Los Angeles correspondent is using a shunt-wound generator successfully. You will also, however, note that it is a very small machine and working up to the limit of its capacity. You will also note that the brother says he is very careful in the handling of his light. If the arc could be kept exactly the same length at all times then the shunt-wound machine would be practical and all right for such work. The arc cannot be kept that way, however, and that means variable resistance, with consequent fluctuation in amperage, result: variable light intensity on the screen. There is no use disputing this proposition, since it is a parallel to the fact that one and one makes two.

I am really sorry, Friend Cundy, that I am unable to climb down on your side of the fence. It was you who started this valuable discussion and I should have been much pleased to have been able to agree with you fully. It is not practical to use some types and not desirable to use others, among the latter the shunt-wound. It requires altogether too careful handling of the light and striking the arc is too complicated a process—you know what I mean by that. The constant current type is the thing, I think. Mr. Hallberg was, in my judgment, perfectly right.

??????.—Gary, Ind., writes: "Here is a bit of data which I think will interest operators—but just a word first. I have worked in Gary for some time. The current here is 25 cycle, but Gary operators get a better light than some places I know where direct current is used. I have not, as yet, tested the device I am about to describe, thought it is being used successfully in a wireless station in my home town. It is, in fact, a rectifier. As such it is more simple and more durable than either the motor generator set or the mercury arc. Some one discovered the fact that electricity will pass from lead to aluminum, but will not pass from aluminum to lead.



A and B are A.C. lead wires. O-O-O-O are four stone jars filled with brine. C is the arc. —— are plates of lead. .... are plates of aluminum. When your current comes in through wire A it cannot pass down S because it will not pass from aluminum to lead, therefore, it follows X, from lead to aluminum, through the arc and out at Z. When the current's direction changes it comes in through B, passes along Y, because it can only pass from lead to aluminum. A little study is all that is required to see that the current is always flowing in the direction through the arc. Any questions asked I will be only too glad to answer."

Well, Gary, you certainly have sprung a new one. Whether the thing will work or not I am free to say, I don't know. However, if what you say concerning the action of current through lead and aluminum plates is true, then undoubtedly the thing is theoretically practical. Whether or not is practically practical is another question, since the thing really amounts to a water resistance, and a water resistance is not the most desirable thing in the world. I am afraid that the device would not prove satisfactory on ordinary projection work, where heavy current is used. The water or brine would quickly become heated, probably to the boiling point.

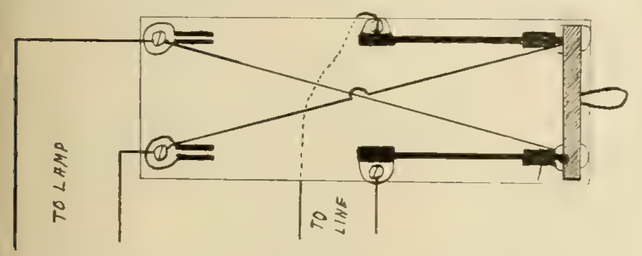
However, I think I will allow our readers to study this proposition and comment on it, since without practical demonstration anything I might say would be in the nature of a deduction.

LENSES.—New York City writes: "I am using 110 volt D. C., 30 amperes, Powers No. 6 head. Cannot get clear picture. Kindly let me know what size M. P. lenses is best, also size of condensers. Picture is 9 feet, with a 30-foot throw."

In the first place, New York, you did not sign your letter. I must again call attention to the fact that unsigned letters will reach the waste paper basket. The signature is not for publication. With your letter it doesn't really matter whether it is signed or not, but one has to enforce some kind of a rule and the rule is that all letters must be signed.

You ask what size M. P. lens is best. I don't know what you mean by that. If you are projecting a 9-foot picture you can't do it with any other focal length than the one you have without moving the machine closer to or further away from the screen. If it is the diameter of the lens you are asking about, the ordinary projection lens is plenty large enough. Your lens is about a 3½-inch E. F. With that lens you will probably get the best result by using two 6½ condensers. However, if that does not prove satisfactory, try one 6½ and one 7½, the 7½ in front. Are you sure your lens is clean? A very faint, almost invisible, finger mark will ruin the definition of the picture.

FROM THE FAR NORTH.—Mr. E. J. Running, Fairbanks, Alaska, writes: "I am but a beginner in the motion picture business, never having had any experience whatever until six months ago, when I secured the position as operator. I have, however, been very successful. I am having some trouble in keeping my picture in focus. Use one Edison Exhibition model and one Edison Underwriter's model. I do not seem to be able to discover the source of the trouble. We have some difficulty here when the light company switches from one dynamo to the other. This changes the polarity of the system. To overcome this I have connected my lead wire to the center post of a double throw, double pole switch. From one end of the switch I run wires to the lamp. From the other end of the switch I run wires crossing to opposite poles at the other end, as per sketch. Thus, you see, I only have to throw switch over to change the polarity.



We have seven operators in Fairbanks. The Projection Department I find to be very interesting. Will you tell me what is considered a good day's work for an operator in the States, also rate of pay and how many feet of film do they usually run?"

You have not described the out of focus effect closely enough for me to offer much advice. Very likely, however, it is caused by a worn aperture plate. If your apertures (film gates, the Edison people call them) are worn, it may cause the picture to come in and out of focus, due to buckling of the film as it passes over the aperture. A new aperture plate is the only remedy. Your switch scheme is very ingenious. But you would accomplish the result in better form by connecting the wires from opposite ends together outside of the switch. Operators in the United States work anywhere from three to eleven hours per day. The rate of pay varies in different sections of the country, all the way from $10 to $40 per week. I could hardly tell you the number of feet of film run. In a continuous show, where the man works eight hours, running one reel after the other, he may average 3,000 feet an hour, or 24,000 feet in eight hours.

MOTOR COMMUTATOR.—New York City propounds the following: "Myself and my employer have had considerable argument as regards the commutator of the machine motor. We have a Standard No. 4 motor-driven machine. Before starting the show I take a small piece of 00 emery, I have used for two months, and clean my commutator. He claims it wears the commutator out and in six months the motor will be no good. Who is right in this matter? I claim it not only does not hurt the commutator, but helps it. Some time ago I wrote you concerning condenser breakage on this machine. After buying 10 pairs of condensers myself, I have found a remedy. It is as follows: In the front wall of the lamphouse about half way between the condenser casing and the top of the lamp house, equi-distant from each other, drill three holes about 1-16 of an inch in diameter. Keep vent holes in the lamphouse hood clean. This seems to circulate enough air to keep the condenser lens from breaking. On January 2d I sent one of your Chicago advertisers $2. To date have received no reply. Is there any way I can get a line on this company? Surely they are responsible or would not be in the Moving Picture World."

I think you will find the advertiser is all right. Had you sent your street address I would have immediately forwarded your complaint to our Chicago representative, who would have attended to the matter. If you will write me stating the facts in the case, giving your street address, I will be only too glad to get action in the matter for you. As to the commutator, I shall have to side with the boss this time. There is no need to clean the commutator of a small motor every day; in fact, it is better not to do it. The commutator of a motor should not be touched at all as long as there is no appreciable sparking at the brushes. You say you use 00 emery, presumably you mean emery cloth. It would be all right to carefully clean the commutator with 00 emery cloth if there was sparking, due to dirt on the commutator or copper pulled across the insulation. This latter, however, seldom or never happens with a very small motor and a piece of canvas with a little commutator compound is about all that should be used on that kind of a commutator. The boss is wrong in saying that the motor would not be any good because the commutator is worn out. It is possible to install a new commutator, though it would be comparatively expensive to do it. I would be very glad to have letters from operators running motor generator sets, or even machine motors, giving their experience as to the best method of caring for the commutator; what to use on them and what not to use on them; in fact, anything experience has taught them in relation to commutator and brushes. As to the three holes, I can't agree with you there. Three holes, each 1-16 inch in diameter, would have very slight effect indeed, one way or the other, on the ventilation of a lamphouse. If your condenser breakage stopped, however, about the time you drilled these holes, I fully understand that I could not convince you of that fact in a hundred years.

CANADIAN TOWNS OCCUPIED.—Mr. Daniel L. Odette, St. Catherines, Ont., writes: "Replying to Mr. Orme, Washington, D. C., January 13th issue, in which he names certain towns as not containing a moving picture show, among them being Port Dalhouse and Merritan, will say that Mr. Orme is badly twisted in his population figures. Port Dalhouse, Merritan and Therold are all within twenty minutes' trolley ride from St. Catherines. Population is as follows: Merritan, 1,500, 5-cent fare from St. Catherines, where there are three moving picture houses. Port Dalhouse, 1,000, carfare from St. Catherines five cents. Therold, 2,500, carfare from St. Catherines 10 cents. In his letter Mr. Orme gives the population of Merritan at 10,000, Port Dalhouse 6,000 and Thorold 8,000. Mr. Thomas Crosby has a small show at Thorold, but is not making any fortune out of it. He has to close down in the summer time. I am afraid Mr. Orme was sampling some of our Canadian frumenti while here. Three drinks of it makes you see three people where there is really only one. Received the handbook O. K. It certainly is a gem."

According to this letter Brother Orme has failed to make good. But that gentleman comes in with the following: "Regarding what Mr. George Farncombe, Minnedosa, Manitoba, Canada, writes, will say that I have just been informed by a one-time partner of mine, who has been over my old route on a hunting trip into Parry Sound last year, that those towns are still open. As to population, I guessed at that. The only counting I did was nickles, dimes and quarters. My gas machine did the rest, where I couldn't hook up on A. C. If Mr. Farncombe means to roast me for trying to help some one to a good business, he is merely wasting words. I am even now looking out for good towns here in Virginia and North Carolina. For the benefit of my Pennsylvania friends, why doesn't some one get into Leesburg, Pa.? It is 9,000 population and 30 miles from Washington, or any other city."

And there you are. Personally I am inclined to think Brother Orme is wrong in the Canadian matter. It is quite possible he has unwittingly overestimated the population and a small town located within a five-cent trolley zone of a large town with three shows could scarcely be said to be open, or present a good field for the exhibitor.

I do not in the least doubt Friend Orme's good intentions. It must be remembered, however, that even so short a time as one year may entirely change the situation in such matters. Thousands of men are seeking open territory and, while there may still be an occasional open town of fair size, I am very sure they are few, in Canada or elsewhere. I don't believe Mr. Farncombe meant to "roast" you, but merely to correct what he believed to be an error on your part. Doubtless there are, as Friend Orme says, many small villages so situated that they could be linked up into a circuit of one night stands. I have known such circuits to be very profitable, where the towns are close enough together. However, you would have to show me the town of 8,000 population not already having at least one show, unless there were very good reason for the condition. I am too well acquainted with the numbers of men searching for locations.

AN EXPLANATION.—Baltimore, Md., writes: "I note in January 13th issue, page 124, a party in North Carolina says he has written two letters to Frank Lewis, of this city, supposing him to be secretary of L. U. 181. Kindly publish the fact, as soon as possible, that Frank Lewis is no longer the secretary, or even a member of our local. When the recent strike came on Lewis was out of work and immediately took a position in one of the non-union houses. He was promptly expelled from the organization. If North Carolina will write to George Ewell, secretary, 1945 Collington Avenue, he will receive prompt reply."

UNION WANTED.—Columbus, Ohio, wants to know how to go about becoming a member of an operators' union and whether there is an operators' union in or near Columbus. Also asks whether applicant has to work a certain length of time or answer a list of questions.

There is, I believe, no operators' union in Columbus. You have the right, however, to join Local Union No. 12 of the Theatrical Stage Employees, located in Columbus. Better consult its officers. What provisions they make concerning admission of operators I cannot say. Regular I. A. T. S. E. operators' unions oblige the applicant to pass an examination, though there is no set time of service as operator required, I believe, by any union. There is an operators' union in Cincinnati and one in Cleveland. You can only join the union having jurisdiction in the territory in which you work. That is No. 12, of Columbus.

OPERATING ROOM PAINT.—New York City writes: "Please settle the following dispute. A says that motion picture theaters in the West start at 7 A. M. B says he is wrong. Which is correct? I would also ask if you have any knowledge of a Mr. Pichards. Does he run any house in Indiana or Illinois? What paint is best for inside of operating room?"

Out West is a very indefinite term. However, I know of no houses opening at 7 A. M. anywhere, except possibly a few isolated cases in very large cities. Certainly there is no general practice in the West, or anywhere else, of opening theaters at that hour. I know nothing of the gentleman you mention. The operating room should preferably be painted with some dark, flat color. Personally, I prefer black, but it should not be a glossy black.

LOS ANGELES.—Lorain, Ohio, writes: "I expect to move my family to Los Angeles, Calif., some time in February, engaging in the moving picture business in that city. Can you tell me whether or not they allow motor driven machines there? If motors are not allowed with all machines, but on some, then what ones may be operated with motors? My experience has been with the Power's No. 5 and No. 6, and the Edison. I would also be glad to receive the address of the California State Fire Underwriters, in order to secure their rules and regulations governing theaters."

I have not at hand the information you ask. Will some one of the Los Angeles brothers kindly answer the gentleman's questions, also sending copy of letter in for publication, as such data is of some value. Address Mr. O. F. Stowe, 1018 10th Street, Loraine, Ohio.

"THE ETERNAL MOTHER" (Biograph), January 11 A very beautiful and subtle picture dealing with deep things in the human heart. Yet it utilizes a simple story and tells it clearly. What the spectator will get out of it, beyond and above this story will depend upon himself or herself, his experience and knowledge of human life. Perhaps the wisest will go away feeling that he never could find words to tell all that it showed to him. This reviewer has never seen a picture that affected him so much like music.

"The Eternal Mother" is the heroine of the story; there are two players who both take her part. The producer has wisely kept the action in lowly places near the ground so that nothing artificial may interfere with his idea. In the early scenes we are introduced to a young farmer and his wife, a mere flaxen-haired girl as care-free as a May morning. But soon, another character appears, a restless, passionate, dark-haired girl with a red rose in her hair. There is later a divorce and a re-marriage. The May morning has given place to the drouth of summer. The young woman who had divorced her husband hears that his new wife has become a mother, but is dying. She goes to him and her with forgiveness in her eyes, and when the wife dies, it is she who takes the baby and brings it up. This scene is very praiseworthily made. Perhaps it showed more than the producer really intended and so is to some extent a work of genius. If so, the producer, with the two talented young ladies· who played it, was like a composite unity, viz., the mirror in which the face of life was reflected.

It is, roughly speaking, a story in three acts. In the last act, it is shown that the foolish man sees, after his wife's death, how blind he had been. He is like a man expelled from his Garden of Eden. He can see the garden from afar, but he is conscious of his unworthiness. His child grows up into womanhood. The May morning has now become snowy winter as she stands white-haired and wrinkled, and a picture of wisdom that conquers tragedy. The man, as he works, can look up and see her passing in the distance, but he must return to his work again. This work among his cabbages and potatoes gives him a sense of service to the world. He doesn't buy comfort or amusement with the money that it brings him. It is purification alone that he seeks. In the end the Eternal Mother recognizes in him, white-haired and bent with age, a time-battered ruin, a companion spirit. He is permitted to come back to Eden.

"ROPED IN" (Melies), January 11.—A bright and fresh comedy of character. The center of interest is a cowboy who is a champion rope-thrower. Nothing that he wanted got past him. That rope of his would shoot around it and it would be his. There are, it is true, some farcical doings toward the end of it, whose chief effect is to lengthen it. But in spite of these "old gags" it remains a rattling good comedy. The audience laughed heartily and often. The photographs are fair. It is commendable as a program lightener, for it has substance.

"A QUESTION OF SECONDS" (Edison), January 13.—A thorough-going melodrama, with the heroine leading the cowboys at a wild gallop to the rescue. The Mexican workmen on the big job had been incited to strike by the villain, who also loved the girl. The fuse was very fast creeping near to the charge of dynamite. The girl jumped from her horse and stamped out the fire. It is like other good melodramas, speedy, clear and satisfying. It was well photographed and the audience liked it.

"ST. JOHNS, NEWFOUNDLAND" (Edison), January 13.—A travelog that is an eye-opener. It is surprising to see how big and important looking St. Johns is. An excellently pictured and acceptable number.

"THE BLACKSMITH" (Lubin), January 11.—A melodrama in which a country blacksmith, his girl, and a boarder from the city, play the chief parts. The city man coaxes the girl away from the smith and then abandons her. She gets sick. The smith goes to the city and compels the man to come back. They reach the house after the girl has died. Most of the photographs are merely so so, but there are two prettily lighted scenes, including a fireside picture and one with moonlight coming down through a window on the bed of the dead girl. The audience didn't express itself. The picture is a very fair program filler.

"PAID IN HIS OWN COIN" (Lubin), January 13.—It is a pity that the leading lady of this picture, Miss May Buckley, who, it may be, is to take Miss Lawrence's place in the Lubin pictures, should not have had a medium more worthy of her than this picture furnished. She takes the part of a society girl who, in the early scenes, is lame and suing a railroad for damages. The junior partner of the railroad's law firm undertakes to win the suit by gaining her confidence and then betraying it. This is rather unconvincing, but it is nothing beside the trick he used to discredit her suit. He got her to permit him to carry her through the waltz. There was nothing shown to us that prepared us for this action in the girl's temperament. The man thus got witnesses who "saw her waltzing." Later the girl is cured. The man really falls in love with her and gets paid in his own coin. Miss Buckley's acting is simple and dignified. We hope to see her in many pretty pictures.

"WILLIE'S SISTER" (Vitagraph), January 13.—A comedy with a picture of college life that is not quite truthful, but serves its purpose since it furnishes the contrasts needed to understand the situation. The fun comes from the difference that is shown in the way Willie is treated at first and then later. He was a freshman, and seemed to be the only one at that college. He had a dog's life until the boys found out that Willie had a very pretty sister. It is an amusing good picture and the audience seemed to like it. But its value comes from the good acting. The photographs are good and interesting.

"ALMA'S CHAMPION" (Vitagraph), January 10.—A satisfying melodramatic story with no special idea. The situation is this: Alma has become of age. Her guardian, general manager of the railroad, wants her to let him handle her stock in the road, but she refuses this. Her distrust is vindicated by his actions, for he attempts to force her to do it. She runs away. Her champion, who helped her, and kept her guardian from overtaking her, is a locomotive engineer; we know him to be the son of the road's president learning the business. She, later, invites him to a dance; her guardian also is invited. In a beautiful conservatory both propose, very melodramatically, delightfully so. They return to the ballroom and there, in a scene that in itself is as pretty as anything of its kind that the Vitagraph Company has turned out in many a day, she learns that her champion is the president's son. The scene in the first act where she hides from her pursuing guardian at the railroad station is also highly commendable. Its photographs are very pretty. It tells a speedy, clear story. The audience seemed to like it.

"THE SHEEPMAN'S ESCAPE" (Essanay), January 13.—A Western picture based upon the feud which formerly existed between sheepmen and cattlemen. A sheepman is warned to go, but declares his intention of remaining. He is ambushed, and when he returns his shot wounds one of his enemies. The injured man is taken to the home of the sheepman where he is cared for by the man's mother. Meanwhile the cattlemen have found the sheepman and to save a lynching the sheriff locks him up. Learning that he has been cared for by the sheepman's mother, the cattleman confesses that he was shot in self-defense and the feud ends.

"THE GOD OF WINE GETS STUNG" (Gaumont), January 13.—A little adventure in which Bacchus and Cupid play rather important parts, and notwithstanding his machinations the wine god is defeated and departs crestfallen, while the beautiful Leona falls into the arms of her true lover, the shepherd. It is colored and very pretty.

"THE ARDENNES FOREST, FRANCE" (Gaumont), January 13.—This film illustrates how stags are brought from Bohemia and freed to afford sport for hunters later. Some of the scenes are extremely good studies in a forest. The picture affords an excellent idea of what a forest is like in that part of the world.

"A RAGTIME LOVE AFFAIR" (Essanay), January 12.—The idea upon which this excellent comedy is based is new. To lose a fortune by forgetting to turn off an electrical piano is sufficiently unusual to arouse interest. The girl was given a fortune provided she learned to play the piano within a specified time. Her sweetheart assisted her and all would have gone well, but when the couple left the house they omitted to stop the electrical appliance. Their scheme was thus disclosed and while they got each other they lost the fortune. The comedy is exceptionally good and the audience appreciates it from beginning to end.

"THE O'NEILL" (Kalem), January 12.—An Irish romance which will touch the hearts of most audiences at once. The O'Neill is a patriot who flees the country because of charges against him. He returns secretly and very romantically meets a young woman who betrays him and assists in his capture, but relents and elopes with him afterward. A situation like this is sufficient to arouse the emotions and hold them. The meeting, when the young man acts as a highwayman to obtain the wherewithal to assist his unfortunate friend who helped him, their subsequent meeting at a masked ball, and the girl's betrayal all afford ample opportunity for thrilling action. The players do very well indeed. Then comes the girl's remorse as love awakens. They escape together and are married when they reach the coast and fly to France where they live happily afterward. A story of this character is more than ordinarily interesting and will please an audience better than almost anything a manager can offer.

"LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT" (Edison), January 12.—A picture like this, with its suggestion of what might happen under certain circumstances, will make an impression which will not quickly wear away. It tells of the temptation of a pure-minded country girl and how she was saved by the intervention of a woman of the world who succeeds in getting the little one home to her mother. Then, as the memory of other days rouses in her the desire for the better things, she staggers along the street until before a church a stream of light flashes across her path from its open door and she is guided into a better life. While the film is a sermon, it is handled in such a way that it seems real and there is a tendency to think of similar situations in the experience of those who may have come within the circle of one's own acquaintance.

"A MODERN ANANIAS" (Selig), January 12.—Deming, in an early morning altercation with his wife, who dexterously wielded an umbrella and emphasized her remarks with considerable vigor, received somewhat disfiguring marks. At the club he permitted his stimulated imagination to run riot and related an adventure of considerable excitement in which he plays the part of a hero. He meets his Waterloo, however, through the appearance of an amateur photographer who appears with a picture that he happened to make while passing the house while the difficulty was in progress. Deming joins the club founded by a gentleman who has been somewhat prominent in his country's history for the past few years.

"THE JOURNEY OF THE WESTERN GOVERNORS TO THE EAST" (Selig), January 12. This unusual topical picture shows close up views of all the governors who came from the West recently, on a visit. This firm had camera men with the party on its entire trip and the views they obtained should be carefully preserved as a part of the important history of the year. The illustrations thus secured will give to posterity an accurate reproduction of exactly how these men looked and exactly what occurred on their journey.

"MRS. SIMS SERVES ON THE JURY" (Kalem), January 10.—In this interesting comedy Sims attempts to teach a lesson to his wife, a suffragette. Accordingly he invites his stenographer for a ride and is arrested for speeding. But he is tried before a jury of women with his wife as foreman. The stenographer is discharged, but Sims is given six days in jail. Thus does his plan to teach his wife a lesson miscarry and he learns something himself. The way the tables are turned on him furnishes an unusually good comedy situation.

"MAX AND MAURICE" (Edison), January 10.—A comedy which consists of a series of pranks played by a band of live boys. They succeed in thinking of about every possible kind of mischief. Some will say that it has too much wanton destruction of property in it, though they, too, will have to admit that the average boy does practically the things herein illustrated.

"LAZY BILL AND THE STRIKERS" (Eclipse), January 10.—Lazy Bill led a strike at the office. The employees were complaining of overwork. After some difficulty they separate and go to their homes. Lazy Bill's wife knows her business and as soon as she discovers he is no longer working, she orders him to proceed with the housework. As may be imagined he does not go about his newly imposed task with any degree of enthusiasm. What happened to the others does not appear, but before long they also appear at the office and ask to be reinstated.

"POTTERY MAKING IN THROUNE, SWITZERLAND" (Eclipse), January 10.—The pottery made here is famous among lovers of beautiful clay work for its striking designs. Every process of manufacture is graphically illustrated from the rough clay to the finished product. It is an instructive industrial.

"THE TENDERFOOT FOREMAN" (Essanay), January 11.—This is a good Western love story of an unmarried girl ranch owner. Her foreman was a ruffian and had the whole outfit under his thumb. A tenderfoot who didn't look like a softy, being Mr. Anderson, applied for the job and was refused. The foreman came up, and the tenderfoot gave him a lesson in polite manners. This pleased the girl and she then employed him. Of course there was trouble and of course the tenderfoot made good. Of course he won the girl which, after such a rattling good story left everybody satisfied. The photographs are good. The action is brisk. Everybody seemed to like the picture.

"THE PROSECUTING ATTORNEY" (Selig), January 11.—The situation of this picture is strong. The prosecuting attorney secures the conviction of a woman charged with working the badger game. Upon her release from prison he marries her. All goes well until her old pal is released. He makes her life miserable until she is driven to frenzy and shoots him. Her husband, understanding the situation, assumes all the responsibility for the murder himself, when the officers come to make the arrest. There is a thrill of admiration when he does this, and the audience is ready with applause.

"THE RUSSIAN PEASANT" (Kalem), January 17.—There is an appeal in this strong play which will go straight to the heart of almost anyone who sees it. The poverty and misery of the Russian peasant is faithfully reproduced. Whether the cruelty of the nobleman and his friends as shown is real, or occurs only in rare instances must be left for those who know to say; but the picture is deeply affecting. A princess, the story shows, gained the gratitude of one of the despised peasants when she prevented an attack upon his sister. Then comes an uprising of the peasants, and the grateful one is able to recompense her for her kindness. And she, quicker to see actual conditions than her father, induces him to institute reforms which benefit these unfortunates. It has merits well worth consideration.

"THE BACHELOR'S WATERLOO" (Edison), January 17.—The first film to illustrate the leap year possibility. A bachelor finds himself surrounded by young women, in whose company his discomfort is plainly apparent. But his friend's sister interests him, and later, when through an accident they are alone, she assumes the privileges usually accorded to leap year and proposes. The bachelor, much to his surprise, accepts, and the way to the church utters an emphatic call.

"A FIFTY-MILE RAMBLE THROUGH THE THOUSAND ISLANDS" (Edison), January 17.—A boat trip through this wonderful beauty spot. There is more than a glimpse of one of the scenic wonders of America. Before the trip ends the audience has acquired an unusually good impression of the wonders of the region.

"HER UNCLE'S CONSENT" (Lubin), January 15.—Of course it was all a mere chance that Uncle was smitten with a chorus girl, but the chance was of advantage to his neice when he discovered that she had formed an attachment for the matinee idol in the same company. The situation becomes very tense when the Uncle puts his chorus girl out on the balcony and it begins to rain. The niece's lover sees the feather boa and recognizes it. There are the usual explanations and consents, after which the world contains the usual supply of happiness for each.

"BRAVE AND BOLD" (Biograph), January 15.—He was brave and bold, but when a toothache took him by storm and he hied him away to a dentist's to have the offending molar removed, a different condition ensued. Bravery is of many types, but the bravery which causes one to face a dentist has yet to be discovered. To what extent the subject of this sketch had developed this variety is adequately shown in the film. It will make your audience smile when they see it.

"DID MOTHER GET HER WISH?" (Biograph), January 15..—Mamma was quite insistent that Nellie marry wealth and there was much indecision on her part when first Jones and then the other man acquired increasing wealth. But Nellie had other plans and her mother is quite taken aback when the favored young men appearing with minister's certificate and furthermore a note is handed to her which directs her to marry the others herself if she wants to see them married. Nellie has eloped with the man of her own choice.

"THE DESERT TRAIL" (Kalem), January 15.—In this melodrama there is a good deal of human nature and some interesting backgrounds which afford a reasonably accurate impression of what a desert really looks like. The theme is the betrayal of a man by a false friend who left him to die alone that he might himself win a girl whom both loved. The girl is unconvinced and dreams of her lover struggling in the desert. She induces a faithful friend to search for him. He finds him and brings him home. There is a happy reunion and the perfidy of a false friend is emphatically exposed.

"THE OLD FLORIST" (Essanay), January 16. A pretty picture of sentiment in which a youthful sweetheart of a little girl who has consumption steals money to send her to some place where she can recover. The youthfulness of the two keeps this from being at all displeasing as it is shown. The young lover does not succeed in getting away with the money. He is caught with the "goods on him" by a policeman. He had already confessed to a friend of his sweetheart and of himself, the old florist, who acts as a sort of foster father to the two youngsters. The lad spends a short term in a prison and when he is freed a way is opened by which he and his sweetheart can both go to the West. The photographs are very good; the players pleasing and natural. It will make a first-class program filler.

"THE COWBOY'S BEST GIRL" (Selig), January 16.—The invitation to the dance had said "You and your best girl" to the cowboy. He had no best girl, but had just taken a partner, a young man from the East. This man had been engaged to a girl, but a jealous busybody had broken it. The young man, for a lark, dressed up as a girl. The girl happened to be visiting in the same locality. She, for a lark, decided to go to the dance as a man. The two meet there and in a dramatic moment discover each other. The photographs are so poor that it takes a good deal from the clearness of the story; it is hard to follow what is going on. The story is interesting. It will serve as a filler.

"UNCLE NED'S DIPLOMACY" (Gaumont), January 16.—A pleasant comedy, pretty, well acted and with interesting and carefully chosen backgrounds. It tells of the love between a young man and an actress, of his mother's distress thereat and how her brother, the lad's uncle, helped on the match while he hoodwinked his sister. It has no special strength or weakness. It will serve very acceptably as a program filler.

"JACK AND THE BEANSTALK" (Edison), January 16.—A delightful picture which was made primarily for children, being the well known giant story; but which is so skilfully accomplished that grown-ups will like it as much as though they were still but ten years old. It is a trick picture of course; but there is very little in the scenes to suggest that the relative sizes of Jack and the Giant were not as they seem to be. It is a good feature picture.

"CHUMPS" (Vitagraph), January 16.—Mr. Marshall P. Wilder and Mr. John Bunny are the two bright stars in this sparkling comedy. It made the audience shout with laughter and is easily the best comedy for two weeks. If Bunny, in it, is just a bit funnier than Wilder, it is because he is even funnier than usual, as though Wilder, being near him, like another log, had made him burn brighter. They make a rare combination. Wilder is a 20th century king's jester; a Touchstone brought up-to-date, and Bunny, although he is not only full of laughter himself, but the cause of laughter in others, is like Bottom. They never met before. An exhibitor can rely upon this comedy. It has its good scenes and its better scenes; but it will be no disappointment. It can safely be advertised as a house-filling comedy.

"THE MEETING OF THE WAYS" (Vitagraph), January 12.—A melodramatic story of two brothers. Their ways parted at college where Tom was expelled for hazing while Dick graduated with honor. At their parting Dick gave Tom a locket with their mother's portrait in it and this was the means of identification when fate brought them together again after many years. Tom, who had sunk to the underworld, had accidentally killed a man who was attempting to rob him of this cherished locket. Dick, who had become a great lawyer, was assigned by the judge to plead Tom's case and the locket was handed to him. His plea wins and his brother is acquitted. The picture is competantly made, well acted and photographed and is pleasing. It has many good qualities but no special strength. Mr. Costello plays Dick, and Mr. Delaney plays Tom. The rather close resemblance between their profiles makes them convincingly brothers. One very minor part, the nurse of Dick's children, was played with very commendable naturalness, we do not know by whom. The picture is a first-class program filler.

Independent.

"FATHERS AND SONS" (Champion), January 15.—This picture was reviewed on page 213, January 20, 1912. It needs no further notice here.

"DELHI DURBAR" (Gaumont), January 15.—This great scenic was reviewed on page 196, January 20, and needs no further notice.

"THE APPOINTED HOUR" (Reliance), January 17.—A very effective picture in which Miss Fernley shows remarkable strength in an emotional role. A reviewer of motion pictures has his feeings dragged this way and then that so often that he simply has to become hardened to a large extent. It takes a fairly effective picture to make such a one choke, but this does it. It is a tragedy with a happy ending. The tragic situation is pictured against the festivities of a masquerade ball. The man and his young wife who are giving the ball and a guest alone suspect its presence. The elderly man misunderstands his wife and the interloper is tempting her to flee with him. She has consented and the appointed hour is to be while the ball is at its height. Just before she slips out, the woman picks up a little package of her husband's love letters. She reads one and then she breaks down. Her husband, who, inconsiderate as he seems, still loves her, comes in and finds her weeping. They make up and go happily back to the ball room. The picture's strength comes from the sharp contrasts and from Miss Fernley's excellent acting, although she is very ably supported. Mr. Walthall plays the interloper. Almost a feature.

"THE HONOR OF THE TRIBE" (Bison), January 16.—A beautiful picture of water, pine trees and a level reach of cloud opens this film. It shows Indians coming to call on a friendly chief and bringing presents. Blue Flower, wife of the village chief, puts on her best dress to shine before the eyes of the visitor and this makes her husband jealous. Her husband calls her to account. The stranger will not have her and she kills herself. Many of the photographs are very pretty; many seem underexposed and indistinct. The action is fairly clear for the most part. It will not make a very strong feature; but will help to strengthen an ordinary bill.

"AN EVENING STORY" (Eclair), January 18.—A story is told by a French grandmother in the firelight. It seems to be a terrible story; for, afterward, the mother and daughter, left alone in the house, are afraid. A soldier, on leave, reaches home and to surprise his family climbs up by a ladder. It was not a sensible thing to do. The mother hears the man and shoots out of the window, killing her son. It is dramatic, but it is too gruesome to be pleasant.

"CULTURE OF THE SUGAR CANE" (Eclair), January 18.—This excellent industrial shows how sugar cane is handled in North Africa. It is instructive and very interesting. A few more sub-titles would have added much to its value.

"AFTER MANY YEARS" (Imp), January 18.—A very pleasing story of two brothers, one strong and a good business man, and the other a musician, but weak. This weak man couldn't keep away from the saloons and, in shame and contrition, had left home and wandered away. The picture, after a few scenes that tell this story, shows the contrast between the fates of these two men. They have lost track of each other. There are two little cousins; but, although these girls of about eight years have become acquainted, neither knows who the other is. The poor child comes in to see the rich child's house and becomes sick. The rich brother takes her home and there meets his long-lost brother after many years. The picture doesn't grip with quite the power that some pictures do; but many of its scenes are deeply emotional. It is a good picture for children to see as well as for their elders and it will serve as a feature, although it is not a very strong picture.

"THIRTY DAYS" (Comet).—Papa makes the prospective son-in-law an offer to let him marry his daughter if he'll make thirty dollars in thirty days. His first job was as a "puller in" for a Jewish second-hand clothier; but he soon got the grand bounce for pulling in a "bum." He got other jobs with as much success. On the twentieth day he cut wood like a veritable sawmill, but got only a dime for it. He then consulted the girl who advised him to hire out his own motor car. On the last day of grace his prospective father-in-law needed a conveyance and the young man made him come across with thirty dollars and he won his bride. The picture doesn't drag. It is fairly well photographed. Is a fair filler.

"THE DESERTED SHAFT" (Imp), January 15.—This is not necessarily a story of a mine; the deserted shaft might have been a part of any engineering work like an aqueduct. One of the assistant engineers on the work, which seems to be extensive, pushed the paymaster, who was a much slighter man, into it. He was jealous on account of a girl. The paymaster had the week's pay envelopes with him. He was missed at once and the men searched carefully for him, and a large reward was offered for his arrest and conviction. The engineer, however, was conscience-stricken and confessed to the girl, who got help and saved the paymaster, her sweetheart. The man's predicament and the stir caused by his disappearance are very skilfully shown and the whole situation is clear and interesting. It is a very good picture for almost any occasion. It is substantial enough to serve as the leading picture in most bills.

"LITTLE BOY BLUE" (Powers), January 16.—A very pretty child's story, with leaders taken from Eugene Field's famous poem of the same name. It opens with a Christmas party and tree. Then Little Boy Blue dreams that he sees an angel and his parents find him dead. This is very effectively pictured and it is followed by a fire-light picture showing the memories of the child's parents. With the other picture on this reel, it will serve as a feature picture.

"THE HISTORIC MOHAWK VALLEY" (Powers), January 16.—A very welcome film indeed containing some very good photographs of the old buildings and famous sites of old pre-Revolutionary happenings in the Mohawk Valley. The charm of the valley, however, isn't shown. It would take a colored picture to even suggest that. It is a very commendable and interesting offering.

"HUBBY MINDS THE BABY" (Reliance), January 20.—A farce showing how an awkward man took care of his baby while his wife was out. The poor kid received hardly the respect due a man-child of his age. The farce could hardly be called very amusing or very refined.

"A MOUNTAIN TRAGEDY" (Reliance), January 20.—A picture whose object seems to be merely to show a rather brutal struggle. It deals wholly with elemental things; there are no truly human traits of character shown. Yet its appeal, although made to the rougher elements of the mind, is effective. One seeing the picture will probably wait for the end. The struggle, at its climax, is like that shown in the first act of Moody's "The Great Divide"; the situation is more terrible. The ending is not so strong. The woman, struggling for her honor, by a chance shot from her assailant's pistol kills him. Her husband, on the bed, who was thought to be dead, shows signs of life and the posse, in search of the bad man and his comrade, now dead outside, enters.

"A SUMMER FLIRTATION" (Great Northern), January 20.—A comedy in which two friends go on a vacation together. Both fall in love with the same girl at a seaside hotel. The photographs are not very good; but it has a number of laughable situations and will be enjoyed by those who care for society pictures. It shows a caricature of life at a Danish summer hotel and is a good program filler for the right kind of audience.

"THE BURDEN OF SHAME" (Ambrosio), January 17.—A dramatic, tragic story which is simple and made very clear. Its scenes are done in soft, velvet tones. It is effectively acted. The parents object to a love affair. The lovers attempt to elope; but the car comes to grief and the man is killed. Later, the girl kills herself. On the same reel there is a pleasing farce.

"TWEEDLEDUM IN FINANCIAL DISTRESS" (Ambrosio), January 17.—In this farce, Tweedledum, the artist, is suffering from a well-recognized ailment, "artist's distress"; it is felt most keenly in the pocket book. He writes to his uncle that he has the cholera. Uncle comes and Tweedledum and his friends pick his pocket. Then follows an amusing chase; they in an automobile, uncle on foot. They had got him to put on a Grecian costume. Uncle catches them; but the girls persuade him to be one of the party. These two numbers on the same reel are a very fair program filler.

"A MAN'S A MAN" (Solax), January 19.—A story of a poor jew peddler. Its object is to show a human soul, ill-treated, scorned and terribly injured, showing courageous humanity and protecting from a mob of lynchers the very man who, in the first place, had wantonly upset his basket of apples and then had run over and killed his little daughter. The rich man insults the peddler further by offering him a few dollars. Later, the peddler finds him placing flowers on the child's grave and forgives him. The picture accomplishes what it sets out to do. The general effect is lessened, though, by the fact that some of the means it used were not wholly convincing. It is commendable for its fine object and, in large part, for its workmanship. It will make an acceptable filler.

"A BRAVE LITTLE WOMAN" (Nestor), January 15.—In this picture, which is likely to be popular, a sick man, his wife and a burglar have the chief parts. The action is helped by the Nestor sub-titles. The scenes show the tastefully furnished home of wealthy people. The acting and the photography are both good. The doctor had warned the wife that her sick husband must not be disturbed. In the night, the burglar comes. To keep him from awaking her husband, the woman goes down and plays that she is also a burglar, hoping that, when he finds some one else on the job, he'll leave. She even agrees to make the up-stairs haul for him, if he'll keep quiet. He sees through her pretense, and after complimenting her, departs. It will serve as a feature.

"THERE'S SOMETHING WRONG" (Nestor), January 15.—Like the finger sign board at the Irish cross roads which added, "If you can't read, ask the blacksmith," the man's wife in this comedy, when suddenly called to her sick mother, wrote a note to her husband telling him where the key was, placed it on the library table where he would see it, and then locked up the house. Something seemed to be wrong. He stirred up the neighborhood; but none knew where his wife was. The cop helped him force his way in. Then he said, "Just like a woman." It is a brisk, pleasing little picture. The two together make a commendable offering.

"DESPERATE DESMOND ON THE TRAIL AGAIN" (Nestor), January 20.—A truly Western atmosphere is given to the adventures of our noble bunk hero and the desperate villain, not only by the kind of adventures, but by the backgrounds. No description of them would do them justice. It was seeing the pictures that kept the audience in continuous laughter. One of the best laughs comes at the very end. Desperate is standing in front of a firing squad; he is to be shot when the captain says "Fire." He still is hopeful of "getting" the bunk hero yet. And we don't know whether the command to fire was ever given or not. It is a film that will grace any bill, especially one with a tragedy as the attraction.

"THE FUGITIVE" (Nestor), January 17.—A Western story relating in an effective way how a man suspected of highway robbery was cleared. In the first few scenes he is shown fleeing from a sheriff's posse. This chase is full of swift changes and departures from the trite straight course of the ordinary chase. The best thing in the picture, however, is the series of scenes in which the man's innocence is clearly proved to the sheriff. At this point, the sheriff has captured his man for the second time. He is taking him in the stage to jail. The real bandits hold up the stage and sheriff who sees his mistake. They are rescued by the heroine who brings help. The photographs are very interesting and of good quality. Where a "Western" is wanted, this will serve very well as the feature picture.

"THE RELENTLESS LAW" (American), January 15.—The opening scene of this emotional Western story is a revolver fight between an outlaw and a posse. It is smoky and takes place on a hillside covered with immense boulders around which the fugitive dodges. Doubling back, he manages to get one of the horses the posse had left unguarded. They are still hot on his trail and he takes refuge in his cabin where we see his wife and child. He is tracked there; but again eludes his pursuers by climbing through a back window. A little later, he is finally cornered in a cave. For two days he is held at bay, until, mad with hunger, he darts out and is killed. Meanwhile, his wife has remained in the cabin with the baby. Several pictures of her have been flashed on the screen as she sits with the child looking out toward the hills. It is her haunting face that pictures the tragedy. Beside this portrayal, the action is crude, but it makes a perfect background and the human qualities in the situation stand out against it very visibly. Miss Bush plays this outlaw's wife. She is showing in these "Flying A" pictures a wonderful breadth of insight and power of expression. Her work makes this a very good picture to feature with Miss Bush's acting as the attraction.

"THE JUSTICE OF THE SAGE" (American), January 18.—An acceptable cowpuncher romance with a situation, in its early stages, not unlike situations used in other romances of this kind by this company. It is worked out freshly, however. Two men love the ranch owner's daughter. The evil one kills the old man and gets the other, the acceptable lover, accused. The murderer is the sheriff and it is he who holds court. The ranchman, however, though long unconscious, recovers. The girl arrives in time to save her lover. How this picture got its name is not clear. That is a small matter. The picture is a good one and is an acceptable program filler.

"THE BRAID" (Comet), January 15.—The young wife died and her husband cut off her long, thick braid as a souvenir. Later, he sees and follows another woman who looks so much like the departed that he thinks she is her spirit. She is a vaudeville actress. His persistent attention, at first enrages her; but, later, she pities him and they become very friendly. She visits him and even consents to wear one of his wife's dinner gowns. A portrait of the wife hangs on the wall and the actress thinks it is of her. She also finds the braid. This deeply incenses the man who, after choking her, dismisses her. The picture is more or less morbid; it doesn't deal with sane human things. If it is intended as a psychological study; it chose an abnormal, not pleasant, mind to picture. The photographs are clear. There are many people who like this sort of thing; but it will distress sensitive people.

"A TALE OF THE SNOW" (Champion), January 17.—A backwoods story in snowy backgrounds and of rough people. It is fairly realistic, but has a human quality and truth that makes it very acceptable. The acting is commendable, at some moments it is excellent. The climax of the story is brought about by a very cleverly suggested snow-slide. The snow scenes are well photographed. The picture may be safely used to strengthen a bill when the other pictures are comedies. It will not make a very notable feature, but, still, a fair one.

"MAMIE BOLTON" (Eclair, American), January 16.—"Mamie Bolton" was a mine, or, at least, stock by that name was sold on the market. Some of this stock was bought by a young husband who had promised not to speculate. He received a telegram about "Mamie Bolton" and left it on his library table. His wife misunderstood it and sent for her father and mother. Father came loaded for bear; but his wife took the gun away. Meanwhile "Mamie Bolton" had doubled and when the father-in-law got through clubbing the young husband and mother-in-law got through pulling his hair, they found out that he had just won a fortune. The comedy atmosphere is very well maintained. It never falls into coarseness and it is very well acted. The photographs are excellent. It is a pleasing picture; any program that includes it will be above commonplace.

"DR JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" (Thanhouser), January 16.—There have been several other pictures of Stevensen's great novel. It offers one of the most attractive themes to picture makers, because of the effectiveness with which the substitution of Jekyll for Hyde and vice versa can be accomplished. This is a remarkable portrayal of the situation. It is played very acceptably and gives a heart-gripping feeling of wonder as we see the picture alternate between terror and romance, romance that is wild with all regret and terror that reaches the depths in our knowledge of evil. The picture is more effective, in its own way, than any of the others that this reviewer has seen; because its idea seems to be merely to bring out this fearful contrast. It doesn't tell so much of the story as the others. Exhibitors will make no mistake in using this as a special attraction and in advertising it as an unusually strong production.

"A NIAGARA HONEYMOON" (Thanhouser), January 19.—A great poet who knew once said, "Heavy are the feet that climb another's stairs." There's a young widow pictured on this film who was forced to live with relatives, and very effectively it is shown how unpleasant rich relatives can make it for poor kin who are dependent upon them. The story ends in a romance. The little widow wins the love and hand of the family's millionaire cousin. The picture is full of very interesting honeymoon scenes, including Niagara Falls, etc., and pretty pictures of the Delaware River near Port Jervis. It is a thoroughly delightful film and will serve well as a feature. The acting is fine. The photographs are excellent. The story runs smoothly and is kept very clear. The players are pleasing.

"THE HARM THE GOSSIPS DO" (Lux), January 19.—A country village pictrue, of France or Italy. A peasant workman saw a flying machine. The farmer discharged him as "an idle vagabond," because he found him sky-gazing at it. The gossips spread the report that he was an idle, good for nothing and he had to leave the village. He became a famous military aviator and then the townsfolk were proud of him, including the little girl who didn't believe the gossip. It is a very interesting and truthful picture, pleasingly put on and with some good flying machine pictures. While not quite substantial enough to come in the real feature class, it will be an acceptable addition to any bill.

"MAD DOG" (Lux), January 19.—He was an immense black dog, as big as a timber wolf, and he broke away in the midst of his bath, to rush down the street with soap suds on his face. It is needless to say that he caused some disturbance. It is short and exciting. It has no human quality to attract spectators very strongly.

"NEXT" (Majestic), January 19.—A very lively barber shop story in which Mabel Trunnelle plays the part of a pretty manicure lady. She applied to the barber for table room in the shop. This was very quickly granted. A young man, son of a wealthy family, came in for a hasty shave. The barber's attention wasn't on his business. The young man got soap in his eye and also in his mouth. The real fun begins after the young man has noticed the manicure lady. The barber gets so jealous that he sells the shop to the young man and then he wants it back. Then there is a wedding. Papa objects to this. In the last act papa looks in through the window. There's a bomb sizzling on the barber's chair, left there by the jealous barber. Papa gives the alarm. The young man runs after the fleeing barber. The bomb is thrown out by the lady and papa falls limply into the chair to be soothed by the new daughter-in-law. It's a farce that will make a good program filler.

"LIFE AND BATTLES OF DANIEL BOONE" (Republic), January 13 and 14.—This is not so truly a dramatic picture as it is a pictorial biography of the famous Indian fighter and woodsman. There is, however, in the pictures of several of the episodes a good deal that is of high dramatic value and this makes the film a good offering for spectators seeking amusement. It has the added advantage of being instructive and gives what stands very well for the true story of the early settlements in the Cumberland Mountain region. There are two reels. The second reel pictures the beginnings of actual settlements in this region. The story, here, seems more of one piece and is more romantic. The first dealt chiefly with Boone himself; the second gives a good deal of space to Boone's children. There is a very good picture in it of the attack on the log fort at Booneville by Indians. An exhibitor will make no mistake by using this picture as a special attraction and advertising it as such for public school children and others who want instruction of an entertaining kind.

"HER HEART'S DEPTH" (Powers), January 13.—A story of a Western girl. The backgrounds are in the Palisade country near the Hudson; but there are no grand scenes and the photographs are not very good. From the scenes, one feels that the action is dramatic; but it is slow at getting started and is not clear. There were two prospectors who were pals, and they find gold. Somehow, one forces the girl to marry him; but she loves the other. Later, these two meet and the unlucky one shoots the woman's husband. This is enough to make her love her husband and hate his assailant. The picture is filled with great improbabilities.

"HIS MUSICAL SOUL" (Solax), January 3.—A good farce, but one modeled without much originality on the well-known French type. Percy bought a trombone that its sweet music might make him more successful in love. He played so loud that chairs and inanimate articles began to dance throughout the house. The tenants of the other apartments came in and chased him. It is very amusing even to one who has seen several very much like it.

"THE WONDERFUL KEESVILLE FALLS" (Solax).—A pretty scenic of falls that are not very remarkable.

"BY THE HAND OF A CHILD" (Solax), January 14.—A Western story opening with a chase of an outlaw by a posse. These scenes are near the entrance of "The Garden of the Gods" and the photographs are very good. The outlaw escapes by taking to the hills. He finds a child, the sheriff's daughter, who has fallen from a cliff, and risks his freedom to carry her home. The outlaw, then softened by the child's gift, a doll, permits the posse to arrest him. The sheriff sets him free and gives him a horse. The picture of the outlaw with the doll is not very affecting, it is hardly believable. The film's best asset is its good photographs. It is a fair program filler.

"AN ABUNDANT CANDLE" (Itala), January 13.—A run and knockdown farce. A drunken husband was sent out for a candle and brought home a lamp post. It contains the usual stunts.

"THE MANIA OF CARICATURE" (Itala), January 13.—A farce in which an artist gets into many a scrimmage by drawing caricatures of every queer person he meets. The artist is very clever. His experiences are of the knock-over and break order. The quality of this kind of farce is well known.

"THE WIDOW" (Comet), January 12.—A farce in which two colonels, both hard drinkers, love the same widow. She promises to marry the one who first quits using liquor. The two colonels, great friends, have a hard time. Colonel Carson advises the widow to marry his friend Colonel Pepper, because he is unable to give up his "old enemy." But the widow really loves Colonel Carson. His friend sees this and, making it seem that he had committed suicide, leaves town. The other colonel then marries the widow. The interior scenes are very well pictured. The action and its incidents are colorless, but the film will be a fair program filler.

"THE SIXFOLD DUEL OF FOOLSHEAD" (Itala), January 6.—Foolshead collected challenges; he seemed to get them from every one he came in contact with. He got so nervous he hardly dared come into the room. Foolshead gets an idea from seeing an electric battery and coil and fits himself up to be a very effective swordsman. The results on the day of the duel are marvelous to behold and very laughable. As someone remarked, the actors did a good deal of very hard work.

"SEVERED FROM THE WORLD" (Itala), December 2.—A sea story opening in a storm during which a fisherman's daughter, washed overboard, is rescued from the rocks by two lighthouse keepers. The girl is compelled, by the wide reach of sea and the weather, to remain in the lighthouse several days. One of the keepers is a drunkard and the other, a fine character, saves the girl from his unwelcome attentions. The ugly man attempts to kill him; there is a struggle and both fall to the foot of the winding stairs. The bad man only is killed. Later, the girl is betrothed to the other. It is acted with unusual power and effectiveness. The leaders are very poor and some of them are ungrammatical. The effects are often very fine indeed. Some of the views of the "storm" show too plainly a calm sea. It would have been better to have omitted these broad views. One scene by lantern light, as the men are carrying the girl up the stairs, could not have been improved; it was perfect.

"AN UP-TO-DATE MEDICAL DOCTOR" (Itala), December 16.—Two burglars enter a doctor's office, dress up in his clothes as physician and lackey, and receive the doctor's patients, also their valuables; everything that is in their pockets. They also fool two policemen. This starts the scrimmage. It isn't so funny as the best Itala farces.

"FOG AND LIGHT IN THE MOUNTAINS" (Itala), December 16.—The clouds are seen surging about snowy mountain peaks. One picture with a herd of sheep in the foreground and at sunset or sunrise which breaks in from the left over a glacier is especially commendable. There are some remarkable cloud and sunburst pictures also.

"WATER FALLS IN SWEDEN" (Great Northern), January 13.—An extremely beautiful scenic picture of cascades. In several instances, large masses of water are pictured tumbling through gorges. The photographs are very good.

"FALSELY ACCUSED" (Bison), December 26.—A very prettily toned picture; the photographs give the story a delightfully romantic atmosphere and they are as clear almost as good eye-sight. The story is dramatic and although, in general outline, it is not new, yet as conducted and acted it has an acceptable freshness. The ranch thief places just enough of the stolen money in the pocket of the hero to get him suspected of the crime. This man had secretly married the ranch owner's daughter. They are cast out together and suffer the stress of poverty. Then the thief is discovered and the ranch owner with his wife come to claim the little grandson. The final scene is a big New Year's dinner.

"HEARTS OF ITALY" (Powers), December 23.—A well-told and very interesting love story of Italians. The setting of the early scenes is in Italy, of the later scenes in America. It has some dramatically sensational features. Toni and Luigi, a brutal, black-hand character, both love Lolita; but Toni, in a fist-fight, so thoroughly overcomes Luigi that he is eliminated for the time. Toni and Lolita come to America where a baby is born. Later, Luigi comes. He is sent by his employer to Toni's home with a bag of coal and is astonished to find Lolita. Twice he attempts to force her to elope with him. These scenes are tense and dramatic. Toni doesn't come in contact again with Luigi till the last scene when Luigi is finally done for, given over to the police. There are some good things in the picture, including very interesting street scenes in New York City.

INVESTIGATION IN PHILADELPHIA.

City Authorities and Underwriters Review Cause of Recent Exchange Blaze—Rules to be Drawn.

As a result of the demolition of the building occupied by the General Film Company's exchange at 928 Market Street, the motion picture men of Philadelphia are facing a strong effort on the part of property owners and insurance interests to force the exchange business out of the accessible districts into the suburbs of that city. A meeting of the authorities was held on Jan. 17 at the offices of the City Fire Marshall, at which were present Fire Inspector Baxter, Fire Marshal Lattimer, Assistant Director of Public Safety Murphy, and Gilbert Greenburg, chief of the Fire Department of Huntington, Pa. Among the film men were Harry Schwalbe, manager of the General Film Co.'s branch where the fire occurred; Lewis M. Kinsill, of the United Film Co.; J. A. Caffrey, of the Novelty Amusement Company, and a number of others interested in the discussion.

Experiments were conducted by William McDevitt, of the Fire Underwriters' Association, which tended to prove that films could be safely handled and that the element of danger from fire was not serious except when the careless and irresponsible operator was about.

It is expected that the subject will be taken up by Director Porter, of the Department of Public Safety, and rules for the handling and storage of film formulated.

INDIANA MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.

Second Meeting in Indianapolis, to be Held Tuesday, Feb. 6.

All Indiana exhibitors will be interested to learn that the next meeting of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will be held at Indianapolis, on Tuesday, Feb. 6. A very interesting program has been prepared and a big attendance is looked for. The exhibitors of Indiana have become keenly alive to the benefits of organization and new members are coming in rapidly. On account of the territory to be covered the State organizers, Messrs. C. H. Daugherty and D. L. Bryan, will not be able to see all the exhibitors before the meeting, but every Indiana exhibitor is invited to be present at the meeting. Not only will matters vital to the interests of every motion picture theater owner be discussed, but there will be addresses made by film exchange men and others relative to "boosting" the business.

Let every Indiana exhibitor make plans to be present at the meeting on Tuesday, Feb. 6, at Indianapolis.

H. S. DICKSON, President.

BANQUET GIVEN BY SAXE ENTERPRISES, MILWAUKEE.

The Saxe Amusement Enterprise, of Milwaukee, gave a grand banquet to their managers and employees in Alberty's, on 2nd Street, opposite the Crystal Theater, on Friday night, January 5. One hundred and fifty covers were laid.

Alberty's was closed to the public at midnight and turned over for the rest of the night to the Saxe Brothers. A combined orchestra, formed from the orchestras of the various Saxe theaters, opened the event with music, after which the guests sat down to a liberal repast. The banquet was followed by speeches, appropriate for the occasion, by Thomas Saxe, Attorney Allwell, and various managers and employees. Mrs. Bob Fitzsimmons, who was on the bill at the Crystal that week, and whose picture appears in the second row of the accompanying illustration, to the left, sang two solos. There was no dancing, but the guests were enjoyably entertained by singers and entertainers of the Saxe houses. The banquet ended at four o'clock A. M.

Those in the front row of the illustration here given, reading from left to right, are: Howard Tuttle, scenic artist; Manager Newton, of the Princess Theater; Manager George Fisher, of the Alhambra Theater; Walter Wright, accountant of the Saxe Enterprise; Lawrence Allwell, attorney of the Saxe Enterprises, and toastmaster for the occasion; Thomas Saxe, the host; Manager Ed Raymond, of the Crystal Theater; Frank Cook, manager of the Orpheum, and booking manager and publicity man of the Saxe picture theaters; Manager David Feinberg, of the Modjeska and the Globe theaters, and Manager McDonald, of the Theatorium.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE GRUB STAKE MORTGAGE" (American).

When Jack Merton gave the finishing touch to his college education, he promptly went out West and soon found work as a mining engineer. Lonesome evenings taught Jack the value of good companionship—and, therefore, he saw much of Mary Walker.

Mary's father worked on the big dam. He was not shrewd—otherwise, Jim Blake, prospecting without success, could never have swindled the old man as he did. Blake had worked his claim for three or four months when one day, thoroughly disgruntled, it occurred to him to "salt" the mine and raise some badly needed finances on the strength of it. So he carefully filled the crannies in the rock with gold-dust, and having laid the trap, sought out Mary's father to tell him of the great discovery.

"I must have money to work that mine," explained Blake, "and if you will raise the necessary funds, and stake me, we'll go partners on the profits." The old man proved an easy victim, saw the loaded vein, believed it real, and decided to stake the impostor.

Scene from "Grub Stake Mortgage" (American).

He went to Raleigh, superintendent of the construction work, and told his tale. Raleigh, a man of ruthless, iron will, received a mortgage on the little hut in which the old man and his daughter lived. One week later Mary's father was suddenly killed in a mine blast, one of those accidents so common where the helpless souls are ever at the mercy of Dame Fortune.

It left Mary an orphan. The mortgage fell due, and, in desperation, Mary turned to the only friend she had—Jack Merton. He visited the worthless hole, his experienced eye soon saw the fraud, and torn between love and duty, decided to make a clean breast of the matter to Mary. Meantime, Mary had visited the superintendent, Raleigh. He, quite without heart, demanded the money or the home at once, but finally promised to send Jack to investigate, promising that if Jack's report was favorable, he would turn back the mortgage. This was the crisis that faced Jack on his return. Manfully, he went again to the hole, hoping to find some evidence of gold. At the hole he found not gold but Blake, and in the tempestuous talk that followed, Blake taunted Jack that a word from Jack to Raleigh would give the home back to Mary. Jack indignantly refused. Mary was summarily ejected. Jack then produced his own meager savings, satisfied Raleigh, and asked Mary to marry him and occupy the house that had been her girlhood home.

This is in every sense the exception in Western pictures. The protography is superb, the scenes staged amid a scenic grandeur that will remain long in the mind and the story is well acted, charged with action and carried to a logical conclusion.

"BATTLE OF POTTSBURG BRIDGE" (Kalem).

Kalem's long list of war pictures has received an interesting addition in a picture about to be released under the title of the "Battle of Pottsburg Bridge," performed by the Jacksonville company and said to be the portrayal of an historical incident occurring during the Civil War. According to the story of the picture the bridge at Pottsburg Creek is held by the Federal troops who are attacked by a detachment from General Stuart's brigade. The bridge is near the home of a young Confederate soldier and, because of his knowledge of the country, he is detailed to burn it and thus destroy the Federal communications. Discovered in his attempt the Confederate soldier is severely wounded, and when he drifts to the landing, he is rescued by his mother, sister and sweetheart, who have been watching his efforts.

Scene from "Southern Girl's Bravery" (Kalem).

The sister then takes up the task and manages to escape the sentries and sets the bridge on fire. At the time she succeeds the opposing forces are fighting on the bridge. The Confederates blow up one end of the structure while the girl sets fire to the other end, trapping the Federals between and compelling them to jump into the water and swim out when they are captured.

The girl drops into the water after setting the fire and makes a long swim to safety. When General Stuart visits the home of the wounded soldier to congratulate him upon the success of his venture, he learns of the bravery of the sister. This part is played by Marion Cooper, a new Kalem beauty, who proves herself to be some swimmer. There is much good action in this picture.

AN IMPROVED STAR MOVEMENT.

Mr. E. W. Lavezzi, who advertises in this week's issue of the Moving Picture World, claims that he has revolutionized the intermittent action. Mr. Lavezzi's claims for his improvement are as follows:

It does away with the cam while the picture is exposed. It runs in an oil bath. It is not necessary for the cam to be true, while Lavezzi's improvement is on the machine. It cannot possibly get out of order. Mr. Lavezzi says he will take an old worn cam, with his improved star, arbor and sprocket, and produce a better picture than any make of new machine on the market. This improved cam he places on any make of star and cam machine on the market. There is positively no movement of the intermittent sprocket while the film is exposed, Mr. Lavezzi states.

"A DIVIDED HOUSE" (Champion).

Brought up by a fond mother, and accustomed to having his every whim and wish gratified, Arthur Gleason deeply resents the stern rebukes administered by his father and causes an outbreak in the domestic ties. The upshot is that he leaves home. His mother separates from the father and each goes out into the world to enter a new life. Engaged as housekeeper in a wealthy home by an old couple, the mother is made miserable by the disgusting advances of the old man. His wife comes upon them while he is forcing his attentions on his housekeeper and attacks the poor woman, who in self-defense overpowers her assailant and leaves her apparently dead.

Scene from "A Divided House" (Champion).

Upon the arrival of the police we again see the son, who by this time has joined the force. Seeing the extreme difficulty in which his poor mother has fallen, he immediately seeks to engage a prominent lawyer to exonerate her.

After the separation of the family, the father puts his heart and soul into his profession—the law, which he pursues under an assumed name. Great was the astonishment therefore of young Gleason when he met his father in the lawyer whom he came to engage. No time is wasted in ceremonies and both hurry to the court. Here the meeting between husband and wife is most affecting. Needless to say, the brilliant efforts of the lawyer for the defense bring about the wife's release, and in the loving embrace of father, wife and son is concluded the drama of a divided family.

"A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE" (Majestic).

Good pictures continue to be the rule with the Majestic company. Clean, high-class subjects, ably portrayed by a very competent company of players. Among a number of reels scheduled for early release is one of considerable merit entitled "A Mother's Sacrifice" that is appealing. The story has a touch of human interest. Betty, the daughter of a widowed mother, is sent to a convent school, leaving her mother alone. During the child's absence the partner of the widow's deceased husband offers to marry the mother and is finally accepted, but when the daughter returns from school she has grown to lovely womanhood and the man is at once smitten with her charm.

Realizing that the man is desperately in love with her daughter, the poor mother releases him from his promise and returns to her widow's weeds, bidding farewell to the happiness she had hoped for.

Miss Mabel Trunnelle takes the part of the daughter Betty, presenting a delightful character. Mr. Prior is the stalwart lover appearing to excellent advantage. Good settings and excellent photography complete a picture that will meet general approval.

THEATER FILM AND SUPPLY CO. SCORES ANOTHER SCOOP.

At a very large expense, Moe Striemer, general manager of the Theater Film and Supply Co., has landed the McVey-Langford Fight films, 2000 feet. Those who have seen the pictures exhibited pronounced them to be the best photographic fight pictures so far produced. They are selling same in state rights.

"MIGNON" ADVERTISING TIPS.

In regard to the Solax production of "Mignon," which is to be released Friday, February 2nd, those exhibitors who use large or small orchestras will be supplied with orchestrations, on request, of a "Potpourri" or medley of airs from the opera, because its scores are for both piano and violin and because it can be played in about sixteen or eighteen minutes, which about covers the full length of the reel. The medley will give the proper atmosphere, and if musicians exercise the musical spirit of the opera, an intelligent interpretation of the picture may be given.

In advertising their production of "Mignon," the Solax people are endeavoring to pave the way of the exhibitor as much as a manufacturer is able to. They are not only putting out a drawing attraction of exceptional merit but are going to furnish the exhibitor with attractors with which to draw. There is in preparation a three-sheet poster, a special lobby display and special music besides the regular material furnished through the trade papers and a weekly house organ. Cuts and "still pictures" will also be furnished on application. With all this material at hand the exhibitor can make a vigorous campaign.

He may appeal to the music-loving element as well as the artistic and pleasure-loving bent of his constituents.

HALLBERG DIRECT CURRENT ECONOMIZERS IN DEMAND.

The past few weeks have shown a greatly increased sale of Hallberg Economizers for all circuits, and Direct Current Economizers are being turned out to the capacity of the factory. In all sections of the country where motion picture machines are being used on 110-volt, 220-volt and 500-volt power circuits, the tremendous saving of 50, 70 and 90% respectively on electric bills effected by the Hallberg D. C. Economizer, makes this device an adjunct of first importance in such cases.

"THE FLAG OF DISTRESS" (Imp Release, Jan. 20, 1912).

The Saturday Imp comedies have acquired widespread popularity for their humorous subjects and acting. J. W. Cumpson, whose fame as a moving picture comedian is so widespread, appears in them and has already made millions of friends for himself.

In "The Flag of Distress" Cumpson gets a chance, of which he takes the fullest advantage. "The flag" is an emblem by which he conveys to his friends the desired information that his wife has him under such strict surveillance that he cannot accompany them to a masked ball. However, he contrives by a clever stratagem to elude the lady's vigilance, and he and his friends make their way to the masquerade, where they have a specially good time.

Scene from "Flag of Distress" (Imp).

Meanwhile, the poor lady, in distress over the mysterious disappearance of her husband, consults the great detective, Mr. Shelocko, who, picking up the "Flag of Distress" on the sidewalk, is enabled to trace hubby to his destination, a dance hall, and not to, as the poor lady supposed, a place where his life was in danger.

A feature of the picture is the droll acting of H. S. Mack as the detective and the fun-making antics of J. W. Cumpson in the role of the erring hubby.

"The Flag of Distress" will no doubt be popular with the Saturday Imp audiences.

HAIL, THE REINCARNATION FILM!

An indifferent society girl of the present is introduced at a function to a man who impresses her as being "masterful." There is that about him which makes her weaken before his gaze.

Later, she sits alone, musing. She is carried back to a prehistoric age, in her dream, and she finds there a savage, the counterpart of the stranger at the ball, who fascinates and dominates her just as the stranger did.

Scene from "As It Was in the Beginning" (Thanhouser).

Do you think her dream had any foundation in fact—in the fact of the long ago?

Do you believe in reincarnation?

Anyway, you will like the film on this subject, as outlined above. Thanhouser releases it Tuesday, January 30, under the title, "As it Was in the Beginning."

The Thanhouser offices advise that an additional lot of three and eight sheets for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "East Lynne" is in the hands of the exchanges, but where an exchange is unable to supply this matter exhibitors are invited to write Thanhouser Company direct.

"THE STOLEN LETTER" (Reliance).

A picture of not great dramatic strength, but one which is more true to life than most people realize; that of a young man leaving his sweetheart in the country and going to the city to earn his fortune only to fall in love with a damsel at a boarding house. This theme has been touched upon a number of times before; but when one considers the large percentage of cases exactly like this in every city, it cannot be said that the idea has been overworked, and it is to be hoped that such pictures will do some good.

The moving picture show is a favorite resort for boarding house damsels that keep company with young rural fortune hunters who are already engaged to some trusting maiden back home. If any of them see this picture it is quite certain that it will strike home—up to a certain point, but after that point is reached it will have the opposite effect, because at the end of this picture the young man gets a letter from his country ladylove to the effect that she, too, has been busy in his absence and is already married to another fellow. On the whole, however, it contains plenty of food for thought on the part of the susceptible young country gentlemen in the city. The picture is well acted and photographed and will go well to make up an entertaining programme, although it cannot be properly classed as a feature picture. Release date, February 3.

FINISHING TOUCH TO AMERICAN FACTORY.

The new factory, for the past four months under construction by the American Film Mfg. Company, was given the finishing touch last week. The factory force was moved to the new quarters, at Evanston and Devon Avenues, where they will have generally increased facilities and more room. The new structure was erected at a cost of $50,000. The realty occupied adjoins the best residence section on the North Shore and was purchased from Edward Hines, the lumber magnate, whose holdings in that neighborhood are extensive. The American has neglected nothing that will make for more and better work. The universal popularity of its films demands those refining touches that can only be given where the working facilities leave nothing to be desired. The dark rooms and studio have been given especial care and possess some features quite new to motion-picture work.

SIXTH KALEM COMPANY AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. F. J. Marion, who is making his annual tour of the country visiting the many and widely separated producing organizations of the Kalem Company, writes to the New York office from New Orleans, where he has been superintending the installation of a new studio:

"Mr. George Le Soir, the director of our new company now locating here, starts off under better conditions than have ever favored one of our organizations. The studio is on the Bayou St. John, on the identical spot where the pirate La Fitte is said to have made his headquarters, and it is without doubt one of the most picturesque places in New Orleans. On either side are old stucco houses, dating back to the 18th century, surrounded by beautiful grounds and filled with furniture and curios which would make a Lexington Avenue antique dealer turn green with covetousness. And the neighbors have given us the greatest welcome I have ever seen. Their houses, yachts, autos, furniture, servants and live stock are all ours for the asking.

"Our friend J. A. Pearce opens the finest house in the South next Monday—'The Trianon,' on Canal Street, opposite the Maison Blanche and next to the famous Boston Club. Mr. Le Soir is to make the opening address and the Mayor of New Orleans and other dignitaries are to be present. The front of the house is solid white marble, with artistic electric effects on hammered brass and art glass. The interior is in ivory white, with high relief Louis Quatorz embellishments and at the frieze is a series of magnificent mural paintings portraying the spirit of the South. The screen is over the entrance and the projecting machine in a fireproof booth outside of the building. The interior effect is similar to that of Tally's in Los Angeles. Pearce is one of the biggest men in New Orleans at present and his rise to pre-eminence in the business world is the talk of the town. Everyone predicts an immense success for The Trianon."

CORCORAN WINS FIRST PRIZE.

To the film manufacturers of this country it will be interesting to learn that the Corcoran tank system won the first prize in a recent industrial exhibition in Jersey City, over several hundred entries.

The accompanying cut of the Corcoran float, a portable windmill, which has been exhibited in Paris, with prize winning honors, and also at American expositions, won the solid silver cup in the Jersey City Industrial Parade, October 6th, 1911.

Corcoran Float in Industrial Parade.

Though introduced within the past two years, the Corcoran System of developing tanks has been installed in every large plant in the country, and has won the endorsement of the most critical producers.

In the company's offices, 11 John Street, New York City, Mr. A. J. Corcoran informed us the results were most pleasing, and predicted the time when the "Corcoran Tanks" will figure as strongly in the production of good films as the actor and cameraman do to-day.

AN "AJAX" INDUSTRIAL.

The Ajax Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, of 120 West 31st Street, New York, will exhibit a picture of the Union Sulphur Company's mines at Sulphur, La., at the National Chemists' Club, illustrating the process of extracting sulphur from the bowels of the earth by the Freschi method. This picture will be one of the features of the meeting of the National Chemists' Society at the club rooms in 41st Street, New York City, on Friday evening, Jan. 19th. The picture is about 1500 feet long and of great interest.

A REX SCOOP.

That one's misfortune is very often another's fortune is a proven axiom. We see another illustration of the maxim in the fact that Rex is to release the famous Marion Leonard Gem negatives as a second release. For months past, exchanges and exhibitors have requested and demanded a second Rex release, but Rex withheld complying with the unanimous demand until such a time as it could produce a second reel a week of the same estimable merit as is represented in the single release. Its refusal to cash mediocrity into dollars, and its loyalty to the interests of the industry in the face of such general encouragement for two-a-week, are altogether commendable, and if such a thing is possible, have earned for Rex still more respect and admiration by the trade.

Marion Leonard, Star of the Gem-Rex Pictures.

Much has been claimed for the now famous Gem films, and those who have viewed the productions have employed the most flattering terms in their praise. Now, as further evidence that the unanimous commendation of the product was justified, Rex has accepted them as its second release. Analyzing the decision of Rex not to make a second release until its quality could be as paramount and pre-eminent as the first, its purchase of the Marion Leonard negatives is at once a tribute to their merit and another evidence of Rex enterprise and alert aggressiveness.

If the Marion Leonard productions are good enough to be Rex releases, they are good enough to have deserved the advance popularity and prestige they have already attained. Marion Leonard as a Rex star looks promising for the exhibitors' welfare, as well as for the general advancement of the industry.

POWERS STILL AT IT.

P. A. Powers is certainly going on full speed just now. In the last issue he announced a switch in releases in order to give his customers the benefit of the Durbar and Equitable Fire on a split reel, and now he repeats the trick. Being a good Irishman may have been responsible for his getting the much sought privilege of putting a cameraman aboard the boat of the Committee that welcomed Cardinal Farley to America. He made the trip back with the Cardinal aboard and succeeded in photographing a number of the most prominent ecclesiastics, merchant princes and judiciary lights who composed the Reception Committee. Then the Powers man got a choice location at St. Patrick's Cathedral, and photographed the new Cardinal as he entered, with all the magnificent pomp and ceremonial regalia attendant.

This is to be the regular release for Saturday, January 27th, in place of "The Nurse," which was scheduled for that day. Mr. Powers is to be congratulated on his aggressiveness in securing these pictures, and the fact that he is able to schedule their release so quickly is a compliment to his staff.

READY FOR BUSINESS.

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Company is now established in its offices on the seventh floor of the Lincoln Building, No. 1 Union Square, New York City, and ready for the transaction of business. On another page of this issue will be found the company's announcement of its first production, "A Victim of the Mormons," which will be ready for distribution Feb. 5, 1912. This subject is a three-reel dramatic picture of unusual interest. It is as beautiful as a photograph, and the acting is superb throughout. Each reel is crowded with exciting scenes and incidents, and the third reel is a whirlwind of sensation with a thrilling climax. This picture was briefly reviewed in The World of Jan. 13th. Other and equally interesting subjects will follow at stated intervals.

It is the plan of this company to sell territorial rights for exhibition and buying exchanges, and state rights men should get in touch with it at once.

SPLENDID NESTOR FEATURES.

The Nestor players are making some reputation for themselves out in California. It is not every company that produces just one good picture every week; but the Nestors come along this week with three subjects that are better than the average, and that is going some. To begin with, "A Matinee Mixup," released Jan. 22, an amusing society comedy in which a jeadous husband manages to make matters interesting for a number of people, is the leader of the group. Many are the laughs that this picture will elicit. Following this is "Cupid and the Ranchman," which is scheduled to appear on Jan. 24. Here is a Western comedy that possess real charm. Of course, you know it is a love story with cowboys, but it is done just a bit differently from the usual cowboy love story, and that is where it makes a hit. "Mutt and Jeff Fall in Love" is the release for Jan. 27, and is described as the most satisfying picture of that series. There are many amusing situations and laugh provoking incidents in this picture.

Scene from "A Matinee Mix-Up" (Nestor).

La Mesa, Cal., where is located the Western studio of the American Film Mfg. Company, seems to be rapidly gaining popularity as a home for motion-picture manufacturers, as several companies have recently announced their intention of locating either in La Mesa or the beautiful country adjoining. The American company has always contended that the average citizen was a California enthusiast whether he had been there or not. Hence the American has largely exploited the beautiful backgrounds seen in its pictures.

"A NEW LEASE ON LIFE."

Republic Film Company Gains State Co-Operation in "White Plague" Pictures.

An all-satisfying film, "A New Lease on Life" which embodies athletic, educational, scientific, sensational and romantic features, is soon to be issued by the Republic Film Company. This film ought to satisfy everybody. The scientific rôle is played by Dr. DeGrosse, the eminent bacteriologist, at Saranac Lake, one of the largest institutions for the cure of consumption in the world.

The hero of the story goes through an entire course for the cure of incipient tuberculosis, and the cure is shown in so simple a manner that it can be followed in your own home in the city or country. The wonderful object lesson that this will teach can be appreciated when mention is made of the fact that every second of the day a life is sacrificed to the Great White Plague which could be saved if people will only follow the practical demonstrations shown in this film.

An ice-skating race won by Champion Baker in which all records were broken for a quarter of a mile, as well as a game of hockey on ice, will meet the approval of lovers of sports. To those seeking sensationalism, a race between two sleighs, a fall of 60 feet down the side of a white mountain, and a fight between wolves and a pack of ferocious Alaskan dogs or huskies, will undoubtedly prove satisfactory.

The beautiful romance carried on throughout the entire story will hold the attention of everyone, from beginning to end.

RETURN OF CARDINAL FARLEY AN IMP RECORD.

His Eminence Cardinal Farley, archbishop of New York, landed at the Battery, New York City, at half-past twelve on Wednesday, January 17th, 1912. He entered St. Patrick's cathedral two hours later. At six o'clock a five hundred foot motion picture of the Cardinal's triumphal progress from the Battery to St. Patrick's Cathedral was projected on the screen at the Imp factory at 101st Street. By Thursday morning the Independent exchanges were supplied with the picture.

This Imp record was established by characteristic Imp daring. The police granted the Imp force free right of way and good positions, so that good photographs of "The Rosedale," the landing at the battery pier, the parade, the band, prominent politicians and Catholic dignitaries were obtained on Battery Park. Then the car sped up to 15th street, where close-up figures of the Cardinal and the committee were obtained. Then a move was made to 23rd Street, where the waiting crowd (hundreds of thousands) was photographed. Next the car shot up to the cathedral front. Here the daring operator hoisted his camera on a flagpole, many feet high, from which he took panoramic views of the cathedral and the crowd. The chief value of this rapidly-made picture lies in the very fine close-up views of the Cardinal which were obtained. It is a film that will possess historical value. The reception given to the Cardinal in New York City symbolized a nation's tribute.

"THE WATERMAN'S BRIDE" (Gaumont).

An impressive pastoral picture of exquisite charm and tender pathos is this new offering of the Gaumont Company. It deals with a phase of life that appeals to playgoers because they are always fond of simple narratives of quiet peasant life. The delicacy of the scenic selections and photography constitute a strong factor in the gripping power of so slender a story as is told in this picture. Briefly: It depicts the courtship of a young bargeman who woos and weds a peasant girl. The wedding celebration takes place on the rear deck of the barge in which the young couple start on their river honeymoon followed by the blessings of their rustic friends. At evening they pause for the day and are enjoying a stroll in a peaceful shadow when the bride is suddenly stricken and expires from heart failure. The closing scenes show the bargeman towing his craft back to the home of his bride as she lies in humble state upon the deck, much in the same manner as the body of Elaine was returned to her home, in Tennyson's "Idyls of the King." It will be acceptable on any programme.

ECONOMICAL PROCESS FOR MAKING FILM POSITIVES.

We call the attention of our readers to an advertisement on page 330, which may mark an epoch in the production of moving picture positives, which, at present are produced only by one method, i.e., the printing on silver bromide films. The manufacture and sale of these films is controlled by two or three houses, and the price is kept high, as it probably always will be.

Silver bromide is the most expensive printing material. The rapidity of the silver bromide films makes it indispensible where objects in motion have to be photographed, but after the negative is once secured there is no necessity to apply the expensive rapid emulsion, provided another slower and cheaper emulsion will produce positives of equal, if not superior, quality. With this idea in mind, a chemist thoroughly familiar with photographic processes, by hard and persistent studying, experimenting and application of ingenuity, gradually overcame one difficulty after another until the process is now in practical shape for application and, while it may still be improved and perfected, will equal the best, and at half the present cost, of moving picture positives.

ANOTHER LARGE SCOOP MADE BY THE THEATER FILM & SUPPLY CO.

At a very large expense, Mr. Striemer, general manager of the said firm, has landed the McVey-Langford Fight films, 2,000 feet. Those who have seen the pictures exhibited pronounced them to be the best photographic fight pictures so far produced. They are selling same with State rights.

REMEMBER THE MAINE.

We learn that Wm. Stansbury, of Marion, Ohio, has purchased the state rights for Ohio in "The Mystery of the Maine" film, and will tour the state playing the different houses on percentage. Mr. Stansbury is a steady reader of the Moving Picture World, and says it should be read by every exhibitor in the United States. He is a charter member of the Exhibitors' League of Ohio has owned a number of moving picture houses, and is a staunch believer in the league. Mr. Stansbury thinks every exhibitor in the moving picture business should join the league, as by so doing the exhibitors will have some say, for in the moving pictures the exhibitor is the "man behind the gun." Mr. Stansbury is an old-time showman, having started his career with his father's old-fashioned one-ring circus back in the seventies, when but a boy of fourteen, and he has been in the business ever since.

NEWMAN LOBBY GOODS ARE POPULAR.

Mr. S. Newman, of the Newman Mfg. Co., 717-719 Syc more St., Cincinnati, O., was a visitor at the World office New York recently. Mr. Newman has built up a splend business of manufacturing lobby frames and easels for t especial needs of moving picture exhibitors. Any exhibit who possesses an outfit of Mr. Newman's fine brass lob sets must indeed be a happy man. They give any house tone of elegance, richness and stability that impresses pas ersby at a glance. The Newman Co., make anything brass that an exhibitor needs, such as cashier's double wi dow, megaphones and wickets, ticket office, box and orchest railings, illuminated changeable letter program frames, do plates, improved ornamental stair edging and corners, eme gency exit locks, etc. Mr. Newman expressed himself pleased with the way exhibitors have availed themselves his goods, and is planning new novelties for which the should be a ready demand.

NEW ENGLAND.

Fire in the kitchen of a restaurant did damage to the extent of $70,000 to the Music Hall Theater block, Milford, Mass., in the early morning of January 3. The entire stage section of the Music Hall Theater was ruined. The asbestos curtain served to keep the flames in hand for a time, but later the entire rear of the building was burned. No one was injured, so far as can be learned. It is thought that $25,000 will be needed to remodel the theater alone, besides chairs, furnishings, etc., which were greatly damaged by the flow of water. The Music Hall was one of the historic structures of Milford, having been built in 1881. The theater is at present under lease of the Gordon Brothers' Amusement Company, who were offering their usual bills of vaudeville and pictures. The moving picture machines, and other apparatus used for the pictures, were badly damaged by water.

If only one-half of the things promised to the Boston, Mass., film exchanges materialize, there is going to be some "doings" in Beantown. There are rumors that crop up regularly that legislation will be passed with a view to classing film exchanges with gunpowder. That means that the exchanges will not be allowed to keep over 50 reels of film in their Boston offices. The remainder of the stock must be kept outside the city limits. This will be of great inconvenience to every one, and the exchanges should bestir themselves. The fire marshal of Boston is doing his best to egg on this move. In view of the fact that the storing of these films is not dangerous, if care is exercised, it would be a great pity to have such a law passed.

Williams' Ideal Theater, Roxbury, Mass., had its first opening to the public on Thursday, January 4. The Ideal Theater is situated on Dudley Street, and opened to big business. Independent pictures and vaudeville are offered. The Ideal holds about 525, and is managed by Bob Alexander, known as a great bicycle champion in his earlier days.

It is now rumored that B. F. Keith's Lynn Theater, which has been playing Keith vaudeville, will be soon offering attractions other than vaudeville. It is said that the Olympia has made great inroads upon the Lynn Theater and has forced that house to reduce its prices to five and ten cents for matinees. They formerly were ten and twenty cents.

The Bridgeport Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., which has been playing regular "legitimate" attractions, has decided it can do better by offering vaudeville and pictures.

The Pastime Theater, Brunswick, Me., was closed, due to an epidemic of smallpox that has broken out. The schools and other public places were also closed.

Proprietor Harry F. Campbell did a handsome business when he offered the "Raising the Maine" reels at his Marlboro, Mass., house. Mr. Campbell opined that those reels beat several of his best days' business for him. The Princess is doing very well, as it is efficiently handled by Mr. Campbell.

The Shawmut Theater, Blue Hill Avenue, Roxbury, Mass., which opened on Jan. 1, 1911, is playing to big business.

It is rumored that a big theater will be built in New Bedford, Mass. It is expected to be fireproof throughout, and high class in every way. Independent pictures and vaudeville will be the policy of the new house.

The National Amusement Company, of Newburyport, Mass., had quite a fracas with the White Rat Actors' Union. Manager Bartlett, of the National Amusement Company, had contracted to employ a number of vaudeville acts, booked by a Boston agent. At the last minute, the management telephoned to the agent and asked to have the entire program of vaudeville canceled. As contracts had been signed, the agent ordered the actors to report for duty. When the actors arrived in Newburyport, they were refused admittance to the theater. These White Rat actors immediately hired lawyers, and forced the National Amusement Company to pay the actors their contract prices. During these proceedings it was found out that the National Amusement Company had not been registered at the City Hall. As this was in direct opposition to the requirements of the law, the house was fined $100 for failure to register. The National Amusement Company had only operated a week in Newburyport, which accounts for their failure to comply with the law as regards registering. Many New England Theaters, using vaudeville in connection with their picture programs, have come to find out that the White Rats are energetic in having the terms of their contracts fully lived up to. On this account and due to the fact that the White Rats are extremely powerful, due to their strong organization, many photoplay houses refuse to book acts on the contracts specially written for members of this union.

Sunnyside Park, Natick, Mass., was almost completely wrecked recently when high winds and bad weather did much damage. This is a summer resort.

As has been told in these columns, Mayor Fitzgerald, of Boston, made a visit to three Boston photoplay houses, and stated that more police protection was needed in order to avoid overcrowding. The matter seems to have subsided for the present. The sole outcome of the whole affair appears to be the fact that every theater must have a special officer on duty at all times of the day and night. Every theater in Boston had a special officer in its employ, but, during dinner and supper hours, the houses would be temporarily without a special officer. Local houses are now busy having their assistant managers sworn in as special officers. In this way there can always be a "special" in the houses. The idea seems to be a good one, as any public resort is liable to find need of policing at any time.

Mr. William Chandler Smith, a prominent Bostonian, whose favorable attitude and remarks regarding Motography have been noted at various times in these columns, has just stated before a meeting of the Men and Religion Forward Movement in Providence, R. I., that moving pictures should be in every church and school. Mr. Smith particularly admired the various Y. M. C. A. clubs to avail themselves of the photoplay as a means of drawing the young men to the association. Mr. Smith has done yeoman work for motion pictures, and has been instrumental in helping things forward.

A trip to Worcester, Mass., finds vaudeville to be on the increase in the local moving picture houses. The Family, Park, Pleasant and Majestic theaters are all using considerable vaudeville. As they all report increased business, it would be rather difficult to cry down their policy. The idea each house conveyed was that by adding more and better vaudeville they were in a position to successfully cope with the regular vaudeville and "legitimate" theaters of their city.

Mr. H. S. Streeter, of Greenfield, Mass., has filed his certificate of incorporation of the Bijou Theater Company. Mr. Streeter will soon have his Bijou open, which will be a first-class house in every way. Greenfield is rather shy on photoplay houses, and the Biou should prosper. Mr. Streeter is president and general manager for the company.

Another incorporation is that of the Gem Amusement Company, of Boston, Mass. Charles B. Reed, of Boston, is president of the company, which is a $50,000 corporation. Mr. Louis A. Fisher is treasurer. A string of photoplay theaters will be acquired, some to be built and others will be bought from their present owners.

That Springfield, Mass., is to be the home of the first operations of the William Fox Amusement Company in New England is certain, as the Nelson Theater has been secured by Mr. Fox. It has been rumored for some time, as was noted in these columns, that the William Fox organization had decided that New England offered fine openings for a string of theaters devoted to vaudeville and pictures. Marcus Loew discovered quite some time ago that New England was "ripe," and has been doing good business in Fall River, Boston and other towns. It is stated that the Fox people do not obtain possession of the Nelson Theater until November, 1912, but the lease is already signed and recorded.

The Star Theater, Dover, N. H., has again been forced to close. Poor business is the only reason given. The Star never was able to make a good showing in Dover, while Jack Dolan's Lyric plays to big business, using Independent service. The Orpheum of Dover is doing very well, presenting Licensed pictures. In the small towns, even more perhaps than in the large cities, it is absolutely imperative that a quality show be presented, as news spreads very quickly as to the comparative merits or demerits of a program.

The Colonial Theater, Pittsfield, Mass., is being renovated by the men who have taken over the house. The Pittsfield Theater Company has as its officers: Dan England, president; L. J. Minahan, vice-president; W. H. Eaton, treasurer. Mr. A. Daniels has been engaged as manager of the Colonial.

Manager Buckley of the Orienta Theater, Roxbury, Mass., has added vaudeville to his programs, after getting along without any for some time. The Orienta has been doing a nice business.

A new photoplay theater was opened in Vergennes, Vt. The house is on Main Street, in the Gaines Block. The house is called the World Motion Picture Theater, and reports that results are satisfactory to date.

The following story is going around with reference to the Goldstein Bros. Amusement Company, Springfield, Mass., who operate a string of theaters devoted to vaudeville and pictures. The Goldstein Bros. use vaudeville in their Springfield house, and had this notification posted up: "If you have ever played Sprinfield before, don't hesitate to notify the manager, or you are liable for your salary. We keep records of all acts that play in the city of Springfield, by seeing them personally. If you say nothing, nothing will be said to you, until you are through. If we can prove that you played this city, you are liable for your salary." A White Rat actress played this theater, and was "closed" after a few performances by the management because she had played other Springfield houses. The White Rat Actors' Union had legal talent on the job a forced the Goldstein Brothers to pay the full co tract price. After this the old placard was moved, and this notice placed instead: "Any that has ever played Springfield is requested notify the manager, as they stand to be closed any time during the engagement."

Mr. John W. Barry, who has been running Palace Theater, Fall River, Mass., has given up interests in that house, and will give his entire tention to his Savoy Theater, New Bedford, Ma The Savoy has always been called a good mon maker, and Mr. Barry is considered a very capa manager.

The Cambridge Theater, Cambridge, Mass., had hard sledding ever since its first opening. is now playing stock company attractions after brief spell of vaudeville and pictures.

North Attleboro, Mass., has broken in the lin light, as a $50,000 corporation has been start and will build a large photoplay theater. Starkey Theater Company is composed of B. Starkey, Harry Young and T. R. Coady. No Attleboro should prove a good town for a first-cl house, as at present it cannot boast of any moving picture theaters.

The S. C. Taylor Amusement Company will s start work on a new photoplay theater, in Hartfo Conn. The house will be one of the best in Ha ford, and will be ready about April 1, 1912.

On January 15 the Park Theater, Bridgepo Conn., changed its policy, and is now present moving pictures and vaudeville. As the Park been called the finest house in Bridgeport, has been offering the best road shows, the cha was somewhat surprising. Small houses caused change and if the right kind of vaudeville and tures are given the Park will no longer suffer fr box-office-itis!

The Board of Health ordered all places of amu ment closed at Brunswick, Maine, owing to the o break of smallpox.

Kinemacolor pictures gave big results at the Co Square Theater, Springfield, Mass. On this count they were held over for an entire week. a rule the Court Square Theater plays "legitima attractions.

On and after Saturday, January 20, the Gl Theater, Boston, Mass., will offer vaudeville pictures. The show will be continuous, running fr 10 in the morning until 10.45 p. m. This act will no doubt seriously cripple the business at Unique and Premier theaters. The chances that the Premier will be forced to lower its adm sion price from ten to five cents, as this has b the case in the past whenever the Globe presen pictures. Manager Joe Janette of the Globe is w versed in the picture and vaudeville proposition, he has been through several seasons of this ki Licensed pictures are favored for the Globe.

Burton Holmes, the famous lecturer, is in Bos with his Travelogues, and is enjoying a big bu ness with his excellent motion pictures of fore countries. The hall at Tremont Temple is crow daily by people desiring to be "personally c ducted" to South America, Spain, etc.

Thornton's Theater, Arctic, R. I., is doing an cellent business with vaudeville and pictures. January 10, the regular show of pictures was om ted, owing to a local attraction at the theater.

The Gem Theater, also of Arctic, R. I., is do very well, using Independent pictures and vau ville.

As was noted in these columns, the Music H Theater, Milford, Mass., was entirely destroyed fire. It is understood that Mr. Nathan Gord treasurer of the Gordon Brothers Amusement C pany, together with J. J. McGuinness, the resid manager, were in touch with Mrs. L. K. Bart owner of the Lyceum Block. Mr. Gordon desired secure use of the theater in the Lyceum Block. definite statements have been made regarding conference, more than that Mr. Gordon would like secure the Lyceum Block, until he will be able build a house of his own in Milford, which is pr ised to be fireproof and up to date.

Plans have been completed by the Dreaml Theater, Bellows Falls, Vt., to enlarge the seat capacity, by the addition of a balcony to hold ab 300. The Dreamland is a big winner.

P. D. McKinnon, of Bangor, Maine, stated t his new theater is nearly ready for its openi The house seats about 500, and will offer vau ville and pictures.

The "Miller Brothers 101 Ranch" pictures m good for Proprietor Campbell of the Princess Th ter, Marlboro, Mass. All "specials" available Independent houses are offered to Marlboro peo who are certainly responding in great shape to Campbell's energetic management.

It is stated that several parties are negotiat for the Boston exchange of the National F Distributing Company, although nothing definite been given out.

Mr. Frank Merrill, president of the Mer Amusement Company, Boston, which books vau ville into a number of New England photop houses, has moved his agency into larger and m commodious quarters at 230 Tremont Street, Bost

THANHOUSERITES REACH FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Fla., Jan. 17.—The Thanhouser Southern Stock Company is here for the winter. They arrived a few day ago on the "Apache" of the Clyde Line, and already have a completed picture to their credit. This picture was commenced near the home studio at New Rochelle, N. Y., during a fall of snow; was continued on board the "Apache," midst the howling of an Atlantic gale and was brought to a close in Florida, beneath a balmy Southern sun. The company is under the direction of George O. Nicholls and consists of Miss Marguerite Snow, Miss Florence Le Badie, Miss Viola Alberta, James Cruze, William Russell, Joseph Graybill, Lucy Tanguay, Violet Gooding, Helena Whitely, Edward Norton, Frank O'Neill, and Frederick Doering; Calvin Dix, stage manager; A. H. Moses, Jr., cameraman.

Chas. O. Bauman, president of the New York Motion Picture Company, leaves for Europe next week to establish a selling agency for the new Bison 101 films.

The Young Amusement Company, of Gary, Ind., has been incorporated with capital stock of $10,000 to operate a theater. The incorporators are V. U. and G. B. Young and C. J. Wolff.

Max and Vivian Sallee, of Litchfield, have leased the opera house in Raymond, Ill., and will operate a moving picture show.

Eddie Burns has accepted a position as pianist and singer at the Bijou Theater, Waukegan, Ill.

It is announced that Mell Lipscomb has secured the management of the Wonderland Theater, Jerseyville, Ill., and will give four reels of pictures each night for five cents.

The Princess, Peoria, Ill., carries a neat design in its advertising, distinguishing itself as "The Home of the Pipe Organ."

The East End Amusement Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, has been incorporated with capital stock of $1,000. The incorporators are E. T. Horsey, Cecile F. Horsey, W. H. Horsey, Pauline L. Horsey, and C. V. Brown.

C. Chandler, of Quincy, Ill., has filed a bill for an accounting in the Adams County Circuit Court against H. C. Wellman, his partner in an airdome business purchased from C. E. Marquis.

Following the advent of H. B. Jamison, of Philadelphia, Pa., into Edwardsville, Ill., as the manager of the Wildey Theater, a sixteen-piece band and a number of banner boys paraded the streets announcing the Wildey would be a vaudeville and picture house. Young lady ushers are in charge of the first several rows of seats.

L. E. Cutler calls his new moving picture show at Abingdon, Ill., "The Rosebud."

The Third Baptist Church, St. Louis, Mo., substituted moving pictures for the customary Christmas program of cantatas and recitations and is said to be contemplating the purchase of a machine, for use in connection with Sunday-school work.

For two years O. T. Crawford, of St. Louis, has loaned films free, a change a week, to the Infirmary, at St. Louis, and now the future of the entertainments is said to be in doubt because there is no appropriation for the musicians and manager of the entertainment. As many as 300 persons have attended the entertainments, press reports say, some of the inmates so feeble as to be almost obliged to crawl.

Miss May O. Hill has sold the Star Theater, a moving picture house at Watseka, Ill., to J. N. Petrea, of Farmer City, Ill., who took immediate possession. The new proprietor is experienced in the moving picture business. Miss Hill has gone to Chicago.

Thompson Brothers & Case have sold the Gem Theater, at Creston, Iowa, to Hulbert, Benson & Hulbert. The place will be managed by Mrs. Daisy Hall Benson.

Miss Myra C. Billings, of Chicago, and Percival Chubb, of St. Louis, were the critics of the moving picture shows before the convention of the Illinois State Teachers' Association at Springfield, Ill., December 28. They denounced the nickel theater and the comic sheet of the Sunday paper in burning terms, but were vague as to the evils of the photoplay.

Miss Bernadette Waugh, who has been featured as a singer of illustrated songs in Springfield, Ill., at the Savoy Theater, is now singing at the Capitol Theater, on Washington Street.

The Guardian Amusement Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, has been incorporated with capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are Max Marcus, Jake Sogolovitz, A. E. Bernsteen, B. J. Sawyer and H. L. Bernsteen.

The Central Grocery and Market Company, of Chicago, has changed its name to Northern Amusement Company and increased its capital stock from $6,000 to $10,000.

The advertising committee of the "Made in Rockford" show, to be held in that city, will advertise the event in moving picture theaters within a radius of one hundred miles by the use of slides.

E. R. Stannard, of Waverly, has purchased the Majestic Theater at Cedar Falls, Iowa, and assumed charge.

The City Council at Galena, Ill., has raised the ban on Sunday shows, providing there are no outside music-bands or orchestras playing on the streets.

Henry O. Noben, proprietor of the Rockford Moving Picture Parlor, at Rockford, Ill., which recently was damaged by fire, will rebuild, it is announced. It will be necessary to almost entirely rebuild the structure.

A Henry, Ill., paper tells of the unusual presents made to J. J. Barnes, owner of the Star Theater, at Christmas by his wife. Mrs. Barnes set an alarm clock every hour and every time it went off she gave her husband a check for $100. She did this until he had checks for $2,000. He took it merely as a joke and supposed the checks were bogus, but later found they were good. Several years the couple conducted a "carry-all" and the $2,000 represented the pin money, savings which had been profitably invested since that time.

Rev. J. W. Porter, in his farewell sermon at the Christian Church, at Carlinville, mildly disapproved of the Sunday night programs at local theaters. One of the photoplay houses was showing a Biblical film.

Clarence Tharp has purchased the interest of Noah Stivers in the Gem Theater, at Clinton, Ill.

The Occident Amusement Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are E. E. Almire, J. E. Sykes, Christian Schuele, Fred C. Elmer, Charles W. Davis, A. E. Nyre, and Charles Rauch.

John Lukey has sold his interest in the Airdome, on North Main Street, Canton, Ill., to his partner, William H. Luker.

Miss Jess Rottgers, popular musician of Jacksonville, Ill., is now the soloist at the Majestic Theater in that city.

A correspondent, who does not sign his name, writes the Lincoln, Ill., News-Herald as follows:

"Mr. Editor—Would like to ask through the columns of your interesting paper, why some of our local picture shows do not adopt the idea of presenting our people with the "Pathe Weekly News" items, which they can get for the asking, in the place of some of the silly reels they now exhibit at times, and for the same price per reel as they are now paying? If they will use the 30-day old films, the film association (the one that uses the red rooster) is the one to see about them, but they will not ship them out without being insisted upon to do so, as they are very much in demand. The writer had occasion to visit a small town the other day of 2,000 population and saw these reels for the first time, and although they were thirty to thirty-five days old, they were great, showing all of the principal events of the world taking place during that week."

The Marquis Amusement Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are William H. Coonts, Edward M. Stonehill, Carl B. Ford, Francis R. Marvin and Laura M. Diehl.

The papers throughout the Mississippi Valley recently carried a sensational story on the explosion of a moving picture machine and a resulting panic among the inmates of the Illinois State Hospital for the insane, at Elgin, Ill. Inquiry reveals no official report was made of this to the State officials. The fire was of no consequence and as no report was submitted none was asked. "The machine at the Elgin Asylum is equipped with an automatic cutoff," stated Mr. A. L. Bowen, executive secretary of the State Board of Charities, to a representative of The Moving Picture World. "The patients are not allowed in the gallery where the operating room is located. The main floor of the amusement hall is amply provided with exits. There is an attendant to about every ten patients, and furthermore only the better class of patients who are practically able to take care of themselves attend these entertainments." It is evident that the story is purely a newspaper fake, and while little damage may be done it is to be regretted that there is even this slight influence working against the entertainment and cure of the afflicted throughout the country.

The Majestic Film Service Company, of Chicago, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000, to deal in moving picture apparatus, operate theaters, etc. The incorporators are C. J. Mite, George F. O'Malley, and T. A. Hewitt.

The Randolph-Novambere Company, of Chicago, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,000, to do general theatrical business. The incorporators are Abram E. Adelman, Bernard Novambere, and H. S. Sheldon.

Every child bringing a new pupil to a St. Louis Sunday-school was given a ticket to a moving picture show, according to the St. Louis Times. "More than 1,000 persons crowded into the rooms of that church the first Sunday."

PHILADELPHIA.

City Councils have approved the ordinance calling for five special inspectors to exercise special and continuous supervision over all moving picture houses in Philadelphia. These inspectors can be as obnoxious as they please. They have all the powers now vested in both the police and the fire departments plus that of the insurance patrol. Each inspector will be paid $1,000 a year. It is believed that at least one of the five appointees will be a woman.

There is a campaign in the interest of courtesy on now. Coal dealers are buying newspaper space to exploit the fact that they have the most courteous coal heavers in the trade; the department stores are being placarded with courtesy cards and in every line of retail business courtesy is being made an important talking point. Bad manners, "bluff" and impudence are now common only in the box offices of the so-called first class theaters.

On New Year's Day a film was vindicated, if films need such indorsement. It was decided to use a rather long picture as a chaser. It happened that the play was really worth while and instead of driving the people out, as expected, it glued them to their seats and an extra act had to be called into the game to turn them out.

Mr. R. W. Hagner, formerly manager of the Jumbo Theater, at Front Street and Girard Avenue, has opened the Montgomery Theater, at Girard Avenue and Palmer Street. It is a modern fireproof structure, and has attracted much comment.

Mr. Arthur Heyman, of the Calehuff Supply Company, has started on an extensive trip throughout the State. He says business was better for him last year than ever before.

Becker Brothers have added another moving picture house to their circuit, to be located at Bouvier Street and Snyder Avenue. They are covering the southern section of the city with houses and expect to open another house in the near future.

A spark from an arc lamp caused a film to catch fire at the Opera House in Westchester, Pa., and caused much excitement in the audience. Mr. Wayne Marshman, operator of the machine, was slightly burned.

The Shamrock Theater, Twentieth and Federal Streets, is again closed. This house has been in the hands of several people during the past year.

Mr. George H. Kline, formerly manager for George W. Bennathum, in Coatesville, Pa., has taken charge of Mr. Bennathum's new house, the Lincoln, at Forty-ninth and Woodland Avenue.

The National Theater, Tenth and Callowhill Streets, will hereafter be run as a vaudeville house. It is not definitely known whether moving pictures will be run by the new management, but it is highly probable.

Mr. Walter Martin, formerly manager of the Lyric Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., has built at a cost of $15,000, a new theater, to be known as The Grand, at Vineland, N. J. It has a seating capacity of 400 and will have a six-piece orchestra, with two acts of vaudeville and moving pictures.

Mr. Edward Hampson, of the Amber Theater, has announced that he will hereafter show vaudeville in connection with the moving pictures.

The management of Hart's Theater, Kensington, has instituted a series of amateur nights for Wednesdays and Fridays. Ten dollars in prizes will be distributed each evening. The Colonial Theater has run amateur nights for over a year with great success.

Mr. Henry W. Bache, manager of the Woodland Theater, had a rather painful accident last week when he bumped against a steampipe at the theater, which incapacitated him for several days. Since Mr. Bache has become manager of the theater, vaudeville has been withdrawn and the house devoted exclusively to moving pictures.

Mr. Charles A. Calehuff, of the Calehuff Supply Company, was laid up for several days with a touch of pneumonia.

The Twentieth Century Theater, Manyunk, will shortly open again. At a fire there recently, the inside of the theater was practically destroyed. Necessary repairs and some alterations have been made and all new machinery has been put in.

The Lyric Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., is now under the management of Mr. Edward Kraupa. Several acts of vaudeville will be run by the new management in addition to films.

The Carlisle Opera House, Carlisle, Pa., has been bought by Mr. W. F. Pascoe, of Carlisle, Pa., and Mr. S. W. Goodwill, of Shamokin. The new owners declare that considerable improvements will be made along with several changes in the policy of the house.

Mr. Wesley Greiht, manager of the Little Opera House, Conshohocken, Pa., has been presented with a bouncing boy. Both the mother and child are doing as well as can be expected.

Mr. J. B. Lovett has leased the New Opera House, at Cape May, N. J. Vaudeville and moving pictures will be run and the price of admission has been raised from five to ten cents. Former Manager Richardson is on the lookout for another house.

Mr. John S. Green, of the Calehuff Supply Company, has gone into the exhibiting line, and has just recently bought the Florentine Theater, at No. 1923 Susquehanna Avenue.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA.

After an absence of more than eighteen months, Palmer Hahn has again resumed the duties of manager at the National Theater.

The Gem Theater, formerly under the ownership of Fred Eddinger, has changed hands, and is under the wing of Arthur Blacker, a well-known theatrical man. Joseph Capella is the manager.

The new theater which is being erected on Fourth Street, for some reasons best known to the stockholders, have ceased building operations, and all work is at a standstill. The trouble seems to be that the contractor, through a misunderstanding as to the thickness of the concrete foundation, which recently collapsed, has not been paid for his work, and he has sued the principals.

There is doubt as to whether the Lehigh-Orpheum will be completed.

The Victor Theater, which was opened last winter, was entirely completed this week, and, as a remembrance of its completion, the management extended its hospitality to their employees, and a pleasant evening was spent, after which a supper was served. The interior of the theater is of Oriental design, decorated in gold and red, and the exterior is of ornamental work which was done by experts. The entrance, with its many lights, forms a dazzling brilliancy and illuminates the street to such a degree that attention is attracted from some distance. Independent pictures draw the crowds, and Herman Burak, the manager, states that business is increasing.

A recent feature topic has been the merger of six houses in Louisville, New Albany and Jeffersonville, under the name of the Falls Cities Amusement Company. M. Switow is president and general manager of the new company, as well as the head of the is sensational. The emigrants are seen fighting the hordes of redskins in wonderfully staged scenes. The hero rides to the settlement for help and engages in a thrilling duel with pursuing Indians. The settlers swoop down on the unprotected Indian village and burn it up. The savages seeing the flames hurry back and fall into an ambush. They are attacked from the rear by the emigrants and from the front by the settlers. In a wild scene of carnage the surprised Indians are mowed down by the hail of bullets, horses and riders falling in tangled masses.

THE PLOT

has been constructed to bring out dramatic rendition. From the standpoint of spectacularism alone, with the tremendous cost, the army of Indians and the great number of horses and cattle, as well as the stirring battle scenes, this subject would be recorded in the annals of motographic history as one of the greatest films the world has ever seen. When the splendid dramatic rendition is also taken into consideration "WAR ON THE PLAINS" will be considered by many the most magnificent production ever conceived. It simply overwhelms with its grandeur.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY

80 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

January 10th, 1912

NOTICE

The validity of the Edison Re-issued Patent No. 12,192, covering motion picture film, has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and for the information of those concerned, there appears with this notice a copy of the order and decree entered in that Court on December 23rd, 1911.

The manufacture, sale, rental or use of motion picture film containing the invention covered by said patent, without license from this Company, will be diligently prosecuted by suits for an injunction, accounting and damages, including all profits, gains and advantages that the infringer has received or that have accrued to him by reason of such infringement, in manufacturing, selling, renting or exhibiting such film.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY

80 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY,
Plaintiff,
vs.
CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE,
Defendant.
In Equity
No. 28,605.

This cause having been brought to final hearing upon pleadings and proofs, and upon Defendant's motions to strike out testimony taken on behalf of the Plaintiff and for leave to take further testimony on behalf of the Defendant, and having been argued by Melville Church, Esq., of counsel for the plaintiff, and by Harry N. Low, Esq., William Houston Kenyon, Esq., and William J. Wallace, Esq. of counsel for defendant, and having been duly considered by the Court, it is, by the Court, this 23rd day of December, 1911, Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows :

I. That reissue letters patent No. 12192, granted to Thomas A. Edison, on the 12th day of January, 1904, for Kinetoscopic Film, referred to in the plaintiff's bill of complaint, are good and valid in law as to the 2nd claim thereof.

II. That Thomas A. Edison was the original, first, and true inventor of the improvements described in said reissue letters patent and particularly claimed in the said 2nd claim thereof.

III. That the plaintiff, Motion Picture Patents Company, has good title to said reissue letters patent.

IV. That the defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, has infringed upon said reissued letters patent No. 12192, as to the said second claim thereof.

V. That a perpetual injunction issue against the said defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, prohibiting it, its officers, directors, attorneys, agents, servants and workmen, from directly or indirectly making, using or selling Kinetoscopic or Motion Picture Films containing or embodying the invention set forth in said reissue letters patent No. 12192, and particularly covered by claim 2 thereof.

VI. That the plaintiff do recover from the defendant the profits, gains and advantages which the defendant has received or made or that have accrued to it by reason of its said infringement of said reissue letters patent No. 12192 since the date of said reissue letters patent, and also the damages which the plaintiff has sustained by reason of said infringement, to be assessed as provided by law.

VII. That this cause be and is hereby referred to the Auditor of this Court to take and state an account of said gains, profits and advantages and to assess such damages, and to report thereon with all convenient speed ; and that the defendant herein, Chicago Film Exchange, its officers, directors, attorneys, clerks, servants and workmen be and are hereby directed to attend before said Auditor, from time to time, as required, and to produce before him such books, papers, vouchers and documents and to submit to such oral examination as the said Auditor may require.

VIII. That the plaintiff do recover of the defendant its costs in this suit to be taxed by the Clerk of this Court.

IX. That defendant's motion to strike out parts of rebuttal testimony of the plaintiff as not being proper evidence in rebuttal, and defendant's motion to be allowed to take further testimony strictly in surrebuttal, heretofore reserved for the final hearing, are hereby denied.

Decree entered December 23, 1911.

newly organized National Kentucky and Indiana Film Exchange, which is an offspring of the Falls Cities Amusement Company. David Levinson is associated with him. The latter has been incorporated with a capital stock of $150,000, this to be increased to $200,000 later, in all probability. The theaters which have consolidated under Mr. Switow are the Novelty and Crystal, of Louisville; the Dream, of Jeffersonville, Ind., across the Ohio River, and the Victoria, Grand and Crystal of New Albany.

While Mr. Switow is the president of the National K. & I. Film Exchange, C. K. Metcalfe has been Selected as manager and will have charge of the bulk of the active work in connection. Mr. Metcalfe formerly was connected with the Cincinnati Buckeye of Cincinnati. He was with that concern almost from its infancy, and did much toward making it a success. The new film company will occupy the second and third floors of the building in which the Novelty Theater is located on Fourth Street, South of Green. The offices will be located on the second floor, while the third will be devoted to a shipping department, inspection bureau and other branches. Films will be secured from the National Film Distributing Company, of New York. National films will be run with a daily change.

John Scherer, manager of the Louisville branch of the Globe Film Service Company, has been transferred to Davenport, Iowa, H. D. Ticknor taking his place here. Mr. Ticknor has just returned from the main office of the Globe in Chicago.

The Clifton, a moving picture house located at Frankfort Avenue and Bellaire, will open late in January. Robert Lucas, a local lawyer, is the promoter, being associated with his father and Elmer Pay in the enterprise. The Clifton is a two-story brick building. Its cost is about $7,500. The lobby is finished in marble. The interior arrangements are excellent, and the Clifton should be one of the most popular of the up-town theaters. The admission price will be ten cents for adults and five cents for children. Two Powers machines have been ordered.

The Majestic Theater, Fourth Street near Chestnut, which recently opened its doors after being remodeled, is attracting big crowds daily. The house is the largest in Louisville in point of floor space, and probably in the South. The colored pictures shown have proved to be big attractions. L. J. Dittmar is the proprietor.

Louisville men have applied for and received a permit for the erection of a $50,000 motion picture house at 2315 West Market Street. The structure is to be of brick, fireproof throughout. It will have a seating capacity of 1,400. The frontage will be 80 feet, the depth 150. The theater will be unique in having 42 exits. The stage will be 32 by 28 feet. Those interested are Fred J. Dolle, Henry Reiss, Joseph Stuerle, H. Gocke and Dan Kelliher. The building will be so constructed that during the summer it may be converted into an airdome.

James B. Haggin, the New York millionaire, has purchased a three-story building at 159 East Main Street, Louisville, and may convert it into a moving picture show. The price paid was $35,000.

Plans for the moving picture show to be erected in the old Phoenix Hotel Building, Lexington, Ky., have been received by John H. Stamper, Jr., promoter of the venture. Kennedy & Company, Cincinnati architects, prepared the blue prints. Lexington contractors will be given a chance to bid at once. Work will begin in the near future.

G. L. Motteler has received a permit for the erection of a picture theater at Twenty-third and Wilson Streets. The cost will be $600.

Louisville photo-theaters have done some big and effective advertising recently. Competition is daily growing keener and the proprietors have discovered that it pays to advertise. One of the largest individual ads was that of the Broadway Amusement Company. Four columns of space were bought in a daily newspaper. The Broadway represents six theaters, the Broadway, the Globe, the West Broadway, Crown, Ideal and Baxter.

Other houses which patronized the daily papers in bringing their shows to the attention of the public were the Norman, Olympic, the Preston, the Star, and the Standard Film Exchange. The Star makes the fact that Union labor was employed the base for their appeal. The Preston Theater is located at Preston and Camp Streets, and will be completed soon. The Preston Amusement Company is building it.

A presentation of Dante's Inferno has just concluded at the Shubert Masonic Theater. Over 5,000 feet of film were shown, and the portrayal of the poet's conception of Hell drew good crowds. The Masonic is the highest priced theater in the Gateway City, although rates were reduced for this attraction. Moving picture men regard this as a concession to the new style drama.

An overheated stove caused a fire of small proportions recently in the Crown Theater, 1215 South 7th Street. The blaze came after the place had closed for the night.

The company which already operates the East Broadway, the West Broadway and the Globe Theaters has begun the use of vaudeville in each. The West Broadway patrons have witnessed this for some time, but patrons of the other houses are having their first taste of it.

The films received from the new Kentucky and Indiana Film Exchange have been shown in the Gateway City during the past week and have been received with favor. The Novelty, the new theater, is among those which receive the new service. Manager Hampson stated that business has been up to standard, despite the forbidding weather, and that the new show-house has absolutely no cause for complaint.

Ralph Earle, of Pathe Freres, was preparing to make a picture of the women convicts at Nashville and an official said to one of the negro women: "Hold on, now he's going to make a moving picture of you."

"Well, suh," said the negress, "I sho' wish he'd make a picture of me a-movin towards home."

U. S. Senator Bradley of Kentucky will brush the dust from his guitar, and Senator "Bob" Taylor of Tennessee will take his old fiddle down from the shelf long enough to pose for a moving picture photographer in the near future, according to reports from Washington, D. C. The photo man braced Senator Bradley, who readily assented. Senator Taylor also jumped at the plan, and the two noted statesmen will give their farewell musical turn before the films of the photographer.

The Waycross Auditorium Company, of Waycross, Ga., will erect a combined theater, auditorium, and office building in that town in the near future. Plans are now being drawn and bids will be asked for as soon as these are completed.

Walter Mitchell, of Mobile, Ala., will remodel a building on Dauphin Street, for a moving picture theater. The cost will approximate $3,000.

INDIANAPOLIS.

A ninety-nine year lease on the property at 135-139 North Illinois Street has been taken by the Central Amusement Co., composed of Benjamin V. Barton and Charles Olsen, who conduct the Lyric, and other moving picture theaters. The lease calls for the payment of $1,000 a month and the erection of at least a three-story building, the erection of which is to start by March 1. The lease stipulates that the ground floor shall be a vaudeville and moving picture theater of 1,200 seating capacity. Instead of a three-story building, a fourteen-story structure, the upper floors of which would be a hotel, may be erected. The Lyric is now located on the property.

Miss Nell Green, principal of Public School No. 43, recently addressed the Principals' Club of the Indianapolis public schools on "The Educational Possibilities of Moving Pictures." She predicted that within two years public schools will be using moving pictures for educational purposes. The state board of education of Wisconsin, she said, already has under way the matter of establishing a circulating library for films. Miss Green said she believed subjects pertaining to science, nature study, agriculture and geography, could be taught by means of moving pictures. She also predicted that within a short time motion picture theaters will be conducted under censorship. The H. Lieber Co. showed six films that might be adapted to educational studies in schools.

The advisory commission to Mayor Shank, after several months' study, and consultation with charitable and other institutions, has drawn an ordinance for introduction in the city council. It provides that no child under fourteen years of age shall be admitted to any moving picture, burlesque or vaudeville theater, whether admission is charged or not, unless accompanied into such show by the parent or legal guardian or some person over twenty-one years of age who shall have written authority for such child to attend. This written consent is to name the person accompanying the child and must be signed by the parent or legal guardian. The ordinance also provides that no child under fourteen years of age shall be permitted to participate in any performance covered by the ordinance. Another provision is that no such theater shall be located closer than 250 feet to any public school building. A fine of not to exceed $100, to which may be added imprisonment not to exceed thirty days, is provided.

The Moving Picture Managers' Association has agreed to give Mrs. Amelia Mendel, a widow with six children, the sum of $10 a week. Mrs. Mendel's husband was burned to death a few days ago.

Moving picture theater owners of Portland have agreed to give no further Sunday performances.

A crusade to require moving picture theaters to close on Sunday is being conducted at Muncie, and a test case is now under way, Forrest Simmonds having been arrested.

Weber & Orbach have sold the Majestic Theater at Elwood, to Hugh F. Mosiam.

Wears Better

All AMERICAN FILM is given a secret CHEMICAL TREATMENT which adds greatly to its normal life.

FILM STOCK that DOESN'T BECOME BRITTLE AND CRACK is a great asset to any exchange--hence AMERICAN FILM is popular for that as well as its remarkable photography, charming backgrounds and superb pantomime.

AMERICAN FILMS can be rented to more theatres, go through more machines, and still retain their famous photographic qualities better than any other make of picture.

ADD TO THIS the dainty, brilliant Western stories that have made the name "AMERICAN" synonymous with "class,"

PLUS the fine stretches of California country, great plains, orchards, awe-inspiring mountains, etc., made an essential part of all AMERICAN pictures.

AND YOU HAVE the superlative in motion-pictures---the "BEST" in every sense of that big word.

"THE MORMONS"

(Release Jan. 25th. Western Drama. Length, 1,000 feet.)
One of the really master pictures of the year. Red-blooded, charged with action, this film, dealing with the religious wars of the early Mormons, will add heavily to your box-office receipts.

"LOVE AND LEMONS"

(Release Jan. 29th. Length, 1,000 feet.)
A Western comedy illustrating the old wag that sweets and acids will not mix. An educational picture with a story.

"THE BEST POLICY"

(Release Feb. 1. Western Comedy. Length, 1,000 feet.)
A rollicking good farce showing the value of the "straight deal." It's double-cross upon double-cross when three train robbers attempt to outwit each other.

"THE REAL ESTATE FRAUD"

(Release Feb. 5. Western Drama. Length, 1,000 feet.)
A charming, dainty story of an Eastern chap with a bank roll and a hankering for an orange grove. You cannot help but like this picture. It's clean-cut, with a touch of comedy here and there—just enough to make you want a little more.

"THE GRUB-STAKE MORTGAGE"

(Release Feb. 8. Western Drama. Length, 1,000 feet.)
A cracking good story of a "salted" mine and a young mining engineer's devotion to truth. You will enjoy this film. One of the "not-easily-forgotten" kind.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, Reel No. 4—1912 (Jan. 22). —Juvisy, France. M. P. Delaporte demonstrates on the river Seine that aeroplane motors and propellers, affixed on boats, may prove valuable in navigation.

St. Peters, Mo. The 9.15 p. m. train from St. Louis to Kansas City jumps the track while running at high speed, demolishing the new concrete station and injuring twenty-four passengers.

Washington, D. C. The funeral of Rear-Admiral Robley D. Evans ("Fighting Bob"), who commanded the American fleet which encircled the globe, takes place with full military honors.

Hempstead (Long Island), N. Y. A motor train, running at a mile-a-minute clip, crashes through a bumper, shoots across the street, smashes a taxicab to splinters, kills two men and brings up on the front porch of a real estate office.

New York, N. Y. Fire destroys the Equitable Life Assurance Building, the first "sky-scraper" erected in this city, resulting in a loss of $18,000,000. One billion dollars' worth of securities and cash are in the vaults buried under thousands of tons of ice and debris. Nine persons, including Battalion Chief Wm. J. Walsh, are dead. Twenty-one others are injured. Zero weather, with a sixty-mile-an-hour gale blowing from the bay, renders the work of the firemen particularly hazardous. The high pressure streams have but small effect upon the flames and the intense cold freezes the water almost as soon as it reaches the building.

ON THE EDGE OF THE PRECIPICE (Jan. 31). —Some desperadoes in a little Western village learn that Lucy Wright, a widow, is the one who gave the information which led to the rounding up of the gang of which they were members and alone escaped. They decide to have their revenge on Lucy and attempt to steal her child. Finally finding that they are pursued by a posse, with the sheriff in the lead, they suspend the child from the edge of a precipice and drop her on a rock which juts from the side of the precipice like a witch's tooth. Here she is finally seen by the pursuing posse and rescued by being roped with a lariat.

UNCLE'S STRATEGY (Feb. 1).—Two gentlemen with grown children meet after a long separation and decide that their children should wed. The more they try to force it the less likely it seems of successful termination. Finally the girl's uncle comes on the scene and being a regular Mr. Fix-it proceeds to work things out to his own satisfaction and also to the satisfaction of every one else.

INDIAN BLOOD (Feb. 3).—A brave attacks a Chief's son and is banished from his tribe with his wife and little son. After they have pitched their tepee in another place the brave goes forth to hunt and in hunting meets his old enemy. They fight to the death and the brave is killed. The little six-year-old son follows his father's antagonist's trail and avenges his father's death.

MR. BUGHOUSE IS CURED (Jan. 30).—The curing of Mr. Bughouse is not accomplished in the film as we cure ham, because although Mr. Bughouse is sick he is not entirely on the pig. The chief difficulty with Mr. Bughouse is that he has a rat in his garret; in other words, his lid is loose, and his wife fearing that it may become entirely detached leads him in a medico, who puts a stethoscope on his brains and hears a weird sound of cogwheels with a gear stripped. Finally he procures a little auger—bores a hole in Mr. Bughouse's cranium and extracts a weird noise that has been keeping Mrs. Bughouse awake at night.

FARMING IN TUNIS (Jan. 30).—This film, though interesting to everybody in America, undoubtedly shows up the Tunisian farmer in rather a poor light because of his antiquated methods, when he might do so well with American-made machinery.

HOW PLANTS ARE BORN, LIVE AND DIE (Jan. 30).—This film shows the germination of the seed in the soil; how the roots sprout; how the stalk seeks sunshine through the surface of the ground; how the stalk grows and the leaves form and the bud appears and swells and finally blossoms. How the hyacinth proudly rears between its leaves the marvel of beauty which so delights the eye of every beholder. How finally in autumn feeling that its time of joy and beauty is over, raises its head for a final look at the sun and its petals turning sear and yellow, wither and finally seek their couch of death.

THE MASKED BALL (Feb. 2).—Amelia Ankarstroem, wooed by King Gustavus, hesitates between duty to her husband and her ambition. The King, anxious to know whether or not the woman will accept his attentions, goes to a renowned fortune teller to find this out. While the King is busy in amusing himself, his officers indignant at his conduct decide to punish him as he deserves. Renato, Amelia's husband, and loyal subject to his sovereign, wishing to frustrate their plans, goes to warn the King of his danger, when he discovers his wife's unfaithfulness. Crazy with grief, Renato joins the conspirators and is chosen as the one to deal the fatal blow at a masked ball given in the King's honor.

AN INTERRUPTED WEDDING (Jan. 29).—Nell and Frank become engaged with the approval of Nell's parents. One week later Nell meets Will Sharp, the new owner of a neighboring ranch, and Nell's father urges her to accept Sharp on account of his money. Frank naturally becomes jealous of the stranger because of his attentions to Nell. Sharp proposes to Nell and is refused. Knowing that Frank is her accepted sweetheart, Sharp attempts to get him out of the way by a cowardly trick, but is frustrated.

Nell's mother becomes ill and the necessities of life are denied to the family. Owing to their poverty Nell's father begs Frank to give up Nell that she may marry Sharp and rescue them from their unfortunate position.

Frank makes the sacrifice for Nell's sake. Six months later Frank is elected sheriff and a few days after his election receives a warrant and description of Sharp. Proceeding to Sharp's house he serves the warrant just in time to prevent his rival wedding Nell.

WALK —— YOU, WALK! (Jan. 31).—Sam has received a new automobile as a present from his father. To show off his present he invites Rose to accompany him for a ride, and being a little fresh he demands a kiss. It is refused. He then tells Rose she will either kiss him or walk home. Rose chooses to walk and arrives home completely fagged out. Telling her experience to her sister Nell, the latter young lady fixes up a plan to humble Sam by giving him a dose of his own medicine. To carry out this scheme, Nell writes Sam asking him to take her for a ride. Sam calls at the ranch house and takes the sisters for a spin down the road.

Wild flowers growing in a field by the roadside give the girls their opportunity. Sam is induced to get out of the machine and gather flowers. As soon as he is in the field the girls start off in the machine and leave Sam to walk ten miles home. Their joy not being complete, they stop at a neighbor's house and gather three or four of their girl friends. Riding through the village, they nearly upset two cowboys and the local constable. The sheriff is called out to arrest the speeders.

The automobile suddenly stops and the girls take to the hills as they see the sheriff and posse riding up. The men dismount and start on foot in pursuit of the young ladies. Circling the hill, the girls arrive back at the automobile, mount the horses and give the posse an opportunity to walk. Arriving at the town the girls leave the horses and run home. Sam coming up the road, finds the deserted machine, quickly gets it in running order and hustles back to town. Just as he is about to make a complaint in the sheriff's office, the constable who has taken the number of the machine while the girls were speeding by, arrests him and as he is walking down the street in the custody of the village police force, he hears the girls cry: "Walk, darn you, Walk!"

A PRINCESS OF THE HILLS (Feb. 2).—The old major domo receives word of the near arrival of Don Miguel Valdez, the young lord of the estate. Valencia, sister of the major domo, is much in love with Don Miguel, but her advances are repulsed.

Don Miguel sees the shepherdess and, unconsciously surrenders his heart to her keeping, and he confides to his friend his intention to woo the girl in the garb of a shepherd.

Valencia, suspicious of the young lord, follows him and witnesses his meeting with Camilla. In a mean spirit of revenge, Valencia tells Pedro that the don's attentions are not honorable. This story being repeated to the peasants of the Pueblo, they determine to take the law into their own hands.

When she sees the trouble she has started, Valencia, remorseful over what she has brought about, enlists her brother's aid, and when almost too late the young lord is rescued.

A DIPLOMAT INTERRUPTED (Jan. 22).—Col. Scott does not approve of either Lieut. Wilbur or Jim Virden, who spend most of their time in the company of his daughters, Genie and Jessie. The colonel faces ruination through his gambling losses with Count Orloff. The count proposes to return his winnings if the colonel will supply him with plans of certain fortifications. Forced to it, the colonel agrees. Jim overhears the bargain and steals the plans himself. The count then proposes that the colonel give him his daughter Genie in place of the plans. The girl is about to sacrifice herself to save her father's honor, when the lieutenant and Jim intercept the count in the act of stealing a telegram, which has just arrived, notifying the colonel of a fair sized fortune which awaits him. The count is disposed of in short order, and the plans returned. The colonel is so happy that willingly consents to a double marriage.

a river in an effort to elude his pursuers. Tom rides into the river and ropes Jack, thereby rescuing him from drowning.

While on his way to town with his prisoner, Tom meets Nellie. Nellie is thunderstruck at finding her brother an outlaw. She pleads with her sweetheart for her brother's release. Tom finally turns over to Jack the stolen money, and the key to the handcuffs and his sheriff's star over to Nellie. Then he mounts his horse and rides out of the story.

THE LITTLE STOWAWAY (Feb. 2).—Dot, a poor flower girl, being badly treated by an old couple, buys some old boy's clothes, disguises herself and slips into a large laundry basket on the wharf, and is taken aboard ship as cargo.

A young married couple leaves on the same boat for a voyage. After the boat is some distance out, the deck becomes filled with people. The young couple, standing by a railing, sadly look at a locket containing a photo of their kidnapped child and are watched at a distance by two gamblers, who decide to steal the locket. The gamblers go to the upper deck and plan the theft, standing near a lifeboat in which Dot is concealed, having jumped out of the basket. When the gamblers start to stroll away, Dot follows. After some difficulty, she locates the stateroom of the intended victims and conceals herself in berth, where she finds a revolver under a pillow. Just then the young lady enters, looks for a handkerchief, when the gamblers suddenly come in, seize her and attempt to get the locket. Dot jumps out, covers them with the revolver, and marches them to the Captain, who has them put in irons. Explanations follow and Dot is given a good home with the young couple.

BUNKIE (Feb. 2).—The story depicts in a thrilling manner the intertwining affections of a young American army Lieutenant, his famous charger named "Bunkie," a passionate Apache maiden who is a hostage at the fort, and the Lieutenant's avowed sweetheart, daughter of the commandant of the Arizona army post. Lieut. Brooks, of the cavalry, owns a famous army horse. He is engaged to Miss Ford, who lives with her father, the Major, at the post. One day Brooks is ordered out to round up a band of renegade Apaches. The Indians ambush the detachment: the handful of soldiers is slain. Brooks lies wounded at the mouth of a canyon. "Bunkie" succeeds in bringing Brooks to his senses. Brooks pulls himself to "Bunkie's" back and the horse starts for the post. Indians pursue and "Bunkie" barely reaches the fort gate in time.

Naida, daughter of an Apache chief, falls in love with Brooks while helping to nurse him. One night, delirious, Brooks thinks he hears the battle call, arms himself and escapes from his room to the corral to find his beloved "Bunkie." Naida follows him. Brooks embraces "Bunkie" with touching affection. Naida, savage-like, is beside herself with jealousy. She snatches the revolver from the semi-conscious Brooks' belt, grasps him suddenly and gives him the choice of fleeing with her into the mountains then and there, or having "Bunkie" shot on the spot.

ECLIPSE.

LOVE WILL FIND A WAY (Jan. 17).—Count Louis falls in love with Miss Arlette, but his attentions do not meet with the approval of the young lady's aunt, Mrs. Reynold. Louis appeals to his uncle, who is an old friend of Mrs. Reynold, and who assists Louis to properly disguise himself and be engaged as tutor in the Reynold household. One day the identity of the young Count is discovered by Mrs. Reynold, and she immediately concludes that it is for love of herself that he is with them. The Count is asked for an explanation. Finding that her dream is untrue, the older lady, although grieved at first, soon gives her blessing to the happy young pair.

A WOMAN'S WRATH (Jan. 24).—Jane is engaged to Roland, a courtier, but she is also admired by the King, who commands Benvenuto Cellini, the artist, to make a statuette of her. At this the jealous Duchess of Etampes is so enraged that she commands Roland to kill Jane. Roland pretends that he will obey, but secretly warns his fiancée, telling her to feign death, and all will be well.

The two lovers carry out the deception perfectly and the jealous woman believes that her wicked purpose is effected. Later the Duchess becomes repentant and confesses her guilt to the King. Explanations follow, however, and all are forgiven.

KITTY IN DREAMLAND (Jan. 31).—Kitty falls asleep in her chair and is soon in the land of dreams. There she meets many strange people who entertain her with many pranks and surprises. Later, a large company of the fairies appear and perform a ballet.

EARL'S COURT, LONDON (Jan. 31).—A visit to Earl's Court, a London amusement park, showing the giant coaster, crazy bridge, joy wheel, cake walk, flying machine, and other similar diversions.

VITAGRAPH.

WHERE THE MONEY WENT (Jan. 29).—Fred Hart, a young business man, unknown to his wife, draws their savings from the bank with the purpose of buying a home as a birthday surprise for his wife. He finds a real estate agent who has just the kind of a home he is looking for. He has to visit the agent's home during the course of his business transactions, he becomes well acquainted with the agent's family. The real estate man, a camera fiend, suggests to Fred his taking a picture of him and his family. Fred is agreeable and the agent gives him a copy of the picture. Fred puts it in his pocket and returns home to his wife. Mrs. Hart finds the picture of Fred and the agent's wife and baby in his pocket. She learns that he has drawn their savings from the bank and at once her suspicions are aroused. She follows him to the real estate agent's house, which he enters. He comes out of the house just as she is hurrying away. He runs after her and invites her to look at the house. She refuses. He produces the deed, made out in her name, and hands it to her. She apologizes for being so cruel and unjust to him.

INDIAN ROMEO AND JULIET (Jan. 30).—Oniatare, a young brave of the tribe of the Hurons, and Kowa, a chief of the Mohicans, are in love with Ethona, or "The River Flower," an Indian Princess. The Hurons and the Mohicans are sworn enemies. The young brave and "The River Flower" meet from time to time. Kowa notices this and in plaintive song would lure the fair Ethona to him. But it is of no avail. The Great Medicine Man of the Mohicans prescribes rest and a sleeping potion, which she takes and falls into a deep sleep. Both Oniatare and Kowa meet at her uncovered pyre. They fight a duel unto the death. Oniatare slays the older man, and then plunges the dagger deep into his own breast, dropping lifeless. The falling of his body across hers arouses her from her sleep and she awakens to behold his self-sacrifice, a still stronger evidence of his love for her. Seizing the blood-stained dagger from his breast, she thrusts it into the heart which goes out to his.

A TIMELY RESCUE (Jan. 31).—Kenneth Marsdon falsifies the books of his employer, James Ferris. The discrepancy is discovered. Marsdon accuses John Blackburn, his fellow clerk and rival for the hand of Ruth Ferris. John is discharged and immediately enlists in the English Army. Shortly after this, Blackburn shows his real character. He drinks and becomes insolent to Mr. Ferris, who is obliged to discharge him. A friend persuades him to join the army and he goes in the same regiment with Blackburn to South Africa in the Boer War. Blackburn is mortally wounded and left to die upon the battle field. Kenneth hears that he is among the missing. His conscience asserts itself and he hastens to the rescue of the man whom he has so grossly betrayed. In the rescue of Blackburn, Marsdon has been fatally wounded. On his death bed he makes a confession of his perfidy.

After the war Blackburn returns to England and delivers Marsdon's confession to Ferris. He is greatly shocked by the villainy of the man whom he had trusted. He acknowledges his mistake and re-employs the wronged man. Ruth, who is present, rushes to the arms of her sweetheart.

THE FIRST VIOLIN (Feb. 2).—Old Von Shultz, the first violin, finds as he grows older a longing for companionship. Hurrying from the theater the old musician finds little Helen sleeping on the steps of the stage door. He picks her up and takes her to his comfortably furnished home. The old man even grows childish, he is so pleased with the little tot's presence and he gives her the love with which his heart abounds. The next day he learns from the morning papers that Helen, mother and father were lost in a fire. He spends many happy hours with her, playing with her toys. He takes her to rehearsals with him, where she is the pet of the musicians. One year later Helen shows an aptness for the stage. This delights the old musician and the child grows nearer and dearer to his heart. A sad blow, however, comes to him when the Children's Society take the little girl away from him and once more he finds himself a lonely old man. Helen is taken from the Children's Society by a family who make her life one of drudgery. In later years, however, she is fortunate enough to come in contact with those who assist her to a place upon the stage, where she gains fame and fortune. The old violinist has lost his position. Crossing one of the streets, he is run down by a passing automobile, which is occupied by Helen and her maid. She assists the old musician into her car and Helen takes him home with her, where she learns, while she is playing a familiar air on her violin, their relationship.

A PROBLEM IN REDUCTION (Feb. 3).—Mrs. Smartly thinks she is too fleshy and decides to take a course of treatment. She consults her maid, who recommends a beauty doctor, and the doctor in return recommends a course of exercises and appliances. She follows it regularly, but she still grows fatter and fatter until, disgusted, she gives up these fads and fancies and goes back to a normal state of existence. When her husband catches her in the kitchen, eating as if she were famished, he gives vent to his amusement, but commends her with consoling congratulations on her sensible move.

CINES.

BRUTUS (Jan. 20).—Believing that Cæsar is becoming too powerful in the state, Brutus and others conspire to take his life. The next day, when all are assembled in the senate chamber, the conspirators accomplish their fatal purpose. Mark Antony, a friend of Cæsar, swears to avenge the murder and at the funeral delivers an impassioned speech which arouses the Roman people do great fury.

Brutus is forced to flee from Rome, but soon collects his followers, to oppose the forces of Antony. The two armies meet at the battle of Philippi in which Brutus is defeated and is forced again to seek safety in flight. When at the point of being overtaken, he hurls himself upon the sword of a friend and thus died "the noblest Roman of them all."

THE BRAVE DESERVE THE FAIR (Jan. 23).—A retired army captain has an only daughter, Mary. He loves her dearly and swears that she shall marry a soldier. Tom loves Mary(but is not a soldier and is therefore scorned by the stern old parent. Determined to make a name for himself, Tom enlists in a regiment and goes to the wars. There he greatly distinguishes himself by wresting the regimental colors from the enemy in the heat of combat. Wounded and exhausted, he then struggles back to camp, where he is welcomed with an ovation. Later, he is ordered home, where he receives a still greater reward for his bravery.

ARTISTIC VENICE (Jan. 23).—Venice, one of the most remarkable cities in the history of the world, is always very interesting to tourists on account of its famous canals, beautiful cathedrals and palaces, and many art treasures of all kinds.

JENKINS STOPS EVERYTHING (Jan. 30).—Jenkins reads an old book in which he learns that when the sun stands still, everything stops. Drowsiness steals over him, and he falls asleep, thinking of what he has been reading. He dreams that he is possessed of the power to stop everything, and in his vision he sees himself causing the waves to stand still, acrobats to become transfixed, and traffic to be held up. Waking, he decides to put his power to the test. What follows is most amusing, but Jenkins fails to stop anything but his career.

JENKINS AT THE CIRCUS (Feb. 3).—Jenkins is a real acrobat and when he goes to the circus he certainly proves that fact. Some distinctly clever circus turns are introduced which are very interesting and add considerably to the attractiveness of the subject.

LUBIN.

THE POOR RELATION (Jan. 24).—Winnie is made to wait upon her step-mother and half sister until worn out. An artist friend named John is about to paint a picture of his future wife for exhibition at the salon. Mabel, the half sister, is anxious to pose as the model and her mother encouraged the idea. A party takes place and cousin John and Hal are there. Winnie is not permitted to join in the enjoyment, but sits in the hall to wait upon the guests. Cousin John discovers her and is struck by her forlorn appearance. Next day John is trying to make a sketch of Mabel for his picture, but she does not seem to be his ideal. Winnie must be his model. A few days later John goes to Winnie's house and finds her working. He takes her in his automobile and drives to the studio. There he finds his swell friends, and Mabel, in a fever of expectation to see the picture, supposes it to be of herself. The picture is covered with a velvet curtain, which on being drawn aside, discloses a beautiful painting of Winnie.

LOVE VS. STRATEGY (Jan. 31).—Will Randall, a confidential clerk in the office of the Monarch Construction Company, is in love with the president's daughter, Dorothy, who favors him in preference to another suitor named Jules Spencer, who also is a clerk employed by the McConnell Construction Company. The C. D. & O. R. R. Co. has advertised for estimates on the construction of a trestle. The day before the bids are to be offered to the R. R. Co., Spencer engages the services of two tramps to abduct Randall and keep him a prisoner until after the given date. The tramps receive a part of the money and waylay Randall. They send a letter for the balance. Spencer receives the letter and rushes to the young lady. In lighting a cigar he drops the note. Dorothy unobserved picks it up and goes to release her sweetheart. The railroad directors have just received the McConnell bid when Randall with the Monarch offer appears, which is accepted.

A PHYSICIAN'S HONOR (Feb. 1).—Dr. Henry Cole, who is to attend a social function, has just left his office when Jim Jones, a laborer, calls and implores that the doctor hasten to attend to his child. The doctor's butler tells Jones that the call is impossible as he is on the way to his fiancée's house. Jim begs for the address and the butler finally gives it. The laborer forces his way into the mansion and pleads for aid. The doctor informs Emily that the appointment must be broken. Miss Ives is furious, and throws her engagement ring at the doctor's feet. Cole hastens from the house and rushes to his work. He, however, left the address on the table and after he has gone the young lady returns to the room, repentant, and picks up the engagement ring and espies the address of the Jones family. Hastily dressing herself, she resolves to follow the doctor, arriving at the poor attic she, unobserved, watches the doctor ministering to the sick child. Then she presses a roll of money into Jim's hand. The child passes the danger stage and Cole returns to his home, to find his sweetheart waiting for him. Emily begs to be forgiven for her petulance and the engagement is renewed.

THE IMPOSTOR (Feb. 3).—Lord Crowley, an English nobleman, is advised that a wealthy uncle has died, leaving him a fortune, provided he will marry Rose Conway. His lordship decides to comply with the terms of the will and, accordingly, starts for America. On the ship he meets George West, an adventurer, who represents himself to be a man of affairs. West gains the confidence of Lord Crowley. The young nobleman tells him of the object of his trip. Arrived in New York, they both go to the same hotel and engage adjoining rooms. During the night West attempts to rob Lord Crowley. The Lord awakes and holds West up with a revolver. While 'phoning for help Lord Crowley for a moment allows his attention to wander from West. West sees the oportunity and throws a vase across the room, striking Lord Crowley on the head. The blow causes Lord Crowley's mind to become a blank. When the police come West represents himself to be Lord Crowley and points to the real Lord as a thief. Lord Crowley is thrown into prison. West goes to the Conways and is welcomed as "Your Lordship." Preparations go forward for a grand wedding. But the real Lord Crowley regains his reason, convinces his jailers of his identity and in the midst of a grand reception in honor of the supposed Lord the imposter is confronted by his victim, taken to prison, and the young nobleman comes into his own again.

EDISON.

THE JEWELS (Jan. 30).—John Taylor is suffering from a nervous breakdown. In order to procure proper food for her husband, Hilda Taylor is obliged first to part with her effects and furniture. Hilda succeeds in obtaining a position with a prominent theatrical star where she comes in contact with untold wealth.

She arrives home, only to find her husband in high fever brought on by a letter from the real estate agents demanding settlement of their overdue rent. In order to calm him she tells him of her mistress and all the jewels. Taylor listens and goes to sleep. The letter preys upon his mind and before him appear all the jewels his wife had described. He tries to grasp them, but they elude him and in his aberration he seizes his hat and coat and makes his way to the actress' apartment, where he finds the case of jewels. Grasping two handfuls, he is about to escape when he hears the key in the door and hides behind the portieres. Recognizing his wife's voice he is brought to his senses. He attempts to return the jewels when he is discovered by the actress. The shriek brings Hilda, who recognizes her husband. Hilda explains his condition to the actress who helps her take him home. Upon seeing the desolate appearance of the little home, she gives them enough money to tide them over their trouble.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTERS (Jan. 31).—Two daughters have become so accustomed to being waited on by their foolish mother that they take things easy. The time comes when mother, having worked day and night, is obliged to go to bed. The girls are brought face to face with the problem of cooking dinner. Getting a cook book they start in with a will, and are interrupted by Will and John. Dinner is forgotten and the boys are escorted to the sick room. Father comes home and finds the dinner burnt. He invites the boys to dinner. They accept, but are soon disgusted when they are confronted with the meal.

On mother's first day in the kitchen she is surprised by two penitents, who insist upon being taught cooking. Father catches them at it and meeting the boys down town shortly afterward, drags them home to dinner. The boys are so elated that they send father and mother to the theater while they help the girls clear the table and wash the dishes.

HIS SECRETARY (Feb. 2).—The secretary is one of those girls who has had to face the struggles of life.

One night she comes home and after counting over her salary, turns over a certain amount to settle the meat bill.

Her brother starts out with good intention, but ere he reaches his destination, he meets one of his friends and is persuaded to play a game of pool in which the boy loses his sister's money. He is ashamed to face those at home and steals in very late at night, thus evading an explanation. In the morning, however, he calls at the office where his sister is employed, determined to make a clean breast of it all. Here he is tempted by the sight of a twenty-dollar bill on the table and is caught in the act of stealing it by his sister who in turn is discovered by the man who loves her and rather than accuse her brother, she takes the guilt upon her own shoulders and is discharged. The boy's manhood is awakened and he confesses all which clears up everything.

NIAGARA FALLS (Feb. 3).—Many views of the falls are shown. The prodigious leap of the great falls carries with it a water power equivalent to four million horsepower.

The beauty and grandeur of the falls, for which they are justly celebrated, are splendidly shown.

LUCKY DOG (Feb. 3).—Mr. E. Z. Mark receives a letter from the Goldrox Mining Company which persuades him to invest his savings on the promise of big profits. To this end he takes his bank book and followed by his faithful dog, Rowdy, goes to the bank and draws out his balance. Here he confides his intentions to his friend, Luke Smith, and during the conversation drops his pocket handkerchief. Walking down the street he misses it and is about to turn back when Rowdy turns the corner and lays the handkerchief at his feet. In front of the offices of the Mining Company he chats with Deacon Hardflint and in drawing out his handkerchief drops his wallet and then enters the building. Rowdy waits for his master to return for it, but seeing a stranger about to pick it up, grabs it and makes off down the street. The proprietors of the Goldrox Company are ready to skip when Mark enters and tells them his intention to invest. When, however, he comes to pay for the stock he is dumbfounded at finding his money gone. Bewailing his hard luck he runs out to search for it. Failing to find it he reports his loss to the police and then makes his way homeward, where he breaks the news to his wife. Rowdy in the meantime has evaded the pursuers and buried the wallet in the back yard.

There is much wailing and gnashing of teeth in the Marks' home when suddenly his friend enters and informs him that the Goldrox Company was a fake and that the proprietors have skipped. This is poor consolation to Mark who tells of his loss. They are interrupted by the noisy entrance of the children and Rowdy, when Mrs. Mark, seeing the annoyance they have caused, hustles them out of the room. Rowdy is puzzled at such treatment and resolved to find favor, digs up the wallet and proudly lays it at his master's feet, to his great surprise and joy.

ESSANAY.

A BROTHER'S ERROR (Jan. 30).—Jim Morris, a young farmer, is in love with Rose Stanley, a country girl. On the return of the younger son, Joe, from college an old-fashioned country barn dance is planned and Jim carries invitations to all the neighbors. During the dance Jim becomes unjustly jealous of his brother, who has paid marked attention to Rose. The boys quarrel and Jim refuses to take his girl home. Still brooding over the quarrel with his brother, Jim resolves to get even and when Joe returns he is threatened with a shot gun. Jim realizes what he is about to do, and throwing down the gun, runs out of the house. After Joe sorrowfully retires, the lamp in the sitting room explodes and the house is soon a mass of flames. Jim sees the fire, runs to the house and dashes in. It is the work of a moment to seize his half suffocated brother, drag him to an upper window and lower him down from the porch roof to the onlookers below. Jim, seared with the flames, collapses and is carried to the barn where his sweetheart and brother explain that they have not played him false.

THE GRIP-SNATCHER (Feb. 1).—Jimmie Phelan is loitering about the railroad station of a metropolitan city, ever on the watch for an easy "lift," when an old gentleman hustles by him. Jimmie watches his opportunity and soon makes away with the gentleman's handbag. In his room Jimmie finds that the handbag contains little of value. The next morning Jimmie learns that the handbag belongs to a wealthy physician just returned from Africa where he has obtained two glass tubes full of sleeping sickness germs for experimental purposes in the study of the disease. Jimmie hurries to the doctor's home and explains that he drank the germs. The doctor puts him to bed from which he is released a week later as cured. Jimmie promises that he will live a straight life. It is then that the doctor turns to his colleague, and tearing out the false bottom of the grip, brings out the tubes containing the germs with the explanation that Jimmie drank nothing more than two tubes filled with raw alcohol.

THE HOSPITAL BABY (Feb. 2).—In a ward of St. James' Hospital is a foundling, who, from loss of blood due to starvation, must die unless some one gives the baby a few drops of his blood. James Brown, an interne, volunteers. The operation is made and the little girl's life is saved. A month later the little girl, now well, says goodby to her good friend the interne and goes to live with a wealthy family. Sixteen years later finds Marie's mother, now a widow, in straitened circumstances and Marie volunteers to find work for the support of herself and foster mother. She obtains employment with Dr. Brown, the former interne, now a famous physician, but neither knows the identity of the other. Marie, however, finds opportunity to repay the debt of long ago when she saves the life of her employer, who has been decoyed into a thieves' den. The timely arrival of Marie and the police saved the doctor, who now confesses his love for Marie. The doctor, next day, visits Marie's mother, whom he recognizes as the woman who adopted the hospital baby. He then declares his love for Marie and a month later finds the doctor happy with his bride.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE SCHOOLMISTRESS (Feb. 3).—A new schoolteacher arrives at Snakeville and immediately all the marriageable men of the county come a-courtin'. The affair finally resolves about Jack Heyworth and Broncho Billy, but it is evident that the teacher is partial to Billy. Jack plots to get even and opportunity soon offers. The boys warn the schoolmistress not to go out at night but she tells them she is not afraid and shows them a small revolver which she carries with her. Just for fun the boys plan a hold-up to try the schoolma'am's nerve and Broncho Billy agrees to play the bandit. This is Jack's opportunity and when the hold-up occurs, he, stationed behind a bush, a few feet away, fires at Billy. The wounded man is carried to his shack and the schoolteacher is about to be arrested when she shows the sheriff that her gun had contained nothing but blanks and points out Heyworth as the man who shot Billy. Heyworth is ordered to clear out of the country and when Billy gets well school is closed a week earlier because of teacher's marriage to the hero of Snakeville.

MELIES.

DODGING THE SHERIFF (Feb. 8).—The old uncle's ultimatum was unmistakably plain. He would not settle Bob Trevor's debts unless that heretofore recklessly good natured young man should settle down to peaceful married life with his uncle's ward. Bob, however, was not of the sort to be [illegible] into [illegible] so determined to seek his own fortune in America.

The young Englishman secures a job on a Western ranch, where he meets and courts a pretty little school teacher, having for his rival the local sheriff. In an affray at the saloon a shot is fired and the bartender sinks to the floor, and Bobby fearing that he may be implicated in the shooting, flees with the guilty ones.

Scene from "Dodging the Sheriff" (Melies).

Far off in England, his uncle has died, leaving his entire fortune to Bob. The solicitors and the ward trace him to the West, where a reward of $1,000 is offered for information as to his whereabouts, and the sheriff, his rival, leads the hunt. Bob sees the sign, and fears he is wanted for the shooting. The little school teacher, alone, is able to locate him and reveals the truth. Hers is the reward of $1,000, which she smilingly hands to the sheriff for custody, thus indicating her choice. And Bob—well, he has learned to love the ward.

BIOGRAPH.

A BLOT IN THE 'SCUTCHEON (Jan. 29).—Thorold, Earl Tresham, proud of his ancestral escutcheon, which he claims shows no tarnish, welcomes the proposal of Henry, Earl Mertoun, for his sister Mildred's hand, as it will mean the uniting of two noble houses, he not knowing that Mildred and Henry, who are both very young, ignorant and unguarded, have already met, sinned and now attempt a reparation. He learns from one of his servants that an unknown visitor, who was none other than Henry himself, was seen leaving his sister's chamber, and in a fury of rage sets out to right the wrong as he believes to be the only way.

THE TRANSFORMATION OF MIKE (Feb. 1).—Mike, a gang leader, never before knew what power there was in a good woman's persuasion, and when he met the little girl of the tenement he involuntarily exclaimed, "There's a real girl." At a dance given in the neighborhood, he hunts for her and despite the efforts of her friends to oppose it, she promises to be his girl. The next day, while in the corner saloon, he sees a bill collector with quite an amount of money. He attempts to get this money and is about to succeed when he discovers that the collector is the father of the girl. He now fully realizes how despicable he is, and handing back the money, he goes with a promise to prove himself worthy of her.

A SANE ASYLUM (Jan. 28).—Doctor Duncan, preparing to go abroad, offers his home to his nephew, Phil., with the innuendo that if Phil applies himself to his work and acquires good habits and patients, he can retain the house as his home and office. Phil accepts, takes possession of the house, and sets about with pains to prepare to cure them. But the patients don't come, and his patience is exhausted.

Just when life is beginning to pall with its weary monotony, he meets Dolly Dimples, by profession an actorine. A few days later Dolly's company is stranded. She sends a little message clicking over the wires, with a human heart-throb that the mundane wires could not transcribe, and an invitation comes back for the whole company to make his home their headquarters. They arrive. They have a house-warming that's a little more than warm. When uncle suddenly decides to return home, and sends a wire that he is on the way. It looks like a domestic change, when a happy thought occurs to Phil. He will make patients of them.

The uncle enters the home to find it a sanitarium, and is astonished and delighted at his enterprising nephew's rapid progress in his profession. The little soubrette of the company is not so sick, however, that she cannot captivate the old doctor, and when he announces his engagement to the bewitching invalid, what other precedent does Phil need? Dolly thinks that outside of the fact that he is a doctor, her uncle is only human.

UNDER HER WING (Feb. 4).—Bessie Trenton grieves over the fact that her brother is neglecting the support of his wife and children. At last she determines to obtain a position for him in the office where she is cashier. One day her brother steals some money. The girl notes the missing money, and the disappearance of her brother points to his guilt.

She returns home at once. Her employer returns to the office, sees the open safe, the missing money, and at once suspects the absent cashier as guilty of the theft. He calls at the house, just in time to see her with the money in her hands, which she had been given by her brother, and announces herself as the guilty person.

The detectives find a man's watch fob, just in front of the safe. The clue is followed, and at last the guilt of the brother is fastened upon him. Bessie is liberated, and thenceforth she appoints herself as the breadwinner of her guilty brother's family.

THE KID AND THE SLEUTH (Jan. 29).—Red Gallagher, an "A. D. T." messenger boy, is addicted to reading literature of the yellow-back variety. Shirking his work, he seats homself on a barrel in an alley, pulls out a detective story and reads. He yawns, drops the book, sleeps and dreams.

In his fancy, he is the hero of the detective tale. There is a be-mustached villain with an able accomplice in a handsome termagant of a woman. They are persecuting a young, innocent maiden in an effort to induce her to "sign the papers." She is subjected to all kinds of tortures and is suffering intensely when Red is called in to deliver a message. He scents the conspiracy and puts the gentleman detective wise. The sleuth decides to assist and the pair start out to rescue the young and innocent maiden. The plotting pair discover they are about to be shadowed and they spirit the girl away.

There is a chase with the messenger kid and the detective in hot pursuit. The boy has his trusty revolver and he fires it at intervals, hampering the flight of the demons in human form although several laps in the rear. The chase ends at a sawmill where the tender flesh of the helpless girl is about to be mangled by a huge saw. Red arrives in the nick of time to pull the quivering body off the log. His joy is short-lived for the detective places the beauty in a motor car and carries her off, rewarding Red with a few coins as a surcease for his sorrow.

The boy awakens—to find it all a dream—picks up his book and starts away to deliver a belated message, disappointed and humbled. (Copyrighted, 1912, by the Imp Films Co.)

THE POWER OF CONSCIENCE (Feb. 1).—Eric Masters and his wife are leading the life of society people on a very limited income. Their friend, Vernon Godfrey, who is quite wealthy, is interested in Mrs. Masters, holds a note of Eric's, which he is willing to renew, provided the wife will go away with him. She very nearly consents to do this, when he threatens to ruin her husband, but in the end, love for her husband triumphs, and she remains true to him. At a fashionable ball, one of the guests, Mrs. Leslie, loses a valuable jewel, which is found by Eric. This means a way out of all his difficulties, as the jewel is worth $10,000. He is tempted to retain it, giving his wife all she desires, and repaying his friend. But after deliberation, he returns the jewel, preferring to be honest, and with his repentant wife agree to lead a happier and more economical life in future. (Copyrighted, 1912, by Imp Films Co.)

O'BRIEN'S BUSY DAY (Feb. 3).—Leaving for the office, O'Brien got roughhoused more than once before he landed at his desk. Sending out for refreshments he was deprived of them by a predatory hobo. Going home at night for peace and a quiet smoke, he found all the rooms in his house occupied by his courting daughters and their lovers. Even on the very roof of the building the solace of tobacco is denied him—he is ejected from that position. Finally O'Brien makes for the Contractor's Club only to find that place closed for repairs. (Copyrighted, 1912, by Imp Films Co.)

BROWN MOVES IN TOWN (Feb. 3).—When Brown moved to town an early misfortune befell him in his new home. He accidentally tore his pants by means of a nail that protruded from a packing box. His wardrobe being limited, he sought to borrow another pair of pants from a doctor who lived on the same floor. The doctor was a lady and sent Brown a photograph of herself, thus delicately hinting that she could not comply with Brown's request. However, she lent Brown a kimona, which Brown gallantly wore in public out of gratitude towards his fair benefactress. Now it happened that news of an escaped lunatic had got bruited abroad and Brown in his borrowed kimona was assumed to be the fugitive. His arrest and discomfiture, therefore, logically followed, and he was only removed from his predicament by the intervention of the kindly young lady doctor. Brown was also a doctor and from being partners in love they also became partners in business and the pleasing adventures ended with their joint names being placed outside their dwelling place. CHAMPION.

HOW JACK GOT EVEN WITH BUD (Jan. 31).—Jack Dalton is a most admirable character. When Willie Burton meets with an accident and Jack comes to his aid and takes him to his home, and there meets Clara Burton, we feel that things are as they ought to be, in the coming together of these two. The advent of Bud Ahearn into the lives of these two is a stumbling block to their happiness.

Ahearn tries to force himself on Clara in spite of her womanly protests. Jack Dalton intervenes and protects her. Bud has pals, and altogether, they are a bad lot. They decide to get Jack into their clutches. Unfortunately for him, he plays into the hands of the outlaws. While Willie and he are racing their steeds to try their mettle, Jack is swooped down on by Bud's confederates. Willie, who has seen the capture from a distance, dashes off for assistance.

Jack himself has no idea of submitting so calmly to the machinations of his would-be rival, and maybe it didn't do one's heart good to see how his keen wit and indomitable pluck and bravery wins for him his release, unaided, from the clutches of the now thoroughly disconcerted scoundrel. Meantime, the happy-go-lucky cowpunchers have been informed of Jack's predicament, and with a whoop and a yell they are off for the rescue. That Bud meets his Waterloo goes without saying. Jack now stands higher still in the eyes of Clara. Thus comes to him a crowning triumph, and happiness for them both in the passing of Bud.

WHEN MEN LOVE (Feb. 3).—A gambler on his way across the Yukon trail stops at the Caribou Road House. He meets Bess Lloyd, and falls in love with her. One day he tells Bess of his love. She declares that she cannot marry him, as she is promised to another. Pete Benson, Bess' fiance, arrives from across the trail. Both men show a little coldness toward each other when Bess introduces them. The gambler decides to hit the trail, but he must see Bess before he goes. He calls on her and during their conversation Bess lets fall a remark that she is sorry that the gambler is going away. He misconstrues her meaning and so far forgets himself that he takes her in his arms and kisses her.

On their wedding day, Pete follows the gambler and on the edge of a cliff they have a fight. Pete gets heated and pushes the gambler over the cliff. The gambler is picked up by some trappers and taken to their hut.

Pete, in a nervous state, arrives at the Road House, and is warmly greeted and congratulated. In the meantime, the gambler goes to the Road House and through the window sees the wedding about to take place. Pete sees the gambler's face, and thinking that he sees the vision of him, collapses just as the wedding ceremony is about to take place. He is carried to another room and becomes temporarily insane. Bess learns that the gambler was attacked by Pete and the real cause of Pete's madness. She appreciates the gambler's silence in the matter. When all is over and he is about to cross the trail and out of her life, she expresses her wish for him to stay and eventually marries him.

NORTHERN HEARTS (Feb. 4).—Two young trappers and miners, Sam Benson and Ralph Martin, fall in love with the same girl, Ruth Daniel. Ruth accepts Ralph, which causes a quarrel between the partners which Ruth eventually patches up, and they continue their partnership. After the quarrel has been patched up, they leave on a hunting expedition with their dog teams. They become separated during a blizzard and Sam is killed by a party of bandits that infest the region. The story that Ralph tells of bandits having killed Sam is not believed by the miners and Ralph is accused of his death, witnesses swearing that they heard the quarrel between the two. Ruth, however, is a staunch believer in her lover's innocence, and at pistol point holds back a crowd of miners who have come to take Ralph, until he makes his escape. Ruth, slightly injured, is assisted to her home by an officer of the Canadian Mounted Police, who has been sent in search of the fugitive; he learns from her that the man he is hunting is her lover.

Ralph having escaped to the hills, starts in his search for the bandits in order to vindicate himself. He meets them and in a running battle across snow-covered mountains, he is driven back to the town and seeks shelter in the home of his sweetheart. A posse of citizens hearing the firing, rush out and upon discovering that a gang of bandits are in town, give battle and drive them out, leaving their dead and wounded in the street. Among the wounded is one who confesses that his band killed Sam, thus vindicating Ralph and making two young people happy.

A MATINEE MIX-UP (Jan. 22).—Mrs. Carson borrows a novel from a girl friend. Miss Ware, who loans the book, has just received a note from her sweetheart, Jack Raymond, making an appointment with her friend to attend the matinee that afternoon, and she has slipped the note into the book.

Just as Mrs. Carson begins to read, her friend, Mrs. Gadd, arrives with matinee tickets. Mrs. Carson accepts and in her hurry the note drops out of the book unnoticed. In the meantime Carson comes home and finding the note on the floor, rushes out swearing vengeance. Just as he is about to board a car, he notices his wife in an auto with Jack who chanced to meet Mrs. Carson leaving the theater. He at once goes to his lawyer, who happens to be Mr. Ware, the father of Jack's sweetheart. Hastening home Mr. Ware denounces Jack as his prospective son-in-law. Explanations follow and everything is cleared up, but for Mr. Carson, who is subjected to all sorts of admonitions from his wife.

CUPID AND THE RANCHMAN (Jan. 24).—Bob Stanley is engaged to the ranchman's daughter, Amy Daniels. Bob has a horse which every now and then balks. John Daniels, the ranchman, admires the horse, and not knowing that he balks, buys him from Bob. The old man starts out with the horse next day, but during a rain storm the horse refuses to go further. He returns to the ranch on foot, thoroughly soaked and angry clear through, discovers Bob with Amy, orders the young man from the place. Bob goes, but at a loss how to straighten matters out. In the meantime Bob has written to his sister, Julia, asking her to come and put his new bungalow to rights, but not to tell her name to a soul, or disclose the fact that he owns the bungalow, as he wants that to be a grand surprise to Amy. The telegram telling Bob that Julia will arrive that day, comes to Bob's old shack, and Bob returns home too late to meet her train. When he arrives at the railroad station, Julia has already gone to the general store to inquire the way to the new bungalow. John Daniels is there and offers to drive her. They become interested in each other. Daniels drives her to the bungalow, Bob trailing along behind, after he sees how matters are progressing. After bidding Julia goodbye, Daniels is invited to call. He calls several times, and at last dresses up in his best and slips off to propose to Julia. Both his daughter and the cowboys catch him as he is leaving the ranch. He arrives at the bungalow, proposes to Julia—and she advises him that he will have to ask her brother. Bob and Amy are brought in. Daniels is forced to give his consent in order to obtain Bob's.

MUTT AND JEFF FALL IN LOVE (Jan. 27).—Jeff goes to meet a certain charming damsel. She leads him into a swell restaurant. With his full consent she takes his diamond ring and all his available cash. Then suddenly remembers that she is to meet a lady friend, and Jeff with her photopraph in his possession, slinks back home.

Mutt, too, has a date. The lady—the same lady—is already there awaiting him. Mutt is led to the same restaurant and through the same ordeal. In return he gets her photo, a warm hand-shake and au revoir. Mutt returns home and finds Jeff having a love day dream. The fact that they suffer from the same childish malady causes them to confide to each other and—Ye Gods!—the photographs show how badly they have been duped. They must be revenged! A letter is dashed off to the false one. She accepts the invitation to dine at a

THE BURDEN OF SHAME (Jan. 17).—Elvira and Ernest are lovers, and are seen in happy courtship. Ernest's pleading for Elvira's hand is refused by her father, and the young couple elope in a motor. Coming around a curve at tremendous speed the car is hurled against a tree and the occupants catapulted into the road. Ernest is instantly killed. Elvira is nursed by country folk, but according to the eyes of her country her elopement has brought disgrace upon her, and she destroys herself. The scene ends with the unhappy parents viewing the earthly remains of their loved child, whose death they unwittingly caused by their ambitions for a wealthy son-in-law.

TWEEDLEDUM IN FINANCIAL DISTRESS (Jan. 17).—A comedy in which a college student resorts to various schemes to bolster up his finances. He comes to grief, however, when he writes a letter to his country uncle and the farmer comes to town unexpectedly.

MAN'S BEST FRIEND (Jan. 30).—Old Silas Judson, stricken blind by fever and compelled through poverty to beg in the streets is cared for by a fatherless granddaughter who looks after their cheerless home while the old man goes into the street each day accompanied by his Pomeranian, a dog of unusual intelligence.

"Gyp" is subsequently stolen and falls into the hands of the daughter of a wealthy merchant. He is later sent to "The Home for Friendless Animals" when the merchant's daughter explains about the purchase. On the way, "Gyp" escapes and his animal instinct carries him back to his blind master who has feebly started for home alone.

But, in crossing a street, the old man is struck by a passing car and seriously injured. The dog, realizing his master's condition, runs to the house and barks frantically at the door, whereupon the granddaughter follows him back to the scene of the accident.

In the meantime, the wealthy merchant, riding by in his auto, comes upon the old man and, entreated by his daughter, takes him to their home where he recovers sufficiently to be taken to his own little cottage after a short time.

The blind man's injury proved fatal, however, and they buried him in a corner of the public burying ground where little "Gyp" mourned his loss with the now friendless girl.

Fortunately the merchant's daughter learns of their pitiable condition and the two little waifs are given a good home, but "Gyp" and the little girl may be seen making regular visits to the grave of their dead friend where they place flowers and mourn in sacred silence.

WILLY PLAYS TRUANT (Feb. 1).—Young Willy is a terrible boy. His nurse can hardly get him to dress. It is harder still to get him to school. Here his exuberance causes disorder in class. He fights with his classmates, turns over desks and benches and runs away, along the road, where he continues his mischievous actions. The boys follow. To escape from them, Willy hides in a large laundry basket. The laundress, not knowing, carries it away and empties the contents into a tub in which she pours water. Willy finds the joke less amusing and gets out of the tub quickly, pulling an obstinate bed sheet behind him. He returns to his own home and hides under the table in shame.

But he left a trail behind which was discovered by his father who gives him a whipping.

EDUCATION OF THE BLIND (Feb. 1).—We show how they learn to read, write and count according to their methods. Also their curious lessons in music, and finally a series of tableaux which instruct in the various trades, thanks to which the afflicted ones are enabled to gain their livelihood.

MAKING PAPER FROM WOOD (Jan. 26).—There are few of us who realize the tremendous powers and organizations at work to produce even the commonest materials which go to render our modern lives so easy. Our newspapers, for instance, which we so casually peruse and as lightly cast aside, mean little to us beyond the penny's worth of news they roughly represent. But in this remarable film we are initiated into the strange and intricate processes which have to be undergone before even the mere paper of our daily news sheets is ready for use. It is impossible to describe in detail the many and varied stages of manufacture which are here all faithfully depicted; it is sufficient to say that all who have seen this film will find it a subject of the most absorbing interest.

AMERICAN.

LOVE AND LEMONS (Jan. 29).—Having purchased a lemon grove in California, Clara Merton arrives to take possession. The young foreman shows her about the grove. He shows her the care exercised by the employees to preserve the trees, always cutting, never plucking the lemons from the trees and the careful spraying of the trees to kill insects.

Clara visits the packing house to arrange for the sale of her lemons and is tagen through the various departments of the establishment.

Time goes on and the foreman learns to love the pretty owner of the lemon grove and proposes marriage. But she loves her independence and refuses his offer and then discharges him from her employ. He seeks work at the packing house and is employed by the general manager in the sorting department. At the lemon grove the new foreman is persistently urging the pretty owner to become his wife. Finding that his plea is unavailing he takes her measuring rings and cuts a section from each, reducing the size. Soon complaints come from the packing house that her lemons are too small and at last the proprietor refuses to buy any more of her undersized fruit. The old foreman learns in the packing house of her predicament and asking for a day off visits her grove to investigate the cause. He finds the section cut from her rings by the new foreman and at once understands. He hurries to the owner and shows her what he has discovered. The new foreman comes up and learning that his ruse is discovered, decides to put distance between himself and the ranch before the old foreman can give him the bouncing he deserves. And the little ranch owner finds that the protecting love of her old foreman is vastly superior to her previous independence.

SOLAX.

THE LITTLE SOLDIER (Jan. 24).—Little Arthur's mother buys him a picture book showing soldiers in all their resplendent colors. Arthur decides that an existence without a uniform is like a meal without dessert. His father gets him a uniform. The "little soldier" dreams of battles and conquering armies.

One night his dreams are disturbed. An unscrupulous maid connives with her sweetheart, a burglar. They both plan to rob the house. Arthur's mother hears some noise downstairs. She goes down to investigate and finds the burglars at work. Arthur, in bed, hears his mother's screams. He takes his tin sword, and in his pajamas, rushes down and challenges the burglar. The thief thinks it's a great joke. In the meantime Arthur's father arrives and puts the thief out of business, but a stray bullet hits the "little soldier." He is wounded, but not fatally.

MEMORIES OF '49 (Jan. 26).—A hardy old frontiersman, sitting in front of his cabin roasting a leg of lamb, dozes off and dreams of his struggles on the prairies. He lives over again the time when his father's pioneer wagon was attacked by Indians, of the time when nearly all of his relations were massacred and of his escape and rescue.

His whole career looms up before him and passes on in review. His boyhood on the plains, the struggles of an early manhood, his tender love affair, his marriage, his growing family and their gradual demise and finally the mists of this nightmare begin to fade away and then we see the hardy old frontiersman "get a hustle on" and prepare a meal for his lonely self and big, faithful dog.

FROZEN ON LOVE'S TRAIL (Jan. 28.)—A white girl, living with her father at the barracks near an Indian reservation, is very kind to a half-breed Indian. He falls in love with her but she does not encourage him. However, she one day is about to accept a trinket from him, when one of the soldiers, who is also in love with her, intimates something that does not sound nice to a good girl's ears. She throws the trinket at his face and runs off mortified.
